

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

THE SOUTHWESTERN REPORTER.

VOLUME 118.

STEWART v. JONES et al.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 1.
March 31, 1909. Rehearing Denied April

1. PARTITION (§ 55*)—EQUITABLE PARTITION.

A suit was brought by the purchaser of the life interest of a widow in a homestead under her husband's will, and the interests of certain of the remaindermen therein, which homestead under the will was to be sold by the executor after the widow's death, which had not yet occurred, by a bill alleging that the power of sale was given to the executor in his official capacity, and, as he had been discharged, he could not make the sale, and that plaintiff elected to take in land the interests purchased from the remaindermen so far as they could be lawfully set off to him, and praying that the remainderman whose interests he had not purchased be held to possess the land in trust for plaintiff and others, and that she be required to convey to him the undivided portion which he had purchased, subject to the life estate, and that it be set off to him in severalty, if possible, without prejudice to the rights of defendants, and, if not, that the land be ordered sold and plaintiff be given the proceeds of the life estate and his share of the remainder interest. Held, that the suit was in effect a proceeding for equitable partition, and not a simple suit in equity to execute and determine a trust and put the beneficiaries in possession of their respective interests in the corpus of the trust estate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partition, Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

2. PARTITION (§ 21*)—EQUITABLE—APPLICABILITY OF STATUTES GOVERNING PARTITION.

Under the maxim that equity follows the law, courts will, in proceedings for equitable partition, follow the statute, and hence a proceeding for equitable partition of land devised under a will is governed by Rev. St. 1899, § 4383 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2415), providing that no partition or sale of lands devised by a will shall be made under the article (partition) contrary to the intention of the testator, expressed in the will, and section 4650 (page 2518), providing that all courts and others concerned in the execution of wills shall have due regard to the directions of the will and the intent of the testator.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partition, Cent. Dig. § 72; Dec. Dig. § 21.*]

3. WILLS (§ 440*)—CONSTRUCTION—INTENTION OF TESTATOR.

In construing a will, the intention of the testator is to be ascertained from the four corners of the will, both at common law and under Rev. St. 1899, § 4650 (Ann. St. 1906, p.

2518) providing that all courts and others concerned in the execution of wills shall have due regard to the directions of the will and the intent of the testator.

4. WILLS (§ 614*)—CONSTRUCTION—SALE OF HOMESTEAD AFTER LIFE ESTATE.

(Where a testator, after devising a homestead to his wife for her life, directed that at her death the executor should sell it, it could not be said that his sole object was to provide a house for his widow, so that, where she parted with her interest therein during her lifetime in consideration of an annuity, the homestead could not be sold before her death for the benefit of the purchaser, but the testator's intent as expressed in the will should be enforced.)

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 614.*]

5. INJUNCTION (§ 28*)—SUITS FOR CONSTRUCTION—ENJOINING FURTHER SUITS.

Where the interpretation of a will is involved in difficulty, counsel are allowed latitude in hypotheses and theories, and persons having interests thereunder may litigate in regard to them on different hypotheses so long as they act in good faith, and the fact that they have brought three suits respecting the will would not justify an injunction restraining further suits.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. § 81; Dec. Dig. § 28.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Boone County;
Alex. H. Waller, Judge.

Bill by John A. Stewart against A. H. Jones and others. From the decree, certain defendants appeal. Reversed, and bill ordered dismissed.

E. W. Hinton, for appellants. D. D. Duggins and Webster Gordon, for appellee.

LAMM, J. From a decree, executing and terminating an alleged trust under a will determining the interests of certain parties in the corpus of the alleged trust estate (consisting of a homestead tract), finding that the land could not be divided and allotted in kind equitably, and decreeing a sale by a special commissioner and a division of the proceeds, certain defendants appeal.

There is little or no dispute on the facts. Questions made here arise on the law applicable to those facts.

Attending to the case made, it is this:

In 1891 Patrick Henry Jones died, testate, a resident of Boone county, seised of a considerable estate in lands and chattels, leaving a widow (a second wife), and one daughter (Cora N.) by a former marriage, surviving him. Cora intermarried with her codefendant Ed R. Tillery, and one child was born of this marriage after Patrick's death, to wit, the defendant Mary, now an infant. The will of Patrick nominated his brother, Aquilla H. Jones, as executor, who qualified and took on himself the burden of administration. He is impleaded as a defendant under the name of A. H. Jones. Patrick left surviving him certain nieces and nephews, the children of two married sisters, Mrs. Carson and Mrs. Murray. As presently seen, the Murray children have a contingent, the Carson children had a vested, interest in Patrick's homestead. The Murrays are made defendants, but we cannot make out that they answered or took any part in the trial, nor do they prosecute an appeal.

Patrick's will was probated in common form in 1891 in the probate court of Boone county. No contest of it was ever made. After providing, in item 1, that he desired to be buried by the side of his first wife and children at Mount Zion Church, in Boone county, item 2 reads: "I devise to my beloved wife, Eliza K. Jones, the homestead upon which I now live consisting of 52⁰⁰/₁₀₀ acres, and being situated immediately west of the corporate limits of the town of Columbia, Missouri, to have and to hold the same during her natural life. This devise is in lieu of and in absolute bar and discharge of her right of dower in all my real estate."

After providing in item 3 that $2,000 be paid Eliza by his executor, and that said sum and certain specific chattels are bequeathed to her in absolute bar and discharge of her dower in his personal property, item 4 reads: "I direct that at the death of my said widow, Eliza K. Jones, my executor shall sell the aforesaid homestead at public vendue, at the court house door in the said town of Columbia, after giving such notice of said sale as the law requires in sales of real estate under deeds of trust with power of sale, and after paying the expenses of sale, the proceeds thereof shall be divided equally per capita between my daughter, Mrs. Cora N. Tillery and the children of my sister, Mrs. Louisa Carson. In the event that my said daughter shall have died prior to the distribution of the proceeds of said sale, then her share therein shall descend to her bodily heirs, if any survive her, and if she shall have died without bodily heirs surviving her, then her aforesaid share shall descend and be equally divided between the children of my sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Murray."

After bequeathing to the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church South at Columbia $1,000 in trust for the benefit of superannuated ministers and their widows and orphans within the jurisdiction of the conference to which the Columbia Church belonged at the time, and directing it to be loaned and the income used (under certain safeguards) as indicated, item 6 reads: "I devise and bequeath to my beloved daughter, Mrs. Cora N. Tillery, all the residue of my estate, real, personal and mixed, to have and to hold the same absolutely in fee simple."

The widow elected to take under the will, and in 1899, the executor having made final settlement of his accounts, distribution and his discharge were ordered by the probate court.

Patrick's widow continued to reside on the homestead until, finally, contracting a second marriage with D. R. Vivion, she moved away, and for several years the premises were rented out at an annual rental of $400.

On March 13, 1905, Mrs. Vivion quitclaimed her interest in the homestead to the plaintiff, Stewart, in consideration of $5 and "other considerations"—the "other considerations" being his agreement to pay her an annuity of $360. A few days before her deed, Stewart, who is a real estate dealer, acquired the interests of the Carson children under item 4 of the will. Their deed by apt narrations refers to the will, and recites that grantors sell their interests in the homestead, describing it, to Stewart for $5,000 paid them by him. It not only grants, bargains, and sells their right, title, and interest to the described homestead, but has this clause: "And for said consideration we do further assign, transfer and set over unto the said John A. Stewart all our interest in and to the proceeds of said real estate, in the event of a sale thereof by the executor or under the provisions of said will and do authorize and empower him to have, demand, collect and receive and receipt for all the proceeds of said real estate in the event of such sale, that may be due us or either of us, so that said John A. Stewart shall by these presents be invested with any title that we may have to said real estate and be substituted to all our right, title and interest in the proceeds of the sale of the said real estate in the event the same shall be sold under the terms of said will."

It stands conceded that there are five of the Carson children. Under the per capita clause in the will, these children would share in the proceeds with Cora in the proportion of five to one. Stewart put the Vivion deed on record on May 31, 1905, and the Carson deed shortly before. We infer these several deeds were part and parcel of the same transaction. He owns land adjacent to the homestead, and is exploiting his holdings on the markets as residence property, laid out in lots and blocks, streets and alleys, and is selling to purchasers.

At the death of Patrick, his homestead was worth from eight to nine or ten thousand dollars. At the time of the trial, the residence parts of Columbia having shoved on west, the homestead is now partly in the city limits and is about to be taken in wholly, and has increased in value to $20,000 or upward. Some real estate experts gave it as their opinion at the trial that certain favored parts of it were worth so much as $1,000 per acre, and that certain other parts were depreciated by a ravine and the proximity of a cemetery. These gentlemen also hazarded an opinion that the land was not susceptible of division in kind without serious detriment to the parties in interest, and that the present real estate market at Columbia bid fair to result in a good sale if the tract was put on the block at public vendue.

Going back a little before her sale to Stewart, Mrs. Vivion commenced a suit in the Boone circuit court against the executor of Patrick's will and the Tillerys, the Murrays, and the Carson children. Her petition is in two counts. By the first she pleads the terms of Patrick's will, that she had accepted it, and had intermarried with Vivion. Her petition then puts her counsel's construction on the meaning of the will, viz.: That testator intended thereby to give her a life estate in the homestead, and to devise the remainder over in two parts, one to the Carson children and the other to his daughter, Cora, or (in case of her death) to her daughter, Mary, or (in case of Mary's death) to the Murray children; that there was no child born to Cora at testator's death, but that Mary was born since; that there was doubt in defendants' minds, and in would-be purchasers', as to whether the intent of the will was as alleged by plaintiff, and as to whether the real estate could be sold; wherefore, plaintiff prayed that the will be construed, and that the meaning and legal effect of it be decreed to be as alleged by her. A second count alleges that plaintiff holds a life estate in the homestead, and that defendants own the remainder over in that tract as tenants in common; that the land cannot be partitioned in kind, and a partition and sale is prayed. To the first count, a demurrer was interposed on the grounds that plaintiff had no legal capacity to sue; that the petition did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The second count for partition was demurred to on the ground that it appeared that partition is contrary to the intention of the testator as evidenced by his will. Presently, the demurrer was sustained, and leave was granted to amend. Presently, on the 17th of January, 1905, in vacation, the cause was dismissed by plaintiff, and the costs paid.

Such was the end of the first suit.

On the 5th day of May following, Mr. Stewart, having acquired the interests of the Widow Vivion and the Carson children, commenced a new suit in partition against the same parties, omitting the Carsons. His petition pleaded the terms of the will in hæc verba, but through his learned counsel, Mr. Hinton, he put his own construction on that will, and pleaded its intendment as got at by that construction, viz.: After conventional averments, it is alleged that the homestead was devised to Patrick's widow for her natural life, with remainder over in shares per capita to his daughter, Cora, and the Carson children; that, at the death of the widow, the will provides that the executor should sell the land and divide the proceeds, per capita, between Cora and the Carson children, but that if Cora die prior to the distribution, then her share descended to the heirs of her body surviving her, and, in default of surviving heirs, then to the Murray children. After other conventional allegations, the petition avers that the five Carsons took an undivided interest of one-sixth each as tenants in common in remainder, and that Cora was tenant in common in remainder, owning an undivided one-sixth interest for her life, with remainder over to the heirs of her body, and, in default of such heirs surviving, then to the Murray children. Alleging that plaintiff had acquired the interests of the widow and the Carson children by conveyance, the pleader next averred that plaintiff owned the life estate of the widow and an estate in fee simple in and to the undivided five-sixths of the homestead, and that Cora owned an undivided one-sixth in remainder, subject to the conditions aforesaid; that partition in kind could not be made without great prejudice to the interest of all parties, wherefore partition was prayed, with a sale and a division of the proceeds after paying costs and expenses. Such proceedings were had in the second suit that issue was joined by answers setting up the terms of the will as an insuperable obstacle in the road to partition. Thereupon plaintiff, on June 15, 1905, filed his amended petition, averring, among other things, that the Carson heirs "became the owners at law and in equity of an undivided one-sixth each of said tract of land as tenants in common in remainder," subject to the widow's life estate; that the defendant Cora by the will "took and became the owner in law and at equity of an undivided one-sixth of said tract of land as tenant in common in remainder, though whether for her life only, with contingent remainder to the heirs of her body, or in fee upon condition, the plaintiff is not advised." The prayer of the amended petition was that the court determine the respective interests of the parties and make partition, and that the one-sixth interest of Cora in remainder be assigned and set off to her subject to the life estate of the widow, now held by plaintiff, and, if that could not be done without prejudice, that the land be sold, etc., and "for such other, further, greater, or different relief as the court may see proper, and to equity and good sense may belong." To that petition, defendants answered by refiling their former answers. Thereupon the cause was taken up, evidence heard, and it was submitted, the court taking time to consider. Thereafter, in August, 1905, the submission was set aside and plaintiff dismissed his action.

Such was the end of the second suit.

Thereafter, a third, the present, suit was brought by plaintiff against the Tillerys, Jones, and the Murrays. The petition sets forth that Patrick died seised of the homestead tract, describing it, leaving a will; that his sole and only heir at law was Cora; that he left a widow who married Vivion; that he had five nieces, to wit, the Carson children, naming them; that by his will, duly probated, the defendant A. H. Jones was appointed executor, who qualified, made final settlement and has been discharged, but nevertheless continues to claim some right, interest, or power as such executor in respect to the land, hence he is made a party defendant; that, for the purpose of providing a home for the widow after his death, said Patrick by his will devised the homestead to her for life in lieu of dower; that she accepted the will. Its provisions relating to the sale of the homestead on the death of the widow and the division of the proceeds are next set forth, with the averments that by the residuary clause testator devised and bequeathed the rest and residue of his estate, both real and personal, to Cora, "but did not otherwise devise or dispose of the legal title in remainder" to the homestead tract. That the power of sale given by the will for the benefit of Cora and the Carson children to the executor was given to him as such, strictly in his capacity as executor only, and that, since his discharge by the probate court, he is without further power or authority to make the sale as by will directed; that the homestead tract lies hard by the city of Columbia on the west, and is chiefly valuable for residence property; is susceptible of division in kind into a large number of building lots without any prejudice to the rights of any parties beneficially interested; that plaintiff has acquired the life estate of the widow by deed of conveyance, and has entered into possession; that by another conveyance he has acquired the interests of the Carson children in the land, and, by assignment from them, has become entitled to their respective rights under said will to the proceedings of the sale of said land; that, as grantee and assignee of the aforesaid beneficiaries, he has elected and desires to receive and take in land the aforesaid interests given by the will to the Carson children, so far as they can be lawfully set off to him; that the infant Mary has some interest in Cora's share of the land and in the proceeds; that the Murray children have some contingent interest in Cora's share and in the proceeds of the sale thereof; that Cora objects to any division or sale of said tract of land, and refuses to recognize plaintiff's rights therein. The prayer of the petition follows:

"Wherefore the plaintiff prays the court by its proper decree to declare that the defendant Cora N. Tillery holds the legal title in remainder to said tract of land as heir at law and residuary devisee of the said Patrick H. Jones, deceased, in trust for the benefit of this plaintiff, and for the legal benefit of herself, the defendant Mary Tillery, and the defendants Lee, Erl, and Henry Murray, and that the beneficial interest of plaintiff is five-sixths thereof; and that the defendant Cora N. Tillery be ordered to convey to the plaintiff an undivided five-sixths of said land subject to said life estate, and that the same be set off to plaintiff in severalty if the same can be done without prejudice to the rights of the defendants, and if such division cannot be made, then the court order a sale of said land in fee, and that the life estate of said Eliza K. Vivion, now held by plaintiff, be commuted into money and paid over to him, and that the balance of the proceeds of sale be divided between plaintiff and defendants according to their respective interests, and that if necessary a suitable trustee be appointed for the purposes of such sale; and the plaintiff prays for such other, further, different or greater relief as the nature of the case may require and to equity and good conscience may belong."

To that petition, Jones, executor, answered, admitting some and denying other allegations, averring that he has fully administered testator's estate, "except the sale of the aforesaid lands and the distribution of the net proceeds thereof in accordance with the provisions" of Patrick's last will and testament; that Patrick's widow is still alive, and for that reason the sale and distribution cannot be had now.

The Tillerys, husband and wife, answered, admitting the will, its probate, that Patrick was seised in fee of the homestead tract, and that Mary is their only child. They deny all other averments.

Further answering, they plead specifically the provisions of the will; that their codefendant Jones qualified as executor; that Patrick's widow accepted the will; that the homestead tract, by the terms of the will, was to be sold on the death of the widow on the terms mentioned in the will, and the proceeds divided by the executor as therein set forth; "that by reason of said will, and by reason of the limitations, conditions, and directions of the said testator therein, partition of said real estate cannot be made, and that no sale of said land can be made during" the widow's life, and that said widow is still alive; wherefore, they pray that suit abate.

For further answer, they plead the two former suits for partition and sale of the homestead tract. They allege that in the first suit brought by the widow, the present plaintiff had full knowledge, and was aiding, advising, and counseling the widow in said suit; that the widow, knowing that the real estate could not be partitioned under the provisions of the will, brought her suit for the purpose of vexing and harassing defendants, and of putting them to costs and the expense of hiring attorneys and attending a trial in the circuit court of Boone county (they, the defendants, residing in Saline county). They aver that, having bought the interest of the widow after a demurrer to her petition was sustained and she had dismissed it, the plaintiff straightway instituted a second suit in partition for the purpose of further vexing and harassing them, and afterwards did voluntarily dismiss the same; that the present suit followed hard on the heels of the second, and is the third for partition; that all said suits, including this, were vexatious, and set on foot willfully to harass, annoy, and cause trouble to defendants; that they have no adequate remedy at law to prevent such injury; wherefore they pray an order restraining plaintiff and all claiming through or under him from prosecuting this suit or similar suits for the partition of said land, and for all proper relief.

The minor, Mary, answered through her guardian ad litem, putting plaintiff on his strict proof.

The reply was a general denial of the affirmative averments in the Tillerys' answer.

The facts established at the trial are sufficiently indicated in the foregoing statement. There was no evidence tending to show that plaintiff aided and counseled the widow in her suit for partition and to construe the will, or that he caused such suit to be instituted, or at that time had any present or prospective interest in the subject-matter of the litigation, or that he sued groundlessly for the very purpose of harassing defendants and putting them to trouble and outlay.

The decree finds the facts, seriatim, as alleged in the petition to be true, and, inter alia, that the legal title in remainder in the homestead tract descended to and vested in Cora as the sole heir at law of Patrick in trust for the beneficiaries of said power of sale donated to Jones, executor, in the proportion of an undivided five-sixths thereof each for the benefit of the Carson children, naming them, and the remaining one-sixth for her own benefit, and contingently for the benefit of the heirs of her body and the Murray children, naming them; that the plaintiff, Stewart, owns the life estate of the widow; that the Carson children have conveyed their interests in the real estate to him, and assigned to him their interests in the proceeds of the sale of the land.

The decree closes as follows:

"And the court doth further find that the power of sale conferred by the will of Patrick H. Jones upon the executor thereof has lapsed by reason of his final settlement and discharge as such executor by the probate court as aforesaid. And that the plaintiff, Stewart, is entitled to have the trust in said tract of land executed and terminated, and to have vested in him the legal title in remainder to an undivided five-sixths of said tract of land. And the court doth further find that said tract of land, by reason of the location, nature, and condition thereof, cannot be divided and allotted in kind to the plaintiff and the defendants without great loss and prejudice to their respective rights and interests, and that said tract of land ought not to be sold subject to the life estate aforesaid of the said Eliza K. Jones, now held by the plaintiff, Stewart, and that the said Eliza K. Jones is now 61 years of age. Wherefore, to the end that the trust in said tract of land may be terminated and executed, it is therefore ordered and decreed by the court as follows:

"(1) That the legal title in remainder to an undivided five-sixths of said above-described tract of land be divested out of the defendant Cora N. Tillery and vested in the plaintiff, John A. Stewart.

"(2) That said above-described tract of land be sold for the purposes set forth in this decree in the same manner and upon the same notice as in case of sales of real estate under execution.

"(3) That upon the approval of such sale, after the payment of all costs in this cause, five-sixths of the proceeds of sale be paid to the plaintiff, John A. Stewart, and that the life estate of the said Eliza K. Jones held by the said Stewart in the remaining sixth be commuted to its present value and paid over to the plaintiff, and the balance thereof be paid to the defendant Cora N. Tillery, and in the event of her death prior to such time, then to the heirs of her body now surviving her, and in default of heirs of the body her surviving, then to the defendants, Lee Murray, Erl Murray, and Henry Murray.

"(4) For the purpose of carrying out the provision of this decree, it is ordered that Fountain Rothwell be and he is hereby appointed the special commissioner of this court, and that before entering upon the discharge of his duties he enter into a bond in the sum of $20,000, with sufficient sureties to be approved by the clerk of this court, conditioned for the faithful discharge of his duties hereunder, and that he report all his proceedings hereunder to the court for approval."

From that decree, after unsuccessful motions for new trial and in arrest were filed in due time, this appeal, as said, is prosecuted.

We had a purpose in elaborating the allegations of the petitions and answers in the series of suits, having a common purpose, culminating in the one at bar. It was to show a gradual growth and evolution in, or shifting of position on, the rights of parties litigant and of the legal principles determinative of those rights. The briefs of learned counsel for respondent, in luminous order, with plith and strength, discuss with ripe scholarship a bundle of abstruse and subtle questions on real estate law, arising at law and in equity. We are beholden to counsel for profit from his research, but such, and only such, of those questions as we deem vital on appeal, will be considered.

1. At the very door of the case lies the question, looming large, whether this is an equitable partition suit (as argued by appellant), or a suit in equity, pure and simple, to execute and determine a trust and to put the beneficiaries in possession of their respective interests in the corpus of the trust estate (as argued by respondent). Attending to it, it will be observed that the word "partition," used in the first suits, is sedulously avoided in this. But the results aimed at by the former suits were aimed at in the present, and (what is more) attained by the decree. To use a huntsman's homely simile, the tracks in all the suits led to the same hole, and that hole a partition. We need bother ourselves but little with the mere words used, for they go but skin-deep. The value of words is to get at the thought. The heart of the thing sought was partition. The thing got was partition. If a hungry child wants bread and butter from its mother and gets it, is the form of the request, whether sign, cry, or some veiled verbal formula, material?

One of the chief cases relied on by plaintiff for the termination and execution of a nonproductive trust (Donaldson v. Allen, 182 Mo. 626, 81 S. W. 1151) was a suit to determine a trust, as here, and having partition as its goal. See, also, Donaldson v. Allen, 213 Mo. 293, 111 S. W. 1128. In the latter case it was held that equitable features are everyday incidents of partition suits, for example (among others), "divesting title, decreeing a trust, or establishing title as a step incident to partition. Garesche v. Levering Inv. Co., 146 Mo. 436, 48 S. W. 653, 46 L. R. A. 232; Donaldson v. Allen, 182 Mo. 626, 81 S. W. 1151; Budde v. Rebenack, 137 Mo. 179, 38 S. W. 910; Rozler v. Griffith, 31 Mo. 171; Dameron v. Jameson, 71 Mo. 97; Holloway v. Holloway, 97 Mo. 628, 11 S. W. 233, 10 Am. St. Rep. 339; Padgett v. Smith, 206 Mo., loc. cit. 314, 103 S. W. 943."

To hold that a suit actually resulting in partition is not a partition suit is to coyly toy with shadow and pass by substance. We hold that, for the application of the law to the facts, the case must be deemed, to all intents and purposes, a proceeding for equitable partition.

2. The next question in logical order is whether the following statute controls in equitable partition, viz.: "No partition or sale of lands, tenements or hereditaments, devised by any last will, shall be made under the provisions of this article, contrary to the intention of the testator, expressed in any such will." Rev. St. 1899, § 4383 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2415).

There is a cognate section in the chapter on "wills," in pari materia, which must be construed with the one just quoted, reading: "All courts and others concerned in the execution of last wills shall have due regard to the directions of the will, and the true intent and meaning of the testator, in all matters brought before them." Rev. St. 1899, § 4650 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2518).

While equity, in a general way, is compassed by the venerable definition of Aristotle, viz., "A correction of the law, where by reason of its universality it is deficient" (Fonblanque, Eq. [Laussat's Ed.] p. 10), yet there is between law and equity such comity that, on the one hand, the law is frequently enlarged and enriched by borrowing equitable principles, and, on the other, the maxim, "Equity follows the law," has play in arriving at just ends in the administration of justice. Speaking to that maxim, Judge Story says (1 Story, Eq. Juris. [13th Ed.] § 64): "It may mean that equity adopts and follows the rules of law in all cases to which those rules in terms may be applicable; or it may mean that equity, in dealing with cases of an equitable nature, adopts and follows the analogies furnished by the rules of law."

In Donaldson v. Allen, 213 Mo. 293, 111 S. W. 1128, we held in judgment the question whether attorney's fees might be allowed to a successful plaintiff and taxed as costs in an equitable partition. It was contended, in that case, that such fees could be allowed, under the strict letter of the statute on Partition, only in partition suits brought under the statute, and not in equitable partitions. The statute (section 4422) limits the allowance of reasonable attorney's fees to those attorneys bringing a suit "under this article," precisely as it is suggested here that section 4383, supra, is limited by its letter to partitions and sales of lands "under the provisions of this article." In holding that such fees could be taxed as costs, we laid stress on the maxim that equity follows the law, and pointed out that it was the doctrine of this court that, in equitable partition, the court will proceed according to the statute. Spitz v. Wells, 18 Mo. 468; Holloway v. Holloway, 97 Mo., loc. cit. 639, 11 S. W. 233, 10 Am. St. Rep. 339.

In Stevens v. De La Vaulx, 166 Mo., loc. cit. 26, 27, 65 S. W. 1003, in speaking of section 4383, supra, and its application to equitable partitions, after pointing out the object of testator in that case, our Brother Valliant said: "He (testator) preferred his own judgment in that matter to theirs (i. e., the devisees)." * * * The property was his, and he had a right to do with it as he pleased, and those who take of his bounty must take it on the terms he imposes. To make partition of his property now, however advantageous from a business point it might be to all concerned, would be to do violence to the intention of the testator expressed in his will, and to disregard the mandate of the statute above quoted. That we cannot do. Ex parte Cubbage v. Franklin, 62 Mo. 364; Sikemeier v. Galvin, 124 Mo. 367, 27 S. W. 551; Lilly v. Menke, 126 Mo. 211, 28 S. W. 643, 994; McQueen v. Lilly, 131 Mo. 17, 31 S. W. 1043. The learned counsel argue for appellant that this is not a statutory procedure for partition to which the statute above quoted applies, but it is an invocation of the broad powers of a court of equity to relieve the parties against an unfortunate condition not foreseen by their testator, which results in impairment of the rights of all. So far as we can see from the record, the plaintiff is the only party in interest who is dissatisfied with the terms of the will or who is asking that they be disregarded. Broad as the jurisdiction of a court of equity is, it is nevertheless within the limits of the statute law of the state, and the chancellor is as much bound to obey that law as is the judge in a law court. But a court of equity, exercising its ancient jurisdiction uninfluenced by the statute above quoted, would not make partition at the suit of a devisee in express violation of the will. A court of equity would no more at the suit of a devisee require a trustee, in violation of the will, to incur or sell a part of the trust property merely to render the rest more profitable, than it would at the suit of a prospective heir require a man to improve his own estate or protect it from decay."

That the statute in hand applies to equitable partitions is suggested in Evans v. Blackiston, 66 Mo., loc. cit. 439 et seq. That equity follows the law is illustrated by the proposition that equity courts will follow and enforce the statute of limitations. Burrus v. Cook, 117 Mo. App., loc. cit. 403, 93 S. W. 888. We refer to the dissenting opinion of Ellison, J., in that case, since it was held a correct pronouncement of the law when the case came here on his dissent. See Burrus v. Cook (Mo.) 114 S. W. 1065.

The very rights asserted by plaintiff arise alone under the will of Patrick Henry Jones; i. e., no will, no rights in him. The Carson children were not heirs at law of Patrick; they took under the will. The widow took under the will, not otherwise. Plaintiff stands in their shoes; ergo, plaintiff takes under the will or not at all. He must take, therefore, cum onere, the bitter with the sweet in its provisions, and he cannot, by going into equity, hold any rights in the homestead free from the valid limitations and restrictions of that instrument. It follows him into a court of conscience like the skeleton in Holbein's Dance of Death, and confronts him at every step.

It follows that sections 4383 and 4650, supra, must be held to apply to the subject-matter of this litigation, and we so hold. Any other view would trample down the plain law.

8. It is hornbook doctrine that the intention of the testator, not from one word, but from all the words, not from one corner, but from the four corners of the will, is the touchstone of judicial interpretation of a will. That, also, is the statutory rule. Section 4650, supra. In getting at testator's intention and giving effect to his intentment, a court, called upon to interpret his will, puts itself as nearly as may be in his environment, stands in his shoes, and looks with his perspective through his eyes.

With which generalization, we come to the next question in logical order, viz.: What was the object and intention of testator as evidenced by his will? It is alleged in the petition, and argued by counsel for respondent at our bar, that the sole object of testator was to provide a home for his widow, Eliza; that his only purpose in postponing a sale of the homestead was to provide such home for her. The conclusion drawn is that as such object has been subserved, after the widow has parted with her home, equity will not concern itself to maintain the status quo, but will sell the land in advance of the period named in the will and divide the proceeds. Hamlin v. Thomas, 128 Pa. 20, 17 Atl. 506. But learned counsel, through inadvertence, argues unsoundly, we think, by assuming a premise not true. Patrick Henry's will does not say that his only object was to preserve a home for his widow. That may well have been one of his objects, but not the only one. He knew his widow, in the course of nature, would be likely to survive him a term of years. He owned a valuable homestead on the edge of an ambitious and growing town, long of slow or no growth, but on the verge of rapid expansion. Who shall say he did not anticipate the growth of that town and the rise in the value of suburban property presently, just as has happened? We find such an object commented upon in the case of Loomis v. McClintock, 10 Watts (Pa.) 274, and by Gibson, C. J., in Styer v. Freas, 15 Pa. 339. With that in view, he makes it contrary to his will to partition his homestead among those participating in his bounty until the happening of a certain event, to wit, Eliza's death. When that time arrives, his daughter, Cora, takes, or (if she be dead) her own daughter, Mary, takes, and if both be dead, then the Murray children take her per capita share. When that time arrived, if there were no Carson children alive and no one to inherit through them, there would have to be a different alignment of takers. Shall we say that this testator did not mean that this property should be held intact in anticipation of increasing value until the event of Eliza's death, when the definite takers would be settled and determined by the will? Or shall we say that equity will seize the situation as of the year 1905 and divide the proceeds among those then alive? If we say the latter, and if, when Eliza dies, the property would then have passed to different takers, has the will been obeyed? Have we not flown in the face of the intent of the testator and made it impossible to perform the will? It seems to us plainly so.

It is argued that Cora holds the naked legal title in the homestead, subject to the life estate, under the residuary clause of the will in trust awaiting the execution of the power donated by the will; that the trust has become unprofitable, and equity should end it, as was done in Donaldson v. Allen, supra. Let us see about that. It seems to be profitable to Mrs. Millery and those interested with her. The land is rising on the market. The plaintiff, as life tenant, voluntarily assumed the burden of repairs and taxes. In this condition of things, it may be profitable to him to at once bring this situation to an end and to have commutation of the life estate in a large lump sum, which he may put in his pocket, and to have five-sixths of the remainder given to him as assignee of the Carson children; but this situation he brought on himself, he went into it with eyes wide open, in "a hazard of new fortune," and it creates no condition appealing persuasively to a chancellor. Clearly he is not entitled to a sale and division if the widow, Eliza, and the Carson children were not entitled to one, and, if we should hold that they were so entitled prior to the time appointed by the will, we would be making a new will for Patrick Henry Jones. He seems to have been quite capable of making his own, and we will give effect to it.

4. What we have said disposes of the case. Questions relating to equitable conversion and equitable reconversion seem to us afield. The right to elect to reconvert into real estate under certain conditions and thus avoid a sale under the power in a will treating real estate as converted into money, discussed in Williams v. Lobban, 206 Mo. 399, 104 S. W. 58, is not controlling in this case. In the Williams Case those who were to take under the will were definitely determined by its terms. Without awaiting the execution of the power of sale, all the beneficiaries but one sold. His interest passed by execution sale under the ruling in Eneberg v. Carter, 98 Mo. 647, 12 S. W. 522, 14 Am. St. Rep. 664. It was held, in effect, that though the estate by the terms of the will was subject to the doctrine of equitable conversion, yet that all the beneficiaries had elected to reconvert it into real estate by their several sales and deeds made; and that a grantee, holding under mesne conveyances, held the land freed from the power to sell donated to the executor by the will. It is manifest that the Williams Case is not this case.

As we read the Mandlebaum Case, 29 Mich. 78, 18 Am. Rep. 61, somewhat relied upon by plaintiff, that is not this case. That case was on all fours with the Williams

Case, and, in discussing the principles of law underlying the judgment rendered, Christiancy, J., pointed out that the question did not involve a will limiting the property over to another. On page 89 of 29 Mich. (18 Am. Rep. 61), he said: "The estate devised is not a conditional one to be forfeited or to revert to the heirs of the testator, or to go over to others on a breach of the restrictions, not one which is to vest at some future day, or upon the happening of some future event, but an absolute vested remainder or estate in fee, and though not to come into actual enjoyment until the death of the widow, to whom a life estate is given, it is just as much vested and the devisees have just as much right to sell the interest or estate devised as if there had been no intervening estate for life. And the question of validity of the restriction is, in my view, precisely the same in all its legal aspects as if no life estate had been given to the widow, but the whole had been given in fee directly to these devisees, as an absolute estate in fee and in possession, with the same provisions restricting the power of sale."

The Mandlebaum Case, it seems to us, lends no countenance to the contention of plaintiff, because the will there is essentially different from the will here. The same may be said of the wills in judgment in the Sikemeier Case, 124 Mo. 367, 27 S. W. 551, and the McQueen Case, 131 Mo. 9, 31 S. W. 1043.

I am inclined to the individual opinion that one part of the beneficiaries under a will such as this have no right to elect to reconvert an estate, equitably converted into money, back into real estate, and have their election enforced in equity, but the point is not necessary to the case, and therefore is reserved.

Neither is it necessary to decide whether the defendant, Jones, by virtue of his discharge as executor in the probate court, has lost the power of making the sale, for if he has not lost that power, then he can make it when the time arrives. If he has lost it, then it may be that a court of equity, rather than see a trust fail for want of a trustee, will appoint one to execute the power. Or it may be that, under section 137, Rev. St. 1890, reading, that, "The sale and conveyance of real estate under a will shall be made by the acting executor or administrator with the will annexed, if no other person be appointed by the will for the purpose, or if such person fail or refuse to perform the trust," an administrator, de bonis non, cum testamento annexo, might be appointed to execute the power. (See authorities cited in counsels' briefs.) Those are interesting questions which naturally will arise when the right time comes, but a consideration of them at this time would not only be in the nature of obiter, but would throw no light on the turning point in the case, which is the construction of the will and the testator's intention.

5. We do not think the facts justify an injunction restraining plaintiff and those holding under him from prosecuting further suits. The interpretation of the will was not without difficulty. Counsel, however learned, are allowed some latitude in hypotheses and theories in that behalf. The plaintiff and his predecessor were entitled to go into court on one hypothesis or another, so long as they acted in good faith, did not move willfully with the purpose of harassing and annoying defendants, and were willing to assume the burden of costs incident to an unsuccessful venture. It is not likely another suit in partition will be instituted during the widow's life.

The decree is reversed, and the bill is ordered dismissed. All concur, except WOODSON, J., not sitting.

MATHIESON v. ST. LOUIS & S. F. RY. CO.

1. EVIDENCE (§ 85*)—JUDICIAL NOTICE—STATUTES OF OTHER STATES.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 256*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—ACTION—SUFFICIENCY OF PETITION—NOTICE OF INJURY.

A petition against a railroad company for injuries to an employé, under a statute making railroad companies liable for injuries to any employé through the negligence of its agents or employes if he gives "notice in writing of the injury so sustained," is insufficient if it fails to allege the giving of such notice.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 171*)—REVIEW—SCOPE AND THEORY OF CASE.

Plaintiff must recover, if at all, on the cause of action stated in the petition, and not on one stated in the reply.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jackson County; H. L. McCune, Judge.

Action by William A. Mathieson against the St. Louis & San Francisco Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

This cause was begun in the circuit court of Jackson county to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by plaintiff, on December 1, 1903, whilst he was employed as a member of a switching crew working in defendant's yards in Kansas City, Kan. A trial was had which resulted in a judgment for plaintiff for the sum of $15,000, and defendant duly appealed the cause to this court. The petition, in substance, alleged the incorporation of the defendant; that on the 1st day of December, 1903, plaintiff was employed as a switchman in the defendant's yards in Kansas City, Wyandotte county, Kan., and was engaged on said day in switching freight cars into the packing plant of the Fowler Packing Company; that plaintiff was a member of a switching crew under the charge and control of an agent, servant, and vice principal of defendant named Merten, and that in the course of his employment plaintiff was upon a string of freight cars being switched into said plant, and Merten was alongside of said cars; that he (Merten) notified the plaintiff that he was about to uncouple the last two cars, and plaintiff was thereupon proceeding along the top of such string of freight cars, relying upon the notification of said Merten, and was passing from the top of the third car to the top of the fourth car when said Merten carelessly and negligently, and without warning to plaintiff, uncoupled the cars between said third and fourth cars, thereby causing said cars to separate, and causing said plaintiff to fall to the track below, striking upon the cross-ties, and wounding him as thereafter set out. The petition further alleged as follows: That at all times hereinafter mentioned it was and is provided by the laws of the state of Kansas, as follows: "Every railroad company organized or doing business in this state shall be liable for all damages to any employé of such company in consequence of any negligence of its agents, or by any mismanagement of its engineers or other employés to any person sustaining such damage." "That said injuries to plaintiff were directly caused by the carelessness and negligence of the defendant, its agents, servants and employés, in this: That said foreman, Merten, carelessly, negligently, and unskillfully, and without warning to plaintiff, uncoupled said freight cars at a point where plaintiff was passing from one of said cars to the other, where he knew, or by the exercise of reasonable care might have known, that plaintiff was in a position of imminent peril upon the tops of said cars, and engaged in passing from the one to the other; that said Merten carelessly, negligently, and unskillfully, and without warning to plaintiff, uncoupled the third car from the fourth car, after having notified the plaintiff that he was about to cut off but two of said cars, thereby cutting off three of said cars, although he knew, or by the exercise of reasonable care might have known that plaintiff was in a position of peril, passing along the tops of said cars, and liable to be thrown thereby to the track below." The petition alleges that by reason of the foregoing negligent acts of the defendant, its agent, servant, vice principal, and foreman, Merten, the plaintiff was thrown from his position on top of said freight cars, and fell to the cross-ties, and thereby his feet, and the bones, muscles, flesh, cords, and sinews thereof, were bruised, crushed, sprained, and broken, and the arches of both feet were broken, so that the insteps were sunken and depressed, and that plaintiff has suffered, and will in the future continue to suffer, great pain and anguish of mind and body, and had lost all of his time and earnings, and will continue to lose them in the future; that such injuries were permanent, and that plaintiff's earning capacity had been entirely destroyed, all to his damage in the sum of $15,000, for which judgment was prayed. The answer of the defendant contained a general denial, a plea of contributory negligence, and a plea of assumption of risk. It also contained the following allegations: "(4) For a fourth and further answer and defense to said amended petition defendant avers that plaintiff has stated in said petition that he was working for defendant in and about its yards and connections in Wyandotte county, Kan., and that at the time he was injured he was working in said Wyandotte county, Kan., and the accident of which plaintiff complains in his petition happened in said county and state of Kansas. Defendant further avers that the law of the state of Kansas set up in said amended petition was amended on March 4, 1903, by the Legislature of the state of Kansas, and as amended is as follows: 'Every railroad company organized or doing business in this state shall be liable for all damages done to any employé of said company in consequence of any negligence of its agents, or by any mismanagement of its engineers, or other employés, to any person sustaining such damage; provided, that notice in writing of the injury so sustained, stating the time and place thereof, shall have been given by or on behalf of the person injured to such railroad company within ninety days after the occurrence of the accident.' Defendant further avers that plaintiff has failed to comply with said law of the state of Kansas, in that he has failed to give to defendant, within 90 days after the occurrence of said accident, any notice of the injury sustained by him, stating the time and place thereof, and that by reason thereof plaintiff cannot recover herein." The reply filed by the plaintiff denied the allegations of the defendant's answer, and further pleaded that the plaintiff had given notice to the defendant within 90 days after the occurrence of the accident.

W. F. Evans, I. P. Dana, and W. J. Orr, for appellant. Walsh & Morrison and Virgil Conkling, for respondent.

WOODSON, J. (after stating the facts as above). 1. Counsel for appellant insists that the petition filed herein does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. This action is based upon the statute of Kansas, set out in full in appellant's answer. By reading the petition it will be seen that all of that part of the statute beginning with the word "provided" and ending with the word "accident" was not pleaded in the petition. The law is too well settled to require the citation of authorities in support thereof that the courts of this state will not take judicial notice of legislative enactments of our sister states; and, were it not for the fact that the answer of appellant pleads the entire act, only a portion of it would be before us. But since the answer pleads the entire section, and the reply admits the truthfulness of that plea, we must hold that the entire act is properly before the court. That statute does not purport to give an absolute cause of action in favor of an employé of a railroad company who is injured through the negligence of its engineers or other employés, but only gives the injured employé that right provided he gives the company notice in writing of the injuries sustained, and of the time and place it occurred, within 90 days after the accident occurred. That being true, then it is clear respondent had no cause of action until he gave the statutory notice. In other words, it is apparent from reading the statute that the company was not liable for such damages merely because respondent was injured by other employés of the company, for the simple reason that he had no cause of action under the statute until the notice was properly given. The giving of that notice was one of the essential elements of respondent's case, and it should therefore have been alleged in the petition, and established by the proof, before he would have been entitled to a recovery. Without that allegation the petition is fatally defective, and does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

Where the right of the plaintiff to recover depends upon conditions stated in the same section of the statute which gives the right of action, then the petition must allege the performance of those conditions or requirements, otherwise it will state no cause of action. McIntosh v. Railroad, 103 Mo. 131, 15 S. W. 80. In the case above cited, Barclay, J., in discussing the question of pleading a cause of action given by a similar statute, used the following language: "It was expressly held in Barker v. Railroad (1886) 91 Mo. 86, 14 S. W. 280, that any person claiming statutory damages for the death of another, under section 2121, Rev. St. 1879, must, both by pleading and proofs, bring himself within its terms. Here the action was brought within the time (six months) during which the widow of deceased (had he left one) would have had the exclusive right to sue. Yet, the petition does not even show that he was unmarried when he died. The right of the parents to maintain the action depends in part on the facts that he left neither widow nor minor children surviving him, and that those facts should be alleged and proved, if denied." This court in the case of Reno v. City of St. Joseph, 169 Mo. 642, 70 S. W. 123, recognized the necessity of pleading the notice required by section 5724, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2909), which only requires the notice to be given before an action can be maintained, and does not withhold the right of action itself until the notice is given, as in the case under the Kansas statute. If it is necessary to plead the statute in the former case, then a fortiori should it be pleaded in the matter. And the same view of the matter was taken by the Kansas City Court of Appeals in the case of Burnette v. St. Joseph, 112 Mo. App., loc. cit. 669, 87 S. W. 589. To the same effect is Baird v. Railway Co., 146 Mo., loc. cit. 279, 48 S. W. 78. We are therefore of the opinion the petition does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

2. Counsel for respondent seeks to avoid the result of the conclusions reached in paragraph 1 of this opinion by insisting that the petition states a good cause of action under the common law, and that he is entitled to recovery independent of the statute pleaded. In our opinion that contention is untenable; and it is apparent from reading the petition that the suit is bottomed upon the statute, and no attempt whatever was made to state a cause of action under the common law. The record also shows that the case was tried upon that theory; and he should not be permitted now to change fronts in this court. But, independent of that, the territory which now composes the state of Kansas was acquired from France by the United States under a treaty dated April 30, 1803, and consequently was never subject to the common law of England. The presumption that the common law is in force in a sister state applies only to those states which are carved out of English territory.

The St. Louis Court of Appeals, in the case of McManus v. Railroad Co., 118 Mo. App., loc. cit. 160, 161, 94 S. W. 743, stated the rule in the following language: "The laws of the state of Idaho, if it has any, in regard to blocking guard rails, were not offered in evidence. The United States acquired territory out of which the state of Idaho was carved from Spain by the treaty of February 22, 1819, promulgated February 22, 1821, between the United States and the King of Spain. Hence Idaho was never subject to the laws of England, and the presumption cannot be indulged that the common law is in force in that state; and, in the absence of proof of its laws, we must apply the laws of this state in determining whether or not it was proper to submit to the jury to find whether the defendant was or was not negligent in failing to block its guard rails. Flato v. Mulhall, 72 Mo. 522; McDonald v. Life Ass'n, 154 Mo. 618, 55 S. W. 999; Hurley v. Railroad, 57 Mo. App. 675; Witascheck v. Glass, 46 Mo. App., loc. cit. 215." Speaking to the same point, this court, in Flato v. Mulhall, 72 Mo. 525, said: "As the contract for the acceptance was made in Texas, and as the acceptance itself was to have been made in Illinois, and the remedy is sought in this state, it becomes material to inquire what law is to govern us in determining the rights of the parties. The validity and legal effect of the contract alleged must depend upon the law of the place where it was made. Carnegie v. Morrison, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 397; Bissell v. Lewis, 4 Mich. 459. The contract of acceptance was of course valid by the law of Illinois, where it was to be given; but, as the defendants refused to give any acceptance whatever, the law of Illinois is not material. This suit for a breach of a promise to accept, made in Texas, the nature and extent of the obligation assumed by the defendants in making such promise, assuming that it has been proved, should properly be determined by the law of that state. Under the previous decisions of this court, however, we cannot take judicial notice of the laws of Texas, and they were not offered in evidence. Counsel for the plaintiff ask us to presume, in the absence of evidence, that the common law is in force in Texas. This presumption can only be indulged with reference to those states which, prior to becoming members of the Union, were subject to the laws of England. Texas was a part of the Spanish possessions on this continent; and, if the common law ever prevailed there, or now prevails there, it must be by virtue of some statutory provision, of which we cannot take judicial notice. As no evidence was introduced, and no presumption can be indulged as to the lex loci contractus, the law of the forum must govern." The Supreme Court of Arkansas announced the same rule as to the laws of Texas, in Brown v. Wright, 58 Ark. 26, 22 S. W. 1022, 21 L. R. A. 467: "It is insisted that the money became the property of the husband by the rule of the common law. We cannot presume that the law is in force there. Thorn v. Weatherly, 50 Ark. 237, 7 S. W. 38; Garner v. Wright, 52 Ark. 385, 12 S. W. 785, 6 L. R. A. 715." And with reference to the laws of Indian Territory, in Garner v. Wright, 52 Ark. 385, 12 S. W. 785, 6 L. R. A. 715, the Arkansas court said: "In similar cases the courts of this state will generally presume the common law to be in force in another state. Cox v. Morrow, 14 Ark. 603; Thorn v. Weatherly, 50 Ark. 243, 7 S. W. 33. But this presumption is indulged as to those states only that have taken the common law as a basis of their jurisprudence. Such a presumption would not be indulged as to the laws of the states of Louisiana and Texas, because we know that their jurisprudence is founded upon a different system. The same reason forbids such a presumption as to the laws of the Indian Territory, for we know that no system of law has been adopted there." The rule is clearly expressed in De Sonora v. Bankers' Mutual Casualty Co. (Iowa) 95 N. W. 232, thus: "We know that Mexico was a Spanish province for about 300 years, and then became, and still is, a republic. At no period of its history has it been under British sovereignty. Its institutions are Latin, and not Anglo-Saxon, and the common law is not presumed to be in force in any state or country where English institutions have not been established. Savage v. O'Neil, 44 N. Y. 298; Davison v. Gibson, 56 Fed. 443, 5 C. C. A. 543; Norris v. Harris, 15 Cal. 226; Flato v. Mulhall, 72 Mo. 522; Brown v. Wright, 58 Ark. 20, 22 S. W. 1022, 21 L. R. A. 467; 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law, 1065." From the foregoing observations it is seen that the common law never existed in the state of Kansas, without it has been adopted by statute; but, as there is no allegation in the petition or plea that such a statute exists in that state, we would be unauthorized to consider it, even though such statute does exist.

Counsel for respondent attempts to evade the effects of his failure to plead the entire section of the Kansas statute, and his compliance therewith, by alleging in his reply that he had given the notice required thereby within 90 days from the date of the injury. The law in this state is well settled to the effect that the plaintiff must recover, if at all, upon the cause of action stated in the petition, and not upon one stated in the reply. Hill v. Rich Hill Coal Co., 119 Mo. 9, 24 S. W. 223; Rhodes v. Holladay-Klotz Co., 105 Mo. App. 279, 79 S. W. 1145; Milliken v. Commission Co., 202 Mo., loc. cit. 654, 100 S. W. 604. So, if we consider the petition from any view presented, it falls to state a cause of action.

We, therefore, reverse the judgment and remand the cause. All concur.

FULTON v. FREELAND et al.
(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 1.
March 31, 1909. Rehearing Denied
April 18, 1909.)

1. WILLS (§ 164*)—UNDUE INFLUENCE—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence of illicit relations between testator and his second wife before marriage is too remote to prove undue influence as to a will drawn about eight years thereafter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 164.*]

2. WILLS (§ 38*)—MENTAL INCAPACITY OF TESTATOR—"INSANE DELUSION."

There is no such thing as an insane delusion founded on facts, and, if the idea entertained has for a basis anything substantial, it is not a delusion.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, pp. 3644-3646; vol. 8, p. 7689.]

3. WILLS (§ 55*)—MENTAL INCAPACITY OF TESTATOR—INSANE DELUSION—INSUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence held not to show an insane delusion on the part of a testator as to a conspiracy by his former divorced wife and her relations to do him bodily injury.

4. WILLS (§ 163*)—UNDUE INFLUENCE BY WIFE—PRESUMPTION.

The fact that testator's wife is the chief beneficiary raises no presumption of undue influence, though, if the testator was weak mentally and his wife transcended the limit of the rule, and attempted to foist on him a will of her own dictation, a different question would be presented.

5. WILLS (§ 166*)—UNDUE INFLUENCE BY WIFE—ILLICIT RELATIONS BEFORE MARRIAGE AS EVIDENCE.

Where evidence of illicit relations before marriage to show undue influence by a wife as to her husband's will is admitted, it must be followed by acts of undue influence after marriage.

6. WILLS (§ 163*)—UNDUE INFLUENCE—PRESUMPTION.

A will in favor of a mistress, or one with whom testator's relations have been meretricious, raises no presumption of undue influence.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Holt County; W. C. Ellison, Judge.

Action by James M. Fulton against Joseph L. Freeland and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

T. C. Dungan, C. F. Booher, and Geo. W. Wright, for appellant. J. W. Peery, for appellees.

GRAVES, J. Action by plaintiff, the son of William J. Fulton, deceased, contesting the will of deceased made in March, 1889. By said will it was provided: (1) Expenses of funeral to be paid out of personal property; (2) that executor sell so much of testator's property as may be required to pay debts and pay same; and (3) bequest of $1 "and more" to the plaintiff.

The remaining four paragraphs or items of this will read:

"Item 4th. I hereby devise and bequeath to my beloved wife, Elzie, all the residue of my estate, both real and personal.

"Item 5th. In case my said wife shall die before, or with me, I herein devise the residue of my estate to my stepdaughter, Lizzie McPike, in estate tail to her and the heir or heirs of her body forever.

"Item 6th. In case my stepdaughter dies without issue I devise the said residue of my estate, one-half to Pauline Engleman of Parkville, Missouri, and one-half to Mary Scott of Pueblo, Colo.

"Item 7th. I hereby appoint Joseph L. Freeland to execute this, my last will and testament."

<Grounds of contest, as alleged, were:> (1) That said will was executed "by and through the fraud, deception, persuasion, and undue influence of the defendant Elzie Fulton and Joseph L. Freeland, Lizzie McPike, and J. P. Tucker, or one or all of them, and of other persons related to said Elzie Fulton or friendly to her, and conspiring and conniving with her to procure said instrument, whose names are to this plaintiff unknown, and for that reason cannot be here stated." (2) Testamentary incapacity, thus stated: "That long prior to the signing and publishing of said instrument the mind of said William J. Fulton has become diseased and subject to a morbid delusion and hallucination amounting to a permanent and fixed insanity incapable of being removed and eradicated from the mind of said testator, which said delusion was in substance that the plaintiff herein and said testator's divorced wife had entered into a conspiracy for the purpose of inflicting bodily injuries upon said testator, and to wreck said testator financially; that said delusion was without reason and unfounded in any fact or substance whatever, but purely a delusion and insane conception of said testator induced, created and perpetuated fraudulently and wrongfully by the defendant Elzie Fulton and her friends until his death, February 9, 1902, for the purpose and with the intention of procuring from said testator the will sought in this proceeding to be vacated and annulled." <And (3) a general charge (in which is plead the alleged evidence) of a fraudulent scheme upon the part of Elzie Fulton, then Elzie McPike, a widow, beginning in 1876, when testator was married to another woman, by which the said Elzie by illicit relations with deceased sought to gain undue influence over him, separate him and his wife, and then marry him, and procure the will in question securing to her and her relations the property and estate of deceased, which alleged fraudulent scheme it is charged was carried out by the said Elzie and others.>

By answer the defendant admitted the execution and probate of the will, the death of testator February 9, 1902, the qualification of defendant Freeland as executor, and denied all other allegations. Further answering, they averred that William J. Fulton was a citizen of Platte county when said will was made and published, over the age of 21 years and of sound mind, and that the said will, a copy of which was attached to the answer, was the last will and testament of William J. Fulton, and prayed that the same might be so declared.

Reply, general denial of the new matter in the answer.

<As above stated, plaintiff is a son of deceased by a first wife. Defendant Elzie Fulton is the second wife and widow of deceased.> Lizzie McPike is the daughter of Elzie Fulton by her first husband, William McPike, and Pauline Engleman and Mary Scott are sisters of Elzie Fulton.

The history of this cause as depicted by the versatile pen of plaintiff's learned counsel lacks only stage settings for a modern play. More or less of it will be required for a proper understanding of the points in dispute, and especially on the point made that the trial court erred in excluding certain testimony offered. The suit was brought in Platte county, but on change of venue was tried in Holt county.

In 1852, William J. Fulton was married at Adrain, N. Y., to Mary J. Hadley, then a girl of 14 years and an orphan. The young wife had inherited 17 acres of land and some money from her father. The young couple remained there, on this place, until 1863, when they removed to Wyandotte, Kan. Prior to this removal the plaintiff in this case was born of this marriage. In 1876, the Fultons removed to Parkville. Upon reaching the West, William J. Fulton began contracting with a railroad company to furnish ties, timber, and wood, and though he and his wife, Mary, suffered the hardships of tie camps, there was amassed considerable property. Troubles began shortly after the removal to Parkville. Two miles south of Parkville, and in the neighborhood wherein William J. Fulton had large interests and was working many men, lived the widow McPike on what is known as the "Roberts farm," the old homestead of Mr. Roberts, father of Mrs. McPike, and the home of Mrs. McPike before her marriage to William McPike. Fulton acquired an interest in this farm, and he and Mrs. McPike farmed it together. Mr. Fulton at that time was a business man of large affairs, and it is claimed by the plaintiff that Mrs. McPike at this time conceived the idea of separating Fulton and his wife, Mary, and ultimately marrying Fulton, and then procuring a will of the character of the one finally made, and to this end she used all the wiles of a crafty widow, even to the extent of maintaining illicit relations with Fulton. The evidence at the trial was largely by deposition, and a great mass of it pertained to alleged proof of the relations between Fulton and Mrs. McPike from 1876 up to their marriage in 1881. This proof came largely from former employes of Fulton, both colored and white, from employes of Mrs. McPike, and from parties who testified to neighborhood rumors. The testimony of this character was excluded by the court, and of this action error is assigned here.

Another contention of plaintiff is that, through the influence of Mrs. McPike, Fulton was led to believe that a conspiracy had been formed by and between his then wife, Mary, and her nephew, William Hadley, and others to kill Fulton and get his property. That Fulton believed there was such a conspiracy is amply shown by his acts and the testimony of his neighbors and friends, but as to Mrs. McPike's connection therewith the tendered evidence is not convincing. To the evidence bearing upon this alleged conspiracy we will divert later.

Following the thread of events, it appears that on September 3, 1880, William J. Fulton sued his wife, Mary J. Fulton, for divorce. In his petition he charged that they had not lived together as man and wife since the year 1870, although they both lived in the same house and he supported her. That he first suspected his wife of infidelity to him in 1868, and from that time until the filing of the petition she had been guilty of adultery with divers persons upon divers occasions, some of which persons and dates were named. That she used profane language toward plaintiff, and in the winter of 1879-80 attempted to kill him with a pistol. There was also the following charge: "That in the spring of 1880 she and William O. Hadley and divers other persons formed a conspiracy to murder the plaintiff and get possession of his property, and would have succeeded in all probability, but for the accidental and timely discovery of their hellish plot."

To this petition, Mary J. filed an answer and cross-bill. In the cross-bill she complains of inhuman treatment at the hands of defendant from almost the date of their marriage. That he compelled her, when 14½ years of age, to do all the housework for himself, his father, two sisters, brother, and brother-in-law, and to cut all necessary firewood. That he had, from that time on throughout their married life, been guilty of every kind of tyrannical action, so as to make her life unbearable and unendurable. That she was sick and suffering, and he neglected and abandoned her, and gave her no care, devotion, or affection. That whilst living in the same house with him in Wyandotte, Kan., and Parkville, Mo., she was wholly neglected and cruelly treated by plaintiff. That during such time he refused, neglected, and failed to pay any personal attention to plaintiff, and failed and refused to procure necessary nurses, physicians, and medicine for her. That "he has uniformly during all these years been cold, unaffectionate, bitter, distrustful, suspicious, ungenerous, revengeful, and brutal in his treatment of this defendant."

The cross-bill then proceeds to charge that he maliciously caused her to be arrested and imprisoned upon the charge of a conspiracy to murder him, and that the same was done to illegally assist him in this, his proceeding for divorce. The cross-bill also charges William J. Fulton with having been guilty of adultery with a number of women, naming them, and among which were Elzie McPike and Josie Fulton, the wife of his son, and M. Augusta Hadley, the wife of Mary J.'s brother.

March 31, 1881, the following decree was entered in that case: "This day the above-entitled cause coming on for final hearing upon the petition of plaintiff, the answer and cross-bill of defendant, and plaintiff's reply thereto, and the court, having heard all the evidence and arguments of counsel on both sides, finds that the plaintiff has by the proof sustained the charges of adultery specified in his petition against the defendant, and that the plaintiff is the innocent and injured party; the court, therefore, orders, adjudges and decrees that he be and is thereby divorced from the defendant; and, it not being necessary to pass upon the charge of conspiracy charged in plaintiff's petition, no finding is made upon that issue. The court further finds that none of the charges contained in defendant's cross-bill are sustained by the proof, and said cross-bill is dismissed. It is adjudged and ordered that the plaintiff pay the costs of this suit."

It appears that prior to August 20, 1880,

Mary J. Fulton had been East with her relatives and friends, and when she came back was arrested with her nephew, William Hadley, upon the charge of conspiracy to murder William J. Fulton. Fulton made affidavit to such charge before David Mitchell, J. P., August 20, 1880. State warrant was issued on same day, and William O. Hadley was apprehended on August 30th, and Mary J. Fulton on September 1st, following the issuance of the warrant.

All the foregoing records were introduced by the plaintiff in the present suit. The defendants then introduced record evidence showing that a change of venue was taken from Justice David Mitchell, and the cause transferred to Justice Adam Woods, where, upon a trial had, the defendants were found guilty and punished by a fine of $200 and six months in the county jail. From this an appeal appears to have been taken, and the plaintiff in the case at bar introduced a record entry of the circuit court of Platte county of date April 1, 1881, showing that there was a nolle pros. entered by the prosecuting attorney. On November 2, 1881, William J. Fulton was married to Elzie McPike, and lived with her thenceforward to the day of his death.

Returning to the question of conspiracy, the plaintiff upon the first trial of this case introduced as a witness John Fulton, a brother of William J. Fulton. At the trial from which this appeal arises John Fulton was dead, but the stenographer's notes of his previous evidence was read to the court and jury in this case. In substance, this testimony is that William J. wrote to him in the East about his troubles and the fears he entertained as to foul play upon the part of his wife, Mary J., and her relatives, the Hadleys, and asked him to investigate what was being done. This witness made an examination, and in his testimony in chief said that there was nothing in the conspiracy. He admitted that he had written to William J. several letters, and was at a little station waiting to go home when a train from the West came in, and, to his surprise, William J. got off. That he stayed with William J. several days and nights, and tried to explain to him that there was nothing in his suspicions. He admitted that he was not on friendly terms with his brother after 1882. He came out and worked for his brother from 1880 to 1882. Being pressed on cross-examination, he admitted sending to his brother, prior to the unexpected visit of William J. in the East, the following letter, with which was inclosed a letter from C. B. Strong:

"Osterhout, August 16th, 1880. My Dear Brother: Inclosed find a letter from my man at Tidaout. I received a letter from M. R. M. to-day. He tells me that Mary left Hornellsville the 12th, one day later than she expected. So that you will see that Will H. must have left the 11th. They were probably both to leave together and I presume that they are both in Kansas City now. Morg. tells me in a letter received from him, that Polly is writing Mary's history in full since she has been in Adrain, to send to you? As soon as I hear from Strong again I will let you know. The lady he speaks of is Mary. I expected she would stop there, as I wrote him to that effect. All I can say is, 'don't be caught asleep, not get fainthearted.' Your ever true brother, John Fulton."

"Tidaout, August 13th, 1880. Mr. J. Fulton—Dear Sir: Your letter of the 11th inst. to hand. The lady in question had not got here. He has given up going with the boat and his brother have taken the machinery out of it. Mr. Hadley left here two days ago. Which way I could not say, and I can't find anybody that knows. He may be going out of town for a few days, if so, I will let you know when he returns. But I think he has gone for good, as he has been making great calculations on going West with that boat and that failed him, so he had nothing to stay here for. Yours truly, C. B. Strong."

Being further pressed, after having seen the letter, he admitted that upon receiving his brother's letter of date July 5th, he had written to Strong to keep a watch on Mrs. Mary J. Fulton and the Hadleys, as he lived in their neighborhood. He admitted that M. R. M. mentioned in his letter was M. R. Miller, a brother-in-law, of his; that Will H. was William Hadley, who was afterwards tried and convicted at Barry in Platte county for a conspiracy to murder William J. Fulton; that the Mary referred to was Fulton's wife, and that the Polly referred to was Polly Hadley, wife of Henry Hadley, a brother of Mary J. Fulton. John Fulton came out West and advised with William J., and later, within two weeks, at the request of William J., went back to his home in the East, sold out, and came out to live in Platte county. He was also to further investigate upon his return East. He said that in the East upon this visit William J. was nervous and fearful of trouble from his wife and the Hadleys, and continued so to be until they severed friendly relations in 1882. They seem to have fallen out because William J. would not indicate what John was to get for his work, as we gather it from the evidence, and we further gather that the witness was hostile to the second wife of William J., or at least had no use for her.

In the admitted evidence the foregoing is all there is to explain the idea that William J. entertained about there being a boat constructed in the East to come West for the purpose of carrying out a conspiracy. What was contained in the other letters from John is only apparent by inference.

In the excluded deposition of Mrs. Susanah Spencer is found the fact that the Mrs. Hadley mentioned in the letters, supra, wrote a letter to William J. Fulton, which he showed to the witness, and in this the alleged details of the plot were given. The witness says that William J. was nervous and pale when he showed her the letter. It also appears that this Mrs. Hadley came West and was here at the divorce trial. This evidence was offered by plaintiff and excluded as aforesaid.

There is some evidence as to Fulton's mental condition in 1880 about the time of this conspiracy matter. A fair sample of this evidence is that of the witness Frederick Kahn, who testified that Mr. Fulton thought there was a conspiracy to kill him. Going to the point in question, the language of the witness is: "Q. From your own knowledge and acquaintance with Mr. Fulton and your talks with him about this conspiracy, and the circumstances surrounding that entire transaction, I will ask you whether you considered Mr. Fulton's mind exactly right on that subject? A. Well, I really don't know; if I were to judge myself, I would say that he was not right on that subject—he had his mind concentrated on that one point. * * * Fulton, I thought, was a very successful business man. I knew him in 1889; he was a strong-minded, intelligent man at that time. Have had talks and business dealings with him before and after 1889. My opinion is formed from these transactions. Q. Now, I understood you, Mr. Kahn, that Mr. Fulton was just as sane on this conspiracy question as you are on any subject on which you firmly fix up your mind; is that correct? A. Well, I couldn't say as to that whether his mind was all right on that or not. Q. You don't say that it wasn't, do you? A. Well, I don't know that I can. Q. And you testified, I believe, that a great many people in this community also believed like Mr. Fulton—that a conspiracy to kill him did exist? A. Yes, he believed it, and the people believed it. Q. And a man by the name of Hadley—who was connected with this conspiracy—was seen loitering mysteriously around Parkville? A. There was a man here by the name of Hadley around Parkville, a good deal; they never called him Captain Arlington. Q. If Jim's name was connected in any way with that conspiracy, you never heard of it? A. I don't remember of it being. Q. If Jim was connected with it, you don't hear it from Mr. Fulton or anybody else? A. No."

Of this class of testimony, this is as strong as any appearing in the record for the plaintiff. That is to say, it goes as far as any to show a mental trouble in 1880 or 1881.

Plaintiff's evidence further tended to prove that his father was friendly towards him after his second marriage, although the wife was not; that they met at different places and talked; that his father helped him some financially; that the second wife said Jim could not have anything, if she could help it; that on several occasions she objected to his father talking to plaintiff; that Elzie Fulton was a high-strung woman and disposed to have her own way, and in some instances had gotten the husband to change his purpose, but the great bulk of plaintiff's testimony shows that, whilst the wife ran the house, Mr. Fulton ran his business affairs; that the home relations were not pleasant after the second marriage; that Mr. Fulton was a kindly, forgiving man, and would yield a point rather than have trouble; that Lizzie McPike often vexed him.

The printed abstract contains 370 pages of the evidence, much of which has been condensed, and in places it appears that some portions of a witness' testimony have been left out entirely.

Going to the date of the execution of the will in 1889, all the witnesses both for plaintiff and defendant say that deceased was a man of large business affairs; that he owned and managed large farms, sawmills, banks, and for three terms was mayor of Parkville. They all practically agree that he was a man of kindly disposition, and would yield a point rather than have trouble with an employé or others. They practically all agree that he was in sound health both physically and mentally in 1889. There is some evidence that even in after years he spoke of this conspiracy to kill him, and clung to the belief that it was true.

Besides showing on cross-examination of the plaintiff's witnesses (as in the instance of Kahn), the defendant, by a mass of testimony coming from citizens of high standing and many of them of state-wide reputation, showed the sound mental condition of deceased in 1889, and for years before and thereafter. So far as the record shows, the beneficiaries did not know of the will for some time after its execution.

Further, for the defendant, it is shown that Fulton at times mentioned his will to others, and expressed satisfaction as to its terms. It appears that he at first thought of making Park College a beneficiary in the event of his wife's death and his stepdaughter's death, and so informed the scrivener, who penciled a will to that effect; but several months later he requested Mr. McRuer, the scrivener, to call at his house and complete his will, and then told him that Mrs. Engleman had been as a sister to him, and told him to make her and Mrs. Scott beneficiaries in the event of the death of the wife and stepdaughter. In each draft of the will the portion to plaintiff was the same. To the scrivener he said that James, the plaintiff had been unfaithful to him, and in a way the record so speaks. From one or more witnesses it appears that at the time of the divorce proceedings James had threatened that they would pursue him until they broke him up. From much in the record the conduct of James was humiliating to his father. He was unable to get him to attend school. James persisted in acting as a kind of fakir at picnics and public gatherings. He espoused the cause of his mother at the divorce proceeding (a commendable act, generally speaking), but one which might afford the father ample reason to make other disposition of his property. He shot a negro at Parkville, and occasioned the old gentleman much anxiety and expense. After the second marriage of his father, he and his mother lingered around the house after dark, much to the discomfort of the father. A subsequent lawsuit by the first wife followed over some property, and James again espoused her cause. Whether true or not, the father believed that James at one time in Kansas City, about the date of this lawsuit, attempted to shoot him. Several years later, Mr. Fulton's bank at Parkville was robbed, and the evidence of the cashier and others is that Mr. Fulton thought that James was a party to that robbery. He had written his father letters which were defamatory of the second wife.

From the evidence, no one was present when Mr. Fulton dictated the terms of his will, except the scrivener, McRuer. After it was written, he took it uptown the next morning or shortly thereafter, and, meeting J. P. Tucker and L. A. Lathy on the sidewalk in front of Mr. Tucker's printing office, asked them to go upstairs to Tucker's office, and when there he signed the will, and they attested it as witnesses thereto. No one was present except the three, unless some workman in the rear end of the newspaper office. In general outline, such is the case. At the close of all the evidence the court directed a verdict for defendants establishing the will. Such further reference to the evidence as may be required will be noted in the disposition of the points made.

1. An orderly method of disposing of the points raised by plaintiff on this appeal is to take the question of the exclusion of certain testimony first, and this we will do. It is urged that the court erred in excluding that great mass of testimony tending to show illicit relations between deceased and Mrs. McPike from 1876 up to the date of their marriage. Was there error here? We think not. The divorce of the deceased from the first wife was in April, 1881, the marriage to the second wife in October, 1881, and the will was drawn in March, 1889. These occurrences are too remote. In Underhill on Wills, vol. 1, p. 213, it is said: "Evidence of illicit relations existing between the parties before their intermarriage, particularly if either of the parties were married at the time, is always relevant, though never controlling or conclusive of undue influence. But evidence of the illicit relations of the parties before marriage must not be too remote, or it will be rejected." To a like effect is Gardner on Wills, p. 203, where it is said: "Evidence is frequently inadmissible by reason of the remoteness, such as the relations between testator and his wife eight or nine years before the will was made, or an estrangement between the testator and his wife, caused by the proponent, sixteen years prior to the making of the will, or a camping trip made by the testator and proponent nine years previous to the execution of the will, during which testator introduced proponent as his wife, though he had a wife then living."

The same question has been up in this state in the case of Ketchum v. Stearns, 8 Mo. App., loc. cit. 69. In that case, which in facts is very much like this case, it is said: "The plaintiffs sought to raise a presumption of undue influence affecting the execution of the will by proofs of the relations existing between the testator and his second wife before their marriage, which was about 11 years before the making of the will; by testimony showing the dependent condition of the disinherited children; by showing that the testator had had difficulties with his first wife, and had separated from her, and that some of the disinherited children had taken sides with their father in those controversies; by showing that the relations between the testator and his disinherited children were friendly and affectionate about the time of the making of the will; by showing that some of the first wife's children had assisted the testator in accumulating property; and by proving some conversation of the testator, in the same year in which the will was made, concerning his intended disposition of his property. There was also an offer to prove that one of the testator's daughters by his first wife had been obliged to leave her father's house, by reason of his second wife's request or influence to that effect. All the offers of testimony upon these matters were, upon defendant's objections, refused by the court, and these refusals are assigned for error. We can discover no ground of admissibility for any of this proposed testimony. The plaintiffs have undertaken to prove that the paper purporting to be the last will and testament of their ancestor was the product of an undue influence exercised upon him by Sarah M. Ketchum. 'Undue influence is that which compels a testator to do that which is against his will, through fear, through the desire of peace, or some coercive power which he is unable to resist, and but for the exercise of which the will would not have been made as it was.' Pierce v. Pierce, 3 Cent. Law J. 226. The testator was married to his second wife in 1855. His will was executed in 1866, and he died in 1877. Here is a period of more than 20 years, at some time during which these incidents of remote bearing, or none at all, are supposed to have indicated that the testator, in the hour when his will was written and signed, was acting under the coercive power above described, and that this coercive power was in fact held over him by Sarah M. Ketchum. Cause and effect are here far too widely separated for the purpose of fair investigation. All or any of the facts tendered might or might not co-exist with a total absence of any such undue influence. They prove, or tend to prove, upon the question at issue, absolutely nothing. Their only effect, if introduced in evidence, might be, in the hands of ingenious counsel, to play upon the passions or prejudices of a jury, and give them an apparent excuse for thwarting the unkind discrimination of a father against some of his children."

The Ketchum Case, supra, came to this court, and the conclusion reached by the St. Louis Court of Appeals was approved. 76 Mo. 396.

In Pierce v. Pierce, 38 Mich., loc. cit. 419, Judge Campbell says: "We think there is very little testimony in the record on this subject which should have been admitted at all. The domestic scandals of many years ago could have no legitimate tendency to prove any modern state of things, and could only serve to burden the case with irrelevant and discreditable details that might and evidently did prejudice the jury, but which had no tendency whatever to show influence in 1871. The law does not confine the power of making wills to persons of blameless character, nor does it disqualify all others from being legatees. And whatever may have been the relations of the testator and his second wife 18 or 19 years before his death, and whatever may have been the circumstances of their marriage, it cannot be permissible to draw inferences from them concerning a condition of things many years thereafter, which, if existing at all, could be proved without difficulty as an existing fact, and not a possible contingency."

In a California case, In re Flint, 100 Cal., loc. cit. 398, 84 Pac. 865, wherein the will was executed nine years after the meretricious acts, the court said: "Conceding indiscretions to have been committed by these parties at this time, such evidence wholly failed to show any undue influence at a time many years after, for in the interim the parties were married, and she had been a lawful wife for years. The foregoing views are fully supported in Webber v. Sullivan, 58 Iowa, 260, 12 N. W. 319; Batchelder v. Batchelder, 139 Mass. 1, 29 N. E. 61; Pierce v. Pierce, 38 Mich. 418."

To a like effect is the opinion of the Supreme Court of Colorado in case of In re Shell's Estate, 28 Colo., loc. cit. 170, 63 Pac. 414, 53 L. R. A. 387, 89 Am. St. Rep. 181. In that case the illicit relations were in 1874 and 1875, the second marriage in 1880, and the will made in 1891. The court said: "The attempt was made to show that, while testator was living with his first wife, the proponent entered the family circle, and as a result of her machinations an estrangement took place between the husband and the first wife, which afterwards led to the divorce, and later to the marriage of proponent and testator. As near as we can ascertain from the meager abstract, the time to which this occurrence relates was about the year 1874 or 1875, and it would seem that the second marriage took place in 1880 or perhaps later. While it is unwise to lay down any hard and fast rule respecting the time to which this class of testimony must relate, we are of opinion that, under the facts of this case, these circumstances were entirely too remote to be brought within the category of evidence tending to establish undue influence."

And so, too, in Batchelder v. Batchelder, 139 Mass., loc. cit. 2, 29 N. E. 62, that court thus states the rule: "The testimony offered to show what the relations between the testator and his wife were eight or nine years before the will was made relates to a period so remote that the court could properly exclude it."

We are of opinion that this evidence was too remote to be of probative force in this cause. Another question pertaining to this class of testimony will be discussed under the question of undue influence.

2. We will take the question of mental incapacity next, although the statement of facts leaves but little room for discussion. The only thing which is urged under the proof is that the testator in 1880, nine years prior to the execution of the will, had an insane delusion that he was to be injured by his first wife and her relatives, and, further, that he entertained a delusion as to the attitude of the plaintiff toward him. No pretense is made that testator was not of sound and disposing mind at the execution of the will in question, save and except these alleged delusions. Testator was in the prime of life and in active business pursuits. His business interests were varied, and his management thereof successful. His business judgment was good, as practically all the witnesses testify. He had vigor of will power, although mild in disposition and disposed to get along smoothly with his fellow man. In age he was about 50 years, and in good health.

Now, as to these alleged delusions. There is no such thing as a delusion founded upon facts. It is a mental conception in the absence of facts. If the idea entertained has for a basis anything substantial, it is not a delusion. There may be a misjudgment of facts, or there may be an accentuated opinion founded upon insufficient facts, but not a delusion rising to the dignity of a mental aberration. As to the conspiracy of his former wife and her relatives and friends forming a plot in the East to do him bodily injury, it cannot be said that this was a delusion in face of the facts. His brother had written him sufficient facts to remove his views from the realm of delusions. In addition, his brother had written him that Mrs. Bradley was writing the history of his wife at Adrain, N. Y., which she would mail him. He did get such letter, and grew nervous and turned pallid as he handed it to the servant to read. He had them arrested, and upon trial before a jury they were convicted. Upon appeal being taken, it is true the case was dismissed by the prosecuting officer, but the officer testified in this case, and says that it was dismissed without the consent of deceased, and that deceased was angry when he found that the case had been dismissed. The prosecuting attorney, explaining his action, said that there were 150 witnesses in the case from Parkville, most of whom were favorable to the views entertained by testator, but that he concluded that inasmuch as Hadley, one of the defendants, had already been confined in jail for six months, he had been sufficiently punished, and that it was of doubtful propriety to try to convict the woman, he of his own motion dismissed the case. So that there was sufficient in substance to eliminate the question of a delusion. In fact, plaintiff's witness Kahn said that not only did deceased believe the matter to be true, but the people generally in Parkville so believed, so that, if testator was suffering from a delusion, many of the citizens of Parkville were likewise suffering. Nor were the views he entertained as to the hostile attitude of the son wholly imaginary, as the statement of facts shows.

The rule as to what constitutes an insane delusion is thus expressed in 1 Underhill on Wills, § 94, p. 126: "Thus the fact that the testator believed that his relatives had ill-treated him, or that they are inimical to him and have conspired to defraud him, and for that reason leaves his property to strangers, does not constitute an insane delusion, unless it appears that his belief was wholly without any basis whatever, and that the testator obstinately persisted in it against all argument which may have been employed to dissuade him. If there are any facts, however little evidential force they may possess, upon which the testator may in reason have based his belief, it will not be an insane delusion, though on a consideration of the facts themselves his belief may seem illogical and foundationless to the court; for a will, it is obvious, is not to be overturned merely because the testator has not reasoned correctly."

See, also, Stull v. Stull, 1 Neb. (Unof.) 395, 96 N. W., loc. cit. 202; Bauchens et al. v. Davis et al., 229 Ill., loc. cit. 561, 82 N. E. 365; Scott v. Scott, 212 Ill. 597, 72 N. E. 708.

In the Stull Case, supra, the court says: "No belief that has any evidence for its basis is in law an insane delusion."

In Sayre v. Trustee of Princeton University, 192 Mo., loc. cit. 126, 90 S. W. 787, this court quotes with approval the above language from the Stull Case.

In the case of Scott v. Scott, supra, it is said: "An insane delusion is a belief in something impossible in the nature of things, or impossible under the circumstances surrounding the afflicted individual, and which refuses to yield either to evidence or reason."

This language was quoted and approved in the later case of Bauchens v. Davis, 229 Ill., loc. cit. 561, 82 N. E. 365, which case has some features similar to the case at bar. In the Bauchens Case the children had sided with their mother in a divorce suit, after which the father entertained the idea that they were against him, and willed practically all his property to a stranger. The will was upheld, and his ideas as to his children were held not insane delusions because founded upon facts.

Under the facts in this case there was no sufficient evidence to establish an insane delusion, and with this eliminated there is absolutely nothing upon which to submit the issue of mental incapacity to the jury. The peremptory instruction, in so far as this branch of the case was concerned, was properly given.

3. (a) Going, then, to the question of undue influence, how stands the case? No attempt is made to show undue influence upon the part of any of the beneficiaries, save and except the wife. The fact that the wife is the chief beneficiary in the husband's will raises no presumption of undue influence. The law is concisely stated by Mr. Underhill thus: "The fact that a man bequeaths his estate to his wife, excluding his children, his father, or other relations, is absolutely immaterial upon the question of undue influence. The silent influence of affection and respect, augmented by the tender and kindly attentions of a faithful spouse, cannot be regarded as in any sense undue. Nor will the fact that the wife by solicitation, or even by urgent importunity, procures for herself all her husband's property, or a larger share than he devises to others, raise a presumption of law that the husband's will was procured by undue influence exerted by her, or that his mind did not act freely in preparing it. * * * It will not be presumed, because a wife has ample opportunity to exert an influence which may be undue, that she has in fact done so. Nor will any presumption of undue influence arise from the fact that the wife advised her husband in his business affairs and guided him through many difficulties, and at one time advised or requested him to make a will in her favor." Our court has long followed this rule. Rankin v. Rankin, 61 Mo. 295; McFadin v. Catron, 188 Mo., loc. cit. 219, 88 S. W. 932, 39 S. W. 771; Myers v. Hanger, 98 Mo., loc. cit. 439, 11 S. W. 974; Jackson v. Hardin, 83 Mo., loc. cit. 185; Mays v. Mays, 114 Mo., loc. cit. 540, 21 S. W. 921. Of course, if the husband was of weak mental capacity and the wife transcended the limit of the rule and attempted to foist upon a weak and diseased mind a will of her own dictation, then a different question would be presented. But such is not this case. There is some feeling shown to have existed between the wife and the plaintiff herein, but in the evidence there is foundation for it. It is not shown that she ever mentioned the making of a will to the husband, but, on the contrary, it is shown that she did not know of it for some time afterwards. Under all the evidence the will was dictated by the testator. The wife was not present when it was executed. For years the husband kept this will, with ample opportunity and mental capacity to change it, but did not. On the other hand, he talked of it and was satisfied with its terms. The attempt to show undue influence in the procurement of this will fell far short of the quantum of evidence required of one who has this burden in a contest of a will.

(b) Referring again to the excluded evidence, and conceding its admissibility, still there would be no case for the plaintiff. The evidence is all in the record by way of depositions, and, if we held it relevant and proper, we could consider it as admitted and pass upon the case upon its merits without retrial. The only purpose of this evidence is to show undue influence, and wherever such evidence has been admitted the courts have always held that it must be followed by acts of undue influence after the marriage. Such was not shown here. Counsel for plaintiff overlooks the definition of undue influence as that term is applied to a wife.

The weight of authority seems to be to the effect that even where a person of sound and disposing mind makes a will in favor of a mistress, or to one with whom his relations have been meretricious, yet there is no presumption of undue influence. In the notes to the case of In re Hess' Will, 31 Am. St. Rep., loc. cit. 677, the learned annotator, after reviewing the cases, says: "As long as the absolute power of testamentary disposition is conceded, and the owner of property is allowed to dispose of it to whomsoever he pleases, and for such reasons as to him shall seem adequate, his right to make a bequest to one with whom his relations have been meretricious must be admitted, even though it be further conceded that the bequest was made because of these relations. Nor can the existence of those relations create a presumption of undue influence, and impose upon the beneficiary the burden of disproving the exercise of such influence."

In the very recent case of Weston v. Hanson—a case where, after a divorce from his wife, in the trial of which the children took the part of the mother, the testator made a will to his mistress—212 Mo., loc. cit. 273, 111 S. W. 51, this court, after reviewing the cases, said: "These cases are all answered by the evidence in the case at bar, which does not show that the defendant was present at the time of the execution of the will. Nor does it show that she ever knew that it was about to be executed, or that she had any conversation with the testator in regard to it before its execution; but it does show that the testator was a man of intelligence, a shrewd business man who had occupied prominent positions, and that he was a man of fine physique and of strong will power; that he went alone to his attorney and employed him to prepare his will, gave him full and explicit directions as to how he wished to dispose of his property, also the names and places of residence of each of his children, and was at that time in possession of all his mental faculties; and it is only in the absence of some one or more of these conditions that the authorities which we have referred to, except Dean v. Negley, 41 Pa. 312, 80 Am. Dec. 620, and McClure v. McClure, 86 Tenn. 173, 6 S. W. 44, have held that a presumption of undue influence arises from meretricious relations existing between the donor and donee. Dean's Case has been overruled, or its holding modified, by subsequent cases in the same court, and this court and the St. Louis Court of Appeals declined to follow it. Sunderland v. Hood, 13 Mo. App. 232. Besides, such an inference would not be drawn from the evidence relating to the relations which existed between the testator and the devisee in the case at bar, in the absence of proof that Mary Hanson 'exercised her influence in the procurement of the will.' Arnault v. Arnault, 52 N. J. Eq. 801, 31 Atl. 606; Dickie v. Carter, 42 Ill. 376. The presumption is in favor of the theory that the will expresses the intention and purpose of the testator. 'Without proof that a mistress influenced a testator directly in procuring a will in her favor, it cannot be inferred from their relations that she secured an influence over him which she would naturally and improperly exert to advance her interest.' Middleton's Case, 68 N. J. Eq. 584, 59 Atl. 454; Monroe v. Barclay, 17 Ohio St. 317, 93 Am. Dec. 620; Matter of Mondorf, 110 N. Y. 456, 18 N. E. 256. The law as announced in Middleton's Case, supra, is, as we understand it, the law of this state as declared in Sunderland v. Hood, 13 Mo. App. 232, and Sunderland v. Hood, 84 Mo. 293, and to which we adhere."

In the case at bar the testator was fully as capable of making a will as was the testator in the Weston Case, supra. There is also the absence of any direct influence in the procurement of this will as was in the Weston Case. So that, even if all this mass of testimony covering the period of from 1878 to 1881 had been admitted, without something more it would have been insufficient to authorize the submission of the case to a jury. The court should never permit a case to go to a jury if such court is satisfied that under all the evidence a verdict for the plaintiff should not be permitted to stand. We are cited by counsel to the recent case of Mowry v. Norman, 204 Mo. 173, 103 S. W. 15, on the question that this cause should have been submitted to the jury. Counsel misjudge that case in undertaking to apply it here. In that case facts were in evidence which showed a fiduciary relation between testator and the chief beneficiary. Physical infirmities were shown, and we held that proof of the fiduciary relation raised a presumption of undue influence, and it was for the jury to say whether this presumption had been overcome by the evidence of defendants. In the case at bar there is no presumption of undue influence, but on the other hand the burden was on plaintiff to show it. Failing to carry that burden, his case must fail.

Full research of this voluminous record and of the questions presented leads us to the conclusion that the trial court committed no error in directing the verdict for defendants. The judgment is affirmed. All concur, except WOODSON, J., not sitting.

JOYCE v. METROPOLITAN ST. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 1.
March 31, 1909. Rehearing Denied
April 13, 1909.)

1. JURY (§ 92*) — COMPETENCY OF JURORS — DISCRETION OF COURT—BUSINESS TRANSACTIONS WITH PARTY.

In an action against a street car company, one is not incompetent to sit as a juror because he is the agent of a railroad company, and as such agent solicits business from street railroads, and defendant is one of the best patrons of his road, and he was desirous of keeping the good will of defendant, and his rejection on that ground on a challenge for cause is an abuse of judicial discretion.

2. CARRIERS (§ 317*)—INJURY TO PASSENGER—EVIDENCE—NEGLIGENT CONSTRUCTION AND MAINTENANCE OF RAILING.

In an action against a carrier for injuries received by a passenger who was caught between the car and a railing parallel to the track extending over a viaduct, evidence is not admissible to show how similar viaducts are protected by railings in other cities, as the question in issue was whether the construction and maintenance of this particular railing was negligence, which was a question to be decided from evidence showing its construction.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1064*)—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action against a street car company for injuries to plaintiff while attempting to board defendant's car by being caught between the car and a railing parallel with the track across a viaduct, the court instructed that if plaintiff attempted to get upon defendant's car, and that he had a transfer in his possession entitling him to be carried as a passenger on that car, and that it was his intention to tender such transfer to defendant in payment of his fare, and that the car, when plaintiff attempted to board the same, was standing at the usual place to receive passengers, the plaintiff was a passenger of defendant. Held, that, while it was unnecessary to have instructed with reference to the transfer, as a passenger intending to pay cash has the same right as one with a transfer, yet the error was not prejudicial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1064.*]

4. CARRIERS (§ 321*)—INJURIES TO PASSENGERS—ACTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action against a street car company for injuries received by a passenger who was caught between the car and a railing extending parallel with the track over a viaduct, the court instructed that, if the jury found that plaintiff was a passenger, defendant was bound to exercise the highest reasonable practicable degree of care of very prudent men engaged in the street railway business to carry and receive plaintiff in safety, and any failure on its part was negligence, and that if the jury found that defendant negligently allowed the railing to remain dangerously close to the front of passing cars, and that defendant's servants controlling the car negligently failed to stop the car a reasonably sufficient time to permit plaintiff to get upon the car in safety, and that defendant's servants negligently started the car forward when they knew or should have known that plaintiff was getting on the car, and that plaintiff was injured thereby, and if plaintiff was at all times exercising for his own safety, such care as a reasonably prudent man would exercise under the same circumstances, the verdict should be for plaintiff. Held, that while the jury might infer from the instruction that the same degree of care was required of defendant in the construction of its platform and railing as in receiving and carrying a passenger, yet the instruction taken as a whole is not misleading.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 321.*]

5. CARRIERS (§ 286*)—PASSENGERS—CARE REQUIRED IN CONSTRUCTION OF PLATFORMS AND RAILINGS.

It is the duty of a carrier to exercise ordinary and reasonable care in the construction and maintenance of station platforms and railings, including a railing extending from the end of a platform parallel with the track across a viaduct.

6. CARRIERS (§ 348*)—PASSENGERS—ACTIONS FOR INJURIES—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action against a carrier for injuries to a passenger while attempting to board a street car by being caught between the car and a railing extending from the station platform parallel with the track across a viaduct, an instruction requested by defendant that if the jury found that, when the car started, plaintiff was standing on the platform of the viaduct with his hand holding onto the hand rail of the car, intending to board such car, and that after the car started, and while it was in motion, plaintiff attempted to get upon the car and was injured, that their verdict must be for defendant, was properly refused.

7. CARRIERS (§ 348*)—PASSENGERS—ACTIONS FOR INJURIES—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action against a carrier for injuries to a passenger in attempting to board a car, there was evidence that, when the car started, plaintiff was some three feet from it, and did not have hold of it, and that he attempted to board it after it was in motion. Held, that an instruction that if plaintiff attempted to get upon the car while it was in motion he assumed the risk of danger, and that his injuries resulting therefrom were caused by his own neg-

8. CARRIERS (§ 320*)—PASSENGERS—ACTIONS FOR INJURIES—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Evidence, in an action against a carrier for injuries received while attempting to board defendant's car, held sufficient to carry the case to the jury.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jackson County; Jno. G. Park, Judge.

Action by Thomas J. Joyce against the Metropolitan Street Railway Company for injuries received by plaintiff while attempting to board one of defendant's cars. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

The court gave plaintiff's instruction No. 1, that if plaintiff attempted to get upon defendant's car, and that he had a transfer in his possession entitling him to be carried as a passenger on that car, and that it was his intention to tender such transfer to defendant in payment of his fare, and that the car at the time plaintiff boarded the same, or attempted to board the same, was standing at the usual and ordinary place for defendant's cars to stop to receive passengers, the plaintiff was a passenger of defendant.

Instruction No. 2 was that, if the jury find that plaintiff was a passenger on defendant's car, defendant owed plaintiff the duty of exercising the highest reasonable practicable degree of care of very prudent men engaged in the street railway business to carry and receive plaintiff in safety, and any failure on its part was negligence; and that if the jury find that defendant negligently allowed the railing mentioned in the evidence to remain dangerously close to the front of passing cars, and that defendant's servants controlling the car mentioned in the evidence negligently failed to stop the car a reasonably sufficient length of time to permit plaintiff to get upon the car in safety, and negligently started the car forward when they knew or should have known that plaintiff was getting on the car, if he was getting on the same, and that plaintiff was injured thereby, and if plaintiff was at all times exercising ordinary care for his own safety, that is, such care as a reasonably prudent man would exercise under the same circumstances, the verdict should be for plaintiff.

Instruction C requested by defendant and refused was that if the jury find that, when the car started, plaintiff was standing on the platform of the viaduct in question with his hand holding onto the hand rail of the car, intending to board such car, and that after the car started, and while it was in motion, plaintiff attempted to get upon the car and was injured, their verdict must be for defendant.

Ralph S. Latshaw and Henry J. Latshaw, Jr., for appellant. John H. Lucas, for appellee.

GRAVES, J. Plaintiff, an alleged passenger, sues the defendant, a street railway corporation, for alleged negligence by which he was injured. Verdict for the plaintiff signed by nine jurors in sum of $5,000, and judgment accordingly. The accident occurred July 1, 1904, at Eighth and Main streets, in Kansas City, Mo., at which point the defendant maintained an overhead viaduct some 29 feet above Main street on Eighth street. The negligence charged is thus stated in the petition:

"Plaintiff states that on said July 1, 1901, at about 6 p. m. thereof, he was in the act of boarding one of defendant's said Independence avenue cars, east bound, on said viaduct, for the purpose of being carried on said car as a passenger to the eastern part of Kansas City; that while he was thus attempting to get upon said car he was injured, through the carelessness and negligence of defendant as hereinafter set forth.

"Plaintiff states that defendant carelessly and negligently built, maintained, and used said viaduct in a dangerous and defective condition in this, to wit: A certain iron railing or fence was allowed to be and to remain at the eastern end of the platform on said viaduct at or near the place where passengers were in the habit of getting on and off defendant's cars, with defendant's knowledge and consent; that said iron railing or fence was at all of said times by defendant carelessly and negligently allowed to be and remain in a dangerously close position and proximity to the front end of the cars and to the sides of the cars when passing said iron fence or railing, and said iron railing or fence was at all of the said times by defendant carelessly and negligently allowed to be and to remain in such a relative position to said cars that if a person should get between, or be knocked between, or fall between said iron fence and said passing car, there was not room enough for said car to pass without greatly injuring said person, all of which was well known to defendant, or by the exercise of due care and caution could have been known to defendant on July 1, 1904, and for a long time prior thereto.

"Plaintiff states that at the time he was getting on said car, and at the time he was injured as hereinafter stated, he was getting on said car at the usual, ordinary, and customary place for people to get on and off defendant's cars on said viaduct, and at the place where defendant invited the public to get on and off its cars, viz., at or near the eastern end of the platform of said viaduct, and about even with the sidewalk line on the east side of Main street.

"Plaintiff states that said carelessness and negligence of defendant furthermore consisted in this, to wit: That, while plaintiff was in the act of stepping upon said car to become a passenger thereon, defendant carelessly and negligently started said car up, thereby catching plaintiff between said iron fence and said car, thereby injuring him as hereinafter set forth, although the servants and agents in charge of said car knew, or by the exercise of due care and caution could have known, that plaintiff was then and there in the act of stepping upon said car to become a passenger thereon.

"Plaintiff further says that said carelessness and negligence of defendant furthermore consisted in this, to wit: That while plaintiff was in the act of stepping upon said car to become a passenger thereon, at said time and place, defendant's servants and agents then and there in charge of said car knew, or by the exercise of due care and caution could have known, that plaintiff was then and there in the act of getting upon said car as a passenger, and that he had not had reasonable time or opportunity to get safely upon said car.

"Plaintiff further says that said carelessness and negligence of defendant furthermore consisted in this, to wit: Defendant carelessly and negligently started up said car without first closing the doors of said car, or giving plaintiff any other warning of the intention of defendant's said servants and agents to start said car up.

"Plaintiff says that when defendant's servants and agents started said car up, as above set forth, while plaintiff was in the act of getting thereon as a passenger, plaintiff was thrown between and caught between the said car and the aforesaid iron fence or railing, and severely injured as hereinafter set forth.

"Plaintiff further says that, after he was thus caught between said car and said iron fence or railing, said car stopped after it had gone a few feet, and thereafter the servants and agents then and there in charge of said car carelessly and negligently started said car up while plaintiff was still pinioned and held fast between said car and said iron fence or railing, thereby increasing the injuries already inflicted as hereinbefore set forth, through the carelessness and negligence of the defendants as above set forth, although said servants and agents then knew, or by the exercise of due care could have known, that plaintiff then was pinioned and held fast between said car and said fence or railing."

Answer was a general denial, to which was added a plea of contributory negligence. Reply, a general denial. Such are the issues of the pleadings. From this judgment defendant appeals, but not until an adverse ruling upon timely motions for new trial and in arrest of judgment.

One William W. Baum was called and examined as a juror, and upon objection made by the plaintiff was excused, to which action defendant objected. This action of the court is pressed as error, and hence a statement of the facts as to his qualifications becomes necessary. The rejected juror was a contracting freight agent for the Big Four Railroad. As such he solicited business from street railroads and all other corporations or individuals having freight coming from east of the Mississippi river or going east of that river, and had thousands of customers. His territory covered Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma, Indian Territory, and portions of Iowa. Among the larger patrons of his line was the defendant in this case. The juror said, in response to questions by plaintiff's counsel, that he would naturally want to keep in the good graces of defendant; that if he could do the defendant any little favor which would not be against his conscience he would do it; that he would like to have all of defendant's business, and was trying to get it; that everything he could do that was not unfair or dishonest, and which he could conscientiously do to get the business, he would do. The above statements we have drawn largely from the questions of counsel, for the juror usually answered the leading and suggestive questions by a simple "Yes, sir."

Taken by defendant's counsel, he said he had numerous customers in Kansas City; that there were 23 railroads, and some 10 or 12 fast freight lines, in business in Kansas City; that his relations with defendant were the same as with any other customer; that Mr. Burgee was the general Western freight agent for his line, and he was under him. Then he was asked the following questions, which he answered thus: "Q. State, Mr. Baum, whether, if you were selected as a juror in this case, you would render a fair and impartial verdict according to the law, and the evidence, as you should understand it? A. Yes, sir; I would. Q. Have you any prejudice against the plaintiff in this case? A. No, sir. Q. Have you any prejudice in favor of the defendant in this case? A. No, sir."

Then, after stating that he did not then have, and never had had, a pass over the Metropolitan Line, the following occurred: "Mr. Latshaw: We challenge the juror for cause. The Court: You will be excused, Mr. Baum."

To this action of the court defendant excepted, and such is the first question presented by the record. Leaving this point, and going to the locus of the accident, the evidence shows that the Metropolitan had a double-track railway on Eighth street; that it had a viaduct beginning at Walnut street on the east and ending at Wall street on the west, and crossing Main street at a height of about 20 feet above the street; over Main street was a 60-foot platform on this viaduct for the ingress and egress of passengers; to the south and north sides of the viaduct were stairways leading up to these platforms; one platform was to the south of the south track, and the other to the north of the north track; the longest cars were 43 feet, so that they could so stop as to leave both ends open to these platforms for the entering and exit of passengers. There were a number of photographs introduced in evidence, but they do not appear in the abstract. These were intended to represent the conditions at the point of the accident. As best we can gather it, there was at the end of these platforms an iron railing running first north and south from the sides of the viaduct to a point near the railway track, and then others running east and west parallel with the rails for some distance. The purpose of these was to keep a passenger in alighting from the car, should his end of the car fail to stop on the platform, from falling down in the street. The distance from this railing from the side of the car at the point where plaintiff was hurt is differently stated by the witnesses, ranging from $4\frac{1}{2}$ to $10\frac{1}{2}$ inches. Plaintiff in attempting to board a car was caught between the moving car and this railing (made of several $1\frac{1}{2}$ -inch gas pipe) running parallel with the track. As to how he got into the place is described by plaintiff and other passengers.

Plaintiff says that he came from the south on a Main street car until he reached the viaduct on Main and Eighth; that he procured a transfer to take an east-bound car on Eighth street to his home; that he went up the east steps on the south side to the platform, and when an east-bound car came he started to board the same; that he got on the steps, and was about to step to the platform, when the bell rang to start, and about the same time a man and woman came out to get off; that the man said, "Hold on, let me off"; that he looked forward to the motorman and saw that he was not going forward, and then stepped back to let the passengers off; that he held to the hand railing with his back to the west; that after the passengers got off he stepped forward to get in the position he first occupied. From this point on he describes the incident in this language: "And as I turned facing north to step onto the car, the car started, and it struck me right here (indicating on arm), and it throwed me back against somebody that had got off the car, or somebody that was behind me to get on the car, I don't know which, but it caused me to turn, and as I turned I was on the railing; the place was open below; I caught the rail with one hand and throwed my body over it; the car passed, and caught me right through the thighs; they stopped the car, and somebody called for them to go ahead; I was then laying with my head to the west, and my feet to the east on the rail, with my limbs underneath the rail; they started the car again, and I called to them to stop, and others, and they did; then, there was a gentleman came running up the steps with what they call a machinist's wrench, and tried to unbolt the bolts at the head of the viaduct for me to get out, and they was rusted, and he couldn't do nothing with them, and he pounded on it; so somebody came with a crowbar and pried it out and lifted me out, and laid me down on the viaduct."

From this it appears that plaintiff was caught between the car and this iron railing by the onward movement of the car, and that after being caught the car was moved a few feet in an effort to release him, which effort proved futile, and he was pinioned there until a piece of iron piping was obtained with which to release him.

Matthew Hightower, witness for the plaintiff, and who was just behind him when the attempt to board the east end of the car was made, described the accident thus: "Q. Before the accident happened, and before you got on the car, you may tell the court and jury just what led up to the accident—how it happened. A. Well, I came up on the viaduct, and the old gentleman that got hurt, me and him both, was standing at the front end of the car, and he stepped up in the door of the car in the front end, and I stepped up on the step, and there was a lady and gentleman to get off, and the motorman says, 'Wait until these people get off,' so I stepped off— Mr. Loomis (interrupting): We object to that evidence because it is hearsay. (Objection overruled by the court; to which action and ruling of the court the defendant at the time duly excepted.) A. (continuing) And the old gentleman just caught hold of the arm of the car and swung himself around, and then I seen there was a big crowd on the car, and I broke for the back end to get on. Just as I stepped up on the steps of the cars, on the inside, they rang the bell to start; directly I heard some one hollering, 'Hold on, somebody's hurt,' and just looked around, and I seen it was the old gentleman standing in front of me that it caught, and somebody hollered and told them to stop, and they stopped the car, and then some one hollered, 'Back up,' and they backed the car back, and I hollered myself to stop. By that time they got within about four feet of the end of the bannister, and they stopped the car, and then we went and got gas pipe and other prizes, things for to get him out; we could not prize it over far enough to pull him out."

He further said that there was a good big crowd behind him to get on the car; that the conductor was on the rear steps when the bell rang to start; that there was a good big crowd on the car; that the front platform was badly crowded with people when he and plaintiff attempted to get on there, but that they could get on there all right; that when the car started he, the witness, was on the rear vestibule.

Witness M. F. Smith says that he went to the platform to catch a car, and when he got there the plaintiff was pinioned between the car and the railing. He then describes the way in which plaintiff was released, which was by the use of the iron piping as a lever, with which "to pry the railing away from the car so the people outside could lift the man out." This lever was used from the inside of the car through one of the windows.

Charles Bollard, who was on the car, says that he did not see plaintiff until after he was caught between the car and railing; that the conductor was in the rear vestibule; that the car and both vestibules were crowded; that plaintiff was pinioned in there about 20 minutes.

Witness Ira Bruner, at the time a passenger on the car, described the incident in this language: "Q. Now, Mr. Bruner, you may tell these gentlemen here just what you saw there, what happened; tell it in your own way. A. Well, I was on the rear platform on the outside when the— There was a gentleman standing behind me between the controller box and the vestibule; I stood right in front of him: I had my hand on the post, the outside post, and when we reached Eighth street, or Main street, the car stopped for quite a few minutes, and I looked out towards the front end, and I seen Mr. Joyce; he was standing with his left hand on the handhold at the front end; that is, the handhold was on the back part of the front vestibule, and he had his left foot on the step, and there was some ladies or gentlemen got on or off the car, I could not say which; he was standing there, and I turned around, and the conductor gave the signal to go ahead, and I looked around, and the next I looked out and he was against the side of the car, right at the railing, and just at the time he was caught, and I hollered, 'Stop the car, there is a man caught,' and I ran perhaps two or three feet, and he was in between the railing and the car, and they stopped and somebody hollered, 'Go ahead'; and it was several people hollered, 'Go ahead,' and the car started and ran perhaps to about the middle of the car and stopped, and then I got off and several men got off, and we tried to get him out, and there was a carpenter on the car, and he had a hammer, and I took the hammer and I tried to break the head of the screws that held this gas-pipe railing, but could not, and somebody ran and got a piece of gas pipe and put it in between the car and the railing and pried it out so they could get him out."

This witness also says that car and both vestibules were crowded, and that the conductor was in the rear vestibule; that he heard the signal to start, and at the time there were some people standing on the platform; that the car stopped quite a while before it made the first start. In a signed written statement made in response to a letter addressed to the witness by defendant, Mr. Bruner described the accident in this language: "I was on the rear platform of car which stopped on the viaduct at Eighth and Main—Independence avenue car. I looked toward the front of the car and saw the party waiting for some ladies to get on the car. They got on and the car started, and the man tried to get on, but was caught between the side of the car and the railing. I called to the conductor to stop the car, which stopped, but started again, when I called to him again; this time it stopped, and the passengers and others got off and released the man from between the car and railing."

C. T. Murray describes the accident crisply in this language: "I was on an Independence avenue car, and the signal for the car to go ahead, and there was a commotion, and somebody hollered a man got hurt, and the car was stopped, and in about half a minute there was another signal to go ahead, and they went ahead about 10 feet, I should judge, and they stopped again; I looked out the window, and right below me I saw a man wedged in between the iron railing and the side of the car, the iron frame of the car; there was a railing there, I should judge, about an inch and a half gas pipe, and he was caught in between that and the car; I then tried to get somebody to get a bar to pry him out; finally somebody brought the bar and we pried him out, and the car went ahead. That's about all I know of the case." This witness, who was, and for years had been, in the machinery business, was used as an expert on the manner in which the railing was constructed. His testimony in this regard is urged as error, and this portion of his testimony we will state under that subject in the opinion.

By W. A. Satterlee, assistant general manager of the defendant, the plaintiff got a good many details as to dimensions of cars, their construction, the construction of the viaduct and the platforms thereon, as well as the railings used thereon, and the purpose of such.

By Dr. Eubank, the attending physician, as well as one of the city physicians, the character of the injuries were shown. These were likewise shown by plaintiff and some of the other witnesses. Such was the plaintiff's case, at the end of which defendant interposed a demurrer to the testimony, which was overruled, the defendant excepting.

The evidence for the defendant tended to show that the plaintiff was injured in attempting to board a moving car.

By Emil Backstrom, the conductor in charge of the car which injured the plaintiff, it was shown that he was at the rear vestibule of the car assisting passengers to alight and enter; that the car was crowded, all seats taken, aisles full, and both vestibules crowded; that at the viaduct crossing in question some 12 or 15 people got off and as many got on, with still others waiting on the platform; that he stopped the car about two minutes; that before he signaled the car to start he looked up the side of the car, and, seeing no one attempting to get on, gave the signals—two bells—to start; that plaintiff had ridden with him before, and when he looked forward he saw him standing some three feet from the car; that the car started upon his signals, and had run about half its length when he heard some one holler; that upon looking out as quickly as he could he saw the plaintiff pinioned between the car and the railing. He also says the car did not move backward, but moved forward a few inches, after the plaintiff was caught.

Hugh Parks, a young man attending the high school, was on the viaduct, and as a witness testified: That he was standing on the platform of the viaduct, intending to take the car by which plaintiff was injured; that he run up to the front vestibule to get on, but the car was so crowded that he did not attempt it; that plaintiff stepped off the car to let some one get off, and stepped two or three feet away, but held to the bar or handhold; that he (witness) turned to look west for another car, and then turned again toward the front vestibule, and about that time the man was trying to get on, and was dragged between the car and the railing whilst the car was in motion; that the car was in motion when the plaintiff tried to get on it; that the car and vestibules were loaded full.

C. E. Waldron, a grain merchant, says: That he boarded the car some three blocks to the west of Eighth and Main, at Wyandotte street; that he was standing next to the motorman, and facing east; that to his right was a Mr. Miller, a friend of his; that Miller faced the rear of the car to the west; that the car remained standing rather long, longer than usual; that the bell rang to start, and some people started to get off, and the car stopped; that these people got off, and the bell was sounded, and the car again started; that when these people got off and the second bell given there was a scrambling by people to get back on; that the car and front vestibule was crowded; that the car was not started until all those holding to the car were on it; that after it started Miller cried out that a man had been caught between the car and railing; that he saw no one attempting to get on as the car started; that the front platform was so crowded that he could not "twist around"; that he saw several people get off the car to let those going out get off, but could not say whether plaintiff was one of them.

Charles H. McKee, cashier of Home Telephone Company, testified in behalf of defendant to this effect: That he had been subpoenaed by plaintiff, but not used; that at the time of the accident he was on the step of the car at the front platform or vestibule; that he got on at Eighth and Main; that as he got on the viaduct the car had started and the conductor stopped it, as some people wanted to get off, and he, witness, started to run to catch the car, but when he saw the crowded condition of car stopped; that as the car stopped he again started to the front end, when a man and a woman and perhaps a little baby got off; that there was a man standing on the step of the car, who got off to let these parties out; that he (witness) stepped around in front of him, and as the car started caught the front handhold and stepped on the car just as it pulled out; that just as he got on the car he looked back and saw this man with one hand on the back handhold take two steps, and witness then got off the step to the platform and saw no more; that at this time the car was in motion, and was in motion when he got on it; that the platform was very much crowded.

O. G. Miller, superintendent of the beef-house of the Armour Packing Company, testified: That he was on the platform of front vestibule at time of accident, having boarded the car at Union Depot; when car reached Eighth and Main it was very much crowded; that he was facing west; that there was one man between him and the south edge of the vestibule; that the vestibule was jammed full; that he was talking to Waldron; that after the car started he saw two men make a start for the car; that he was noticing this old gentleman, and felt that he was going to get hurt; that he next heard the old man holler; that he noticed the man in front of him get on, and then he noticed the old man, the plaintiff, start for the car while the car was in motion.

The above is a fair synopsis of the defendant's evidence.

1. W. W. Baum was a competent juror under the evidence in this case. Glasgow v. Railroad, 191 Mo., loc. cit. 355, 89 S. W. 915. The juror was frank in his statement of his connection with defendant. Defendant was his customer as much as an extensive farmer and stock raiser might be a customer of a merchant. Merchants as a rule would feel as kindly toward their customers as did this juror toward his customer, the defendant. Merchants would be as anxious to extend to their customers such favors as in good conscience they could, and nothing more is found in the record as to this juror. Merchants would try in every way, within reasonable, honorable, and proper bounds, to secure all of the trade of their respective customers, and nothing further can be charged to this juror under the evidence. No honorable merchant, if examined as a juror in a case wherein one of his customers was a party, would answer otherwise than did this juror, yet where is the trial court that has sustained a challenge for cause in a case of that kind? Our reading of the books has not disclosed it. It remains for a corporation case to furnish a precedent and example. The sustaining of this challenge for cause was error. Not only so, but it goes beyond what we conceive to be sound judicial discretion. We are not unmindful of the fact that a sound judicial discretion is lodged in trial courts in the matter of selecting jurors, but there is likewise a limit to sound judicial discretion. In this case the limit was reached and passed. He was challenged for cause and the challenge sustained, simply because, as indicated by the record, he was in the employ of a corporation of which the defendant, through the efforts of the juror, or otherwise, was a customer. We cannot lend our assent to the proposition that this was the exercise of sound judicial discretion.

2. Part of the testimony of witness C. T. Murray is challenged by the defendant. Murray for 30 years had been engaged in the machinery business. He said that he had built several railings for bridges and for stairways, and things of that kind; that he had been pretty much all over the United States, "from Maine to California, from Savannah to Minneapolis," and in practically all of the large cities of the United States; that he had observed the construction of railings and guards along the sides of elevated street car tracks in New York and Chicago; that he had been on four different elevated lines in Chicago, and perhaps every line in New York City; that he had been on the elevated line in Kansas City which runs over to Kansas City, Kan.; that he had noticed the approaches to the cars, the railings, or whatever was used to prevent passengers from falling off of the structure.

Divers and pointed objections were made by counsel for the defendant whilst the above facts were being brought out. Finally, the court outlines certain views, which are best expressed in the language of the record:

"The Court: I will let him state what is the uniform distance, if there is any uniform distance, of guard railings from tracks at points close to arriving and stopping places, but he cannot say what he thinks is right, because he is not qualified." After an objection again: "The Court (interrupting): Well, I have been all over that exact question, Mr. Loomis."

This being followed by an explanation and suggestion by counsel, and then the record runs:

"The Court: I have found that it did in a certain case to my very great sorrow. You must first prove that there is a uniform distance observed by this witness, before I will let him state what that distance is. Mr.

Latschaw: Or construction? The Court: Yes, sir. Mr. Loomis: No, let the inquiry be limited to what the court says. The Court: I will not let specific instances go before the jury on direct examination, but I will let these two things go before the jury; if this witness is advised, or if it be a fact that there is a uniform distance for these guard rails to be used from the track rails, or that there is a uniform method of construction. Now, bear that in mind. Mr. Loomis: On that I desire to make the specific objection that the witness is not shown to have any knowledge sufficient to justify him in expressing an opinion as an expert on either of those issues. (Objection overruled by the court; to which action and ruling of the court the defendant at the time duly excepted.) Q. I will ask you the question in this form, Mr. Murray, whether or not on July 1, 1904, and about that time, there was a uniform construction for guard rails started and stopped for the discharge and receipt of passengers, used and considered for the purpose of keeping passengers on said platform from falling off of the elevated structure. The court: According to your observation. Q. (continuing). According to your observation. Mr. Loomis: The defendant objects to that question because it is not limited to the time nor place of the accident in question, and impliedly calls for the opinion and conclusion of the witness as to what constitutes similar conditions, and calls for his opinion and conclusion upon an issue of fact which is not the proper subject of opinion evidence, and upon which he has not shown himself competent or qualified to express an opinion. (Objection overruled by the court; to which action and ruling of the court the defendant at the time duly excepted.) A. Now, do I understand you want me to express whether— (Question read by the reporter.) A. (continuing). I want to know if I must express an opinion of exactly like where this happened, or whether it is the general construction of elevated railroads, elevated stations? The Court: The question is, Mr. Murray, what was the general construction, if there was a plan of general construction of guard rails and viaducts on which street car traffic passed. A. I should say there was. Mr. Loomis: We renew the objection, your honor, to that question, make the same objection to that question as to the former question, and the further objection that it calls for his opinion and conclusion of what is general construction, and assumes there was a uniform construction, of which there is no evidence. (Objection overruled by the court; to which action and ruling of the court the defendant at the time duly excepted.) The Court: I don't want your opinion, Mr. Murray; what we want is your observation. A. Yes, sir, there is. Mr. Loomis: We make the same objection. (Objection overruled by the court; to which action and ruling of the court the defendant at the time duly excepted.) Q. Now, you may state, Mr. Murray, what that uniform construction was at that time, under those conditions that I have named in the former question. Mr. Loomis: We make the same objection. (Objection overruled by the court; to which action and ruling of the court the defendant at the time duly excepted.) A. The construction that I have always seen has been to run the rail out to the edge of the platform, and not run anything beyond that, so that there was no chance to get caught in beyond the platform, beyond the rail. Mr. Loomis: We move to strike out the answer for the same reason, and for the further reason that the witness is not shown to possess any knowledge as an expert railroad man as to what constitutes proper construction of a railroad structure. The Court: That part of the answer in which the witness says there is no chance for passengers to fall off, or words to that effect, is stricken out; the rest of the answer may stay in. (To which action and ruling of the court the defendant at the time duly excepted.) Q. I will ask you, Mr. Murray, to explain in detail that construction, so the jury will understand it. Mr. Loomis: We object to that for the same reasons, and for the further reason that it is not limited to the construction of other railroad stations at the time or the same locality in which the accident occurred. The Court: The objection is overruled; answer, Mr. Murray. (To which action and ruling of the court the defendant at the time excepted.) A. I would simply state that this platform and the rail— Here is the car track (indicating), and there is nothing on either side of it; that is the rail; there is no projection on this rail; in other words, there is no projection like that (indicating). For instance, if this was the platform, there is no projection like this in between the car and platform; it is simply, that is the construction right there (indicating). This is the platform, and there is no rail extending clear up to the car. The Court: The rail extends clear up to the car. A. It practically does, as close as it can be got up to the car, and then there is no projection beyond the railing outside of the platform. The Court: Lengthwise of the track? A. Lengthwise of the track. Q. Where does your track go? A. The track goes right along here; this is the track right along there. This is the platform."

Being taken on cross-examination, on the point involved, the witness said: That he had never built railroads; that he had never had anything to do with the construction of elevated stations; that he had never had anything to do with the operation of railroads or street railroads over elevated stations; that he was never engaged in the business of building elevated structures or stations for railroads operating on elevated structures; that he was in the machinery business; that he had never drawn plans for such structures.

Now, going to the evidence of this witness as finally admitted, as best we can analyze it, the sum and substance is that he had observed other structures; that in other such structures there was simply a railing, running at right angles with the track, from the outside of the viaduct to a point near the rail, but that there was no railing running from this railing parallel with the track; that there was a general or uniform plan of construction of guard rails and viaducts upon which street car traffic is usually done; this general plan he describes to the jury in the quoted evidence above. Was there error in this? This witness does not testify as an expert in the broad sense of the term, although both plaintiff and defendant treat his testimony as such in the briefs. Nor was he permitted to express but one opinion, and that was as to there being a generally used plan for the construction of railings upon elevated structures used by street railways. This plan he was permitted to and did describe to the jury. This knowledge, if knowledge it can be called, was such as the witness had obtained by observation. The sum of the charge in the petition on this point was that the railing in question was negligently placed in the beginning too close to the railway track, and later negligently maintained too close to the track. What, then, was the purpose of this evidence? Evidently to show that there was a general plan for the construction of guard rails at elevated stations, and leave the jury to infer that, inasmuch as the one in question was not so constructed, it was negligently constructed. Was such testimony, introduced and admitted for this evident purpose, competent? To answer this question we must bear in mind just what was the object of the testimony. The object was to show that this railing running parallel with the track was negligently placed too close to the track and too close to the side of a car standing thereon. There is nothing difficult of description here. The platform could be and was accurately described; the railing could be and was accurately described; the distance between the railing and the side of a car standing on the track was given to the jury. There is not a thing which was not easily susceptible of accurate description, and in this case all things were accurately described, and measurements and distances shown. Under such circumstances the jury should be left to draw the conclusion of negligence or no negligence from the facts of the case, without being directed to details of the construction of railings in New York, Chicago, or elsewhere. Because railings were negligently or not negligently put up elsewhere, does not show that this one was negligently placed too close to the side of a moving car. We doubt the competency of this witness to express an opinion as to whether or not there was a general plan followed in the construction of railings at elevated stations, but conceding his competency, and conceding the general plan, it does not follow that such is competent evidence to show a negligent structure here. A structure entirely different from a general plan may be entirely safe. Indeed, a structure different from that in general use may be even safer and better than the one in general use. The question is, was the structure under consideration negligently constructed and negligently permitted to remain? The only defect charged is that it was placed too close to the track and thereby too close to a moving car, or, broadening a little, that the railing should not have to have been there at all. With every fact of easy description, this was a question solely for the jury upon the peculiar facts concerning this structure.

Under the head of Evidence of Negligence, in 17 Cyc. p. 56, it is said: "The issue of negligence can in most cases well be determined by the judgment of a jury, and the inference, conclusion, or judgment of witnesses is rejected. This rule has been applied, for example to the question whether a bridge, road, roadway, sidewalk, or track, or other place, machinery, mechanical appliance, rate of speed, situation, or other thing or collection or combination of things is safe or dangerous. The rule has also been applied to the question whether certain conduct of a person was careful or careless. And it has been applied to other questions as to conduct; as whether it was cautious, dangerous, 'in the line of duty,' necessary, negligent, proper, prudent, reasonable, professionally skillful, safe, usual or unusual, and whether such conduct constituted good management or omitted anything. The exclusion is subject to the proviso that the material facts can be placed before the jury."

And to the same effect is section 7747 of Thompson on Negligence: "It may be stated as a general rule that, if the facts of any particular inquiry can be so placed before the jury that, as men of ordinary intelligence, they can fully understand the matter and draw the proper inferences and conclusions therefrom, the opinions and conclusions of a witness, whether an expert or nonexpert, should not be received. In conformity with this rule a witness will not be allowed to state his opinion as to whether an act was carefully or negligently done, or whether the injured party was acting within the line of his duty at the time of receiving an injury, nor as to the safety of a particular appliance or place of work, where the same can be described and easily understood, nor as to whether a highway was safe, or defective or dangerous, at the place where an accident happened, nor what cause or occasion the witness saw for the accident, nor as to matters relating the sufficiency of a highway, as this is, in general, a question of fact merely, and not of science or skill. In like manner, where the question was as to whether the plaintiff had been guilty of contributory negligence, it was held improper to permit the plaintiff to testify as to what he thought about the danger of doing what he did."

This evidence of Murray's upon this question was extraneous matter, and its admission should have been refused. With conditions of easy description and reproduction before the jury, and where the material facts can be placed before the jury, no room is left for expert or other opinion evidence. Every material fact in this case could easily be placed before the jury, and was placed before the jury. Under the facts of this case there was no place for even opinion testimony of the highest character, much less of the character here introduced. Judge Thompson, in a long note to section 7747, supra, has collected all the cases, and further notice of them need not here be taken.

But going a step further. This evidence could have been introduced but for the one purpose, i. e., that the jury might infer negligence, because this platform did not have its railings adjusted as other railway companies had adjusted their railings upon elevated platforms.

In the case of Dougherty v. Rapid Transit Company, 128 Mo., loc. cit. 37, 30 S. W. 317, 49 Am. St. Rep. 536, the court had under consideration the following part of an instruction: "And the jury are further instructed that if the defendant provided and used such platform steps to enable the passengers to alight as were ordinarily provided for similar cars on similar roads, then in that respect it has satisfied the requirements of the law."

Judge Robinson, in discussing the matter, said: "The faulty portion of the instruction cannot be justified upon any theory of law; it practically declares that if the platform steps used by defendant at the place and time in question were such as 'were ordinarily provided for similar cars on similar roads,' without regard to the question as to whether the appliance was reasonably safe, dangerous, or otherwise, then plaintiff cannot recover. The action of the lower court in promptly repudiating its error is highly commendable. It is not necessary to set out the evidence or consider the other points made. This error alone justified the court's action. The issue was not what platform steps are ordinarily provided for similar cars on similar roads, but whether the platform steps of this particular road at the time when plaintiff was injured were in a safe condition. The defendant cannot excuse itself from the obligation to furnish its passengers with reasonably safe appliances for getting in or out of its cars by showing that the appliances it had adopted had been adopted and used by other railroads engaged in a similar work. No amount of elaboration would make the point any plainer or the error in giving the instruction any less."

And so in the case at bar, the question is whether or not there was negligence in having the railing in question where it was, and not how other companies placed their railings. These other companies might have been negligent—a collateral matter wholly foreign to the case on trial.

So, too, Judge Gantt, in a case discussing the location of a railing at an elevated station, Barth v. Ry., 142 Mo., loc. cit. 555, 44 S. W. 783, said: "What is a reasonable distance is a question of fact for the jury under the evidence in this case. It was not essential to the plaintiff's recovery that she should prove what space ordinarily is left between the cars and railing by other similar companies. Elevated railroads are comparatively new in this country, and plaintiff might be at a loss to establish a custom; but if defendant had shown, which it did not, that this was the usual distance allowed by other roads of like character, this would not have prevented the jury finding that it was negligence in this case. The mere facts that other roads had been equally negligent could not be a defense to the action. Dougherty v. Rapid Trans. Ry., 128 Mo. 33, 30 S. W. 317, 49 Am. St. Rep. 536, and cases cited."

Then we say that if proof that a railing is placed as other railroads have usually placed the same does not relieve the defendant of the charge of negligence, as is held supra, and rightly held, then, placing the shoe upon the other foot, proof that other railroads have usually placed their railing differently does not convict the defendant of negligence. It is well said by Judge Gantt: "What is a reasonable distance is a question of fact for the jury under the evidence in this cause." The italicizing of the words quoted is our act. It is peculiarly the province of the jury to pronounce negligence or no negligence under the facts of this case, when all facts can be clearly presented to the jury. We conclude that there was error in admitting this evidence.

3. Defendant makes divers thrusts at plaintiff's instruction No. 1. Among other things, it charges that undue prominence is given in the instruction to the fact that plaintiff had a transfer ticket. The instruction is one which states certain facts, and concludes with the statement that if the jury found those facts it would find that the plaintiff was a passenger under the law. One of the facts to be found and somewhat emphasized in the instruction is, the plaintiff had a transfer ticket and intended to surrender the same in payment of his fare. The instruction is much longer than necessary. Nor was it necessary to have said anything about the transfer ticket, although the evidence showed he had one. When the car stopped to receive passengers, as it did, and when the plaintiff accepted the invitation thus extended by the company in stopping the car, by starting to board the same, as he said he did, then he was as fully a passenger as he would have been had he possessed a thousand tickets. Cash in his pocket was the same as a transfer ticket, yet we would not instruct that a jury should find that he had cash in his pocket. Nor was there any good reason for mentioning the matter of a transfer ticket. But we hardly think there was error in the instruction as given; at least, not prejudicial error.

Instruction No. 2 for plaintiff given by the court of its own motion is criticised, but we think unjustly so. It would serve no good purpose to reproduce the entire instruction, which at length covers the negligence charged in the petition. The only part to which any objection is at all tenable is found in the first two paragraphs. This might be misleading as to the degree of care required of defendant in the construction of its platform. The quantum of care for receiving and carrying a passenger is properly outlined, but following that is the question of the negligent construction of the railing on the platform. A jury might get the idea that the same degree of care was required of defendant in the construction of its platform and railing as in receiving on the car and the carrying of the passenger. As to this the law does not so read. The platform doctrine is fully discussed in 4 Elliott on Railroads, § 1590, which reads: "A railroad company is under duty to exercise ordinary and reasonable care to so construct and maintain station buildings, or depots and appurtenances, that they shall be safe for use by passengers. The duty respecting the construction and maintenance of station buildings is not so rigorous as that imposed upon railroad carriers in relation to roadbeds, tracks, cars, appliances, and the like. Some of the cases seem to lose sight of the difference between the duty respecting station buildings and that respecting means and modes of conveyances, but the well-reasoned cases recognize the distinction, and affirm that a railroad company that exercises ordinary care in constructing and maintaining station buildings and appurtenances in a reasonably safe condition for use is not guilty of negligence. There is really no valid reason why a railroad company should be held to a higher degree of care in maintaining its station buildings than that to which an individual owner of buildings used for ordinary business purposes is held. The reasoning of the cases which laid the foundation for the strict American doctrine as to the degree of care required of carriers using steam as a motive power cannot, it is obvious, have any application to buildings and structures prepared for the use of travelers. Modes and means of conveyances employed by railroad companies do require 'powerful and dangerous agencies,' but buildings and structures in themselves neither require the employment of 'dangerous and powerful agencies' nor possess unusual elements of danger. The duty to exercise ordinary care to maintain station buildings and appurtenances in a reasonably safe condition extends to platforms, approaches, urinals, and the like." Nor is the railing here involved an appliance, but, on the other hand, is a part and parcel of the platform. Yet we think the first clause of the instruction is not so likely to be confounded with the second clause as to make it misleading, and defendant could have obviated all trouble by asking an instruction outlining the rule of law as to the degree of care required in the construction of platforms.

4. It is next urged that there was error in refusing instructions C, E, and F, offered by defendant. Of these instructions, C, as worded, was properly refused. Instruction F contained, although in shorter form, the idea expressed in instruction E. Instruction E reads: "The court instructs the jury that the plaintiff had no right to get upon or attempt to go upon the car in question after it had started and while it was in motion, and if he did so he thereby assumed all risk of danger caused thereby; and if you believe and find from the evidence that after the car had started, and while it was in motion, plaintiff attempted to get upon the car, and was struck or thrown down and injured by the motion of the car, then you are instructed that his injuries, if any, were caused by his own fault and negligence, and you must find your verdict for the defendant." There is evidence in behalf of defendant to the effect that, when this car started, the plaintiff was some three feet from it and did not have hold of it, and that he attempted to board it after it was in motion. The evidence of the conductor and some others tended to show this fact. This instruction was based upon that evidence, and was one of defendant's theories of defense. This theory was not squarely presented in any instruction given, and was a theory under the evidence which should have been presented to the jury. The court erred in refusing the instruction. Whilst in all cases and as a general proposition this instruction might not be good, and probably would not be good, but under the facts of this case, with the railing in plain view, it is good.

5. Defendant also contends that its demurrer to the evidence should have been sustained. To this we cannot assent. We have set out the evidence quite fully, because of this contention. We are of opinion that there is sufficient evidence to carry this case to the jury for the plaintiff. This contention will be overruled.

6. That Baum was a competent juror, and that the court transgressed the bonds of judicial discretion in sustaining a challenge for cause, we have no question. That such action tended to give the plaintiff the benefit of four peremptory challenges, when in law he is only entitled to three, must be conceded, but whether defendant suffered injury thereby is another question. If this matter stood alone under our cases, we would not say the judgment should be reversed, but, when taken with other errors hereinabove pointed out, we think the cause should be reversed and remanded, to be retried in accordance with the views herein expressed, and it is so ordered.

LAMM, P. J., and VALLIANT, J., concur in toto. WOODSON, J., concurs in result, and in all the opinion except what is said as to the competency of the juror.

WELLMAN v. METROPOLITAN ST. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 1.
March 31, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1001*)—VERDICT—CONCLUSIVENESS.

A verdict supported by evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

2. CARRIERS (§ 320*)—INJURIES TO PASSENGERS—EVIDENCE.

Evidence, in an action against a carrier for injuries to a passenger while attempting to board a street car by the sudden starting of the car, held to require the submission of the case to the jury.

3. CARRIERS (§ 287*)—STREET RAILROADS—PASSENGERS.

Where a person, while exercising reasonable care, was injured while boarding a street car by the sudden starting of the car, and the servants in charge of the car failed to exercise the highest practical degree of care in starting the car, the street railway company was liable for the injuries sustained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1119; Dec. Dig. § 287.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1066*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ERRONEOUS INSTRUCTIONS.

The giving of an abstract instruction is not ground for reversal, where the instructions, when read together, could not have worked prejudicially to the party complaining.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4220; Dec. Dig. § 1066.*]

5. DAMAGES (§ 216*)—PERSONAL INJURIES—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where, in an action for personal injuries, the court charged that the jury should not allow plaintiff any sum for any injury due to any other cause than the accident complained of, an instruction that the jury in assessing the damages should take into consideration plaintiff's age and condition, the physical injuries inflicted, bodily and mental pain suffered, and any damages which would in the future reasonably result to her as the direct result of the injuries, was not erroneous as authorizing the jury in assessing damages to take into consideration plaintiff's prior diseased condition.

6. TRIAL (§ 133*)—ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL—ACTION OF COURT.

The misconduct of counsel for plaintiff in stating to the jury, as to the statement of a third person in an application for a continuance that "this paper representative" of the third person was filed in the case as an affidavit for continuance, and inquiring who the third person was who was not present for cross-examination, was not ground for reversal, where the court stopped counsel and admonished him that his language was improper, and where counsel withdrew the statement and asked the jury not to consider it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 316; Dec. Dig. § 133.*]

7. EVIDENCE (§ 471*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—EFFECT OF BLOWS.

Where the court, jury, and counsel knew that witnesses were testifying as to the case on trial, the action of the court in permitting witnesses to express opinions as to the effect of blows on the body, without confining them to the case under consideration, was not erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2150; Dec. Dig. § 471.*]

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 699*)—INSTRUCTIONS—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

An instruction not incorporated in the bill of exceptions cannot be considered on appeal.

9. DAMAGES (§ 185*)—PERSONAL INJURIES—EVIDENCE.

Where the evidence of personal injuries rests largely in the mind and conscience of the person injured, the court must closely scrutinize all phases of the claims; and where the record shows that the jury misunderstood the evidence or ignored the same, or did not give effect to the greater weight thereof, or returned a verdict for an excessive amount, the court must correct the error.

10. DAMAGES (§ 132*)—PERSONAL INJURIES—EXCESSIVE DAMAGES.

Plaintiff, while attempting to board a street car suddenly starting, was injured by the conductor pulling her against the end of the slowly moving car. She sought to show that the injuries caused female trouble. There was evidence that she had suffered from similar trouble prior to the accident, and her evidence that she had fully recovered therefrom prior to the accident was contradicted. Held, that a verdict for $7,000 was excessive, and would be reduced to $2,500.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jackson County; W. B. Teasdale, Judge.

Action by Ada Wellman against the Metropolitan Street Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Modified and affirmed.

This suit was begun in the circuit court of Jackson county by the plaintiff against the defendant to recover the sum of $15,000 damages for alleged injuries received by her, caused through the alleged negligence of defendant by prematurely starting one of its cars while she was in the act of boarding the same for the purpose of becoming a passenger thereon. The trial resulted in a verdict and judgment for the plaintiff in the sum of $7,000. From that judgment defendant duly appealed to this court.

The petition, omitting formal parts, upon which the case was tried, reads as follows:

"Plaintiff, for her cause of action against defendant, says that now and at all of the times hereinafter mentioned defendant was a corporation duly organized and existing according to law and engaged as a common carrier of passengers for hire, operating lines of street railway in and upon the streets of Kansas City, Mo., and vicinity. Among its said lines is and was at all of the times herein referred to a line called the 'Vine Street Line,' running upon Woodland avenue from a point north of Thirty-Ninth street to Forty-Third street, all being public streets in Kansas City, Mo. On October 30, 1904, plaintiff attempted to board one of defendant's south-bound cars on said Vine street line at Thirty-Ninth street and Woodland avenue for the purpose of taking passage thereon, said car being stopped at that point for the purpose of receiving and discharging passengers. While plaintiff was in the act of getting upon said car, and while she was in a position of peril, all of which was known or by the exercise of due care should have been known to defendant, defendant negligently started said car, and plaintiff was, by the negligent starting of said car, and by the negligent act of defendant's conductor in trying to catch plaintiff as the result of said negligent starting of said car, thrown against parts of said car, and to the ground, and greatly injured. As the result of said negligence plaintiff received a severe shock to her nerves and nervous system, her legs were bruised, cut, and injured from below her knees to her ankles; her back and shoulders were bruised, sprained, and injured; her left side was bruised and injured; there was a rupture or breaking of some part of the abdominal wall; and she received severe internal injuries, particularly in the pelvic region, causing her to have peritonitis, and causing an adhesion of parts of her uterus, ovaries, and fallopian tubes to each other and to the bowels and pelvic and abdominal walls; causing the ovaries to be enlarged and made sore, producing abscesses therein and about the fallopian tubes; causing prolapsus and retroflexion of the uterus; causing her pains in said affected parts, and in her head, back, shoulder, and legs. Said injuries are permanent, and plaintiff has suffered and will continue to suffer therefrom great bodily pain and mental anguish. By reason of said injuries plaintiff has been rendered an invalid, and she will continue to be such as long as she lives, her ability to bear children has been destroyed, and her period of life has been greatly shortened. Plaintiff has been confined to her bed, and will be further confined to her bed, as the result of said injuries. When plaintiff is able to get about she is only able to do so with great difficulty, and she has to limp, as the result of her injuries. As the result of said injuries, plaintiff has become and will continue to be afflicted with leucorrhœa. Plaintiff says that by reason of said injuries she has been damaged in the sum of $15,000; wherefore, plaintiff prays judgment against said defendant for said sum of $15,000 and costs of suit."

The answer contains a general denial and a plea of contributory negligence.

Plaintiff's evidence tended to show that on October 30, 1904, defendant was operating a street railway system in Kansas City, Mo.; among its lines was the Vine street electric line, which in a part of its course ran north and south along Woodland avenue from a point north of Thirty-Third street to Forty-Third street on the south. The numbered streets in Kansas City run east and west. Woodland avenue runs north and south. That on the day in question plaintiff attempted to take passage on a south-bound car at Thirty-Ninth street. She had stood near the usual stopping place at the intersection of said streets while the car was approaching from about Thirty-Third street and until it reached Thirty-Ninth street. As the car reached Thirty-Ninth street it stopped and discharged several passengers. The car was stopped so that the front end was even with the plaintiff. It was necessary for her to go to the rear of the car to get upon the same. Up to this point the testimony of the plaintiff and defendant is substantially the same. There were only four witnesses who testified with reference to the accident, three of whom claimed to have seen the accident. The plaintiff was the only witness on her own behalf on this issue. The plaintiff testified that, as soon as the car came to a stop, she immediately started to the rear and reached there before the last passenger had alighted, and while the car was still standing she attempted to get upon it, the car started, and she was thrown off of her balance; the conductor attempted to catch her, and in so doing jerked her toward him to keep her from falling. As the result of the starting of the car and this act of the conductor, she was thrown against parts of the car and to the ground, causing her to be bruised about her shoulder and hip, producing sharp, cutting pains in the left side of her abdomen, scraping her legs, and causing her to fall in a heap.

Plaintiff also introduced evidence tending to prove the allegations of the petition regarding the injuries she sustained in consequence of the accident, and that they were of a serious character: "Q. Now, did you ever have any sickness prior to the troubles that you now complain of? A. Yes. Q. Were you ever in the hospital? A. Yes, sir. Q. What hospital? A. The Women's and Children's Hospital. Q. When was that? A.

That was in 1903, I think in July of 1903. Q. What was the trouble then? Tell the jury what the difficulty was? A. Well, at the birth of one of my children I had received a laceration, and I had gone there to have that repaired. Q. You went there to have it— A. Have it repaired. Q. Have it treated? A. Have some stitches taken. Q. Was that the result of the birth of your second or third child, or the first child? A. The first child. Q. These lacerations had remained there for a number of years, then? A. Yes, sir. Q. What year had your second and third child— Were they dead at that time? A. Yes, sir. Q. How? A. Yes, sir. Q. When did you have the third birth? A. I believe in the summer of 1903 or 1902. Q. 1902? A. Yes, sir. Q. Had you convalesced and gotten up from the sickness of that. A. Yes, sir. Q. Did the child die in childbirth? A. No, sir. Q. What was the trouble with the child? A. Negligence on the part of the nurse. Q. How old was it when it died? A. About six weeks old. Q. Did any complication set in in reference to the birth of that child? A. No, sir. Q. Who was the doctor that took that child from you? A. Dr. J. E. Donaldson. Q. Now, in the following July, as I understand you, you went to the Women's and Children's Hospital? A. Yes, sir. Q. And was there operated on for a lacerated womb trouble? A. Yes, sir. Q. How long were you in the hospital? A. I think about three weeks. Q. Then did you return to your home? A. Yes, sir. Q. What was the condition of your health and your general condition after you got out of the hospital and had convalesced from the operation that you had gone through? A. Why, I was well. Q. Did you work after that? Did you get out and sew, do your household work? A. Yes, sir. Q. Did you have any servants to assist you in your household duties? A. No, sir. Q. You then had one child? A. Yes, sir. Q. Your family consisted of your husband, your child, and yourself? A. Yes, sir. Q. Did you have any trouble—any trouble with your ovaries or anything of that kind during any of your life up to the time that that condition developed after this accident? A. No, sir."

To maintain the issues upon its part, defendant offered the following witnesses, whose testimony follows their respective names:

Emil Duffen testified that he was the conductor in charge of defendant's car at the time and place of alleged injury to plaintiff, and was working as an extra man on said date. He worked on other lines as well as on the one where the accident occurred. His number on the day of accident was 722, and the name of his motorman was George Butler. The day of alleged accident was Sunday, October 30, 1904. He said they stopped at the junction of Thirty-Ninth and Woodland avenue, to let off some women and children as passengers. "Q. After these women and children that you speak of had gotten off the car, what, if anything, did you do towards starting the car up? A. Why, when they got off I gave the motorman two bells to go ahead. Q. At the time you gave the motorman two bells to go ahead, state whether or not there was any one there at the steps of the car in sight, standing there to get on the car? A. No, sir. I saw no one. Q. Now, after starting your car up, did you see any one there? A. Why, just as I started, the car started; yes, sir. Q. Who did you see there then? A. Why, a lady. Q. What, if anything, did she do? A. Why, she came rushing towards the car as if she wanted to get on. Q. What did you do then? A. I drew up and gave the motorman a bell to stop. Q. And what did she do, if anything, before the car stopped? A. Why, as well as I can recollect, she grabbed hold of the rear end of the car like, and kind of walked a step or two along with the car as it moved. Q. After you started up the car, did it afterwards come to a stop? A. Yes, sir. Q. How far did it run from the time—about how far did it run from the time, that you started the car up until— A. About five or six feet, I should judge. Q. Then what happened? A. Why, the motorman stopped, and this lady got on the car and rode out to the end of the line. Q. Now, I will ask you while your car was stopped there, before you had started up at all, if this lady was standing there close to the step and stepped up onto the step with one foot, and then the car started up, and you tried to catch her and pull her onto the car, but that she fell down and off, and fell down or sat down or squatted down there in the street? A. No, sir. Q. Now, after she got on the car and you started up the car then, and went on out to the end of the line, do you know where she got off? A. Why, she got off at the end of the line. Q. I will ask you if at any time on the car she complained to you of being hurt in any way? A. No, sir. Q. Did you take her name at the time? A. No, sir. Q. I will ask you if you remember what part of the car she sat in after getting in the car? A. Why, she sat in the rear end, I think. Q. And, when she got off of the car, which way did she go in getting off of the car? A. She went to the front end to get off, the south end there then. Q. What, if any, complaint did she make to you on the car? A. No, sir; she did not make any complaint. Q. State whether or not she complained to you about being hurt by your car starting up too quick? A. No, sir."

Cross-examination:

Witness did not have a personal recollection as to which side of the street his car stopped on at time of accident. "Q. You don't remember now which side it stopped on, do you? A. No, sir; I do not. Q. Very well. Now, you say that this lady came rushing towards you from the front end of the car? A. Yes, sir. Q. Now, in order that I may get the matter straight in my own mind so we'll all understand it, you were looking south—you must have been looking south? A. Yes, sir. Q. To see her coming from the south— She was coming from a southerly direction, was she not? A. Yes, sir. Q. Was she on the sidewalk or on the street? A. Why, she was on the street. Q. Your car was going south? A. Yes, sir. Q. How far was she from your car— I mean now west of your car; she was on the west side of your car, wasn't she? A. Yes, sir. Q. How far west? A. Why, I couldn't say; it seemed to me like she was as near up as she could get to the car. Q. To the car? A. Yes, sir. Q. You could see her running towards you from the pavement, if you were on the back vestibule of the car, and she was coming along the car in this way (indicating), and you were back here? How could you see her unless you looked out this way (indicating)? You must have looked out to see if all the passengers were on; isn't that a fact? A. Yes, sir; I looked outside. Q. That is the usual method, isn't it? A. Yes, sir. Q. And you do that before you start your car, don't you. A. Yes, sir. Q. Now, if you looked out and saw this woman coming before you started your car, why did you start your car? A. Why, when the passengers got off I looked right out in the street, and there was no one there to get on at the usual place where passengers stand when they want to get on; there was no one there to get on. Q. That is your answer, is it? A. Yes, sir; when I looked out and the car started there was no one there to get on. * * * Q. And you helped the passenger get on the car? A. Yes, sir. Q. She made no complaint to you? A. No, sir. Q. It is an incident that occurs almost daily in the operation of this system, isn't it? A. Yes, sir. Q. You don't report those things, do you? A. Why, if they make any complaint, sometimes we do. Q. She had not made any complaint about it; you say she did not talk to you? A. No; no, sir. Q. Then, what were you reporting about, now? Just tell us? A. Why, I was called down to the claim department. They asked me to make out a report. Q. Of what? A. Well, after I was subpoenaed about this matter here, this incident which occurred up there. Q. After you were subpoenaed to take your deposition, did you then make that report, or before it? A. After."

George G. Butler testified that he was the motorman in charge of car at the time of alleged accident. He said plaintiff got on his car on Sunday, October 30, 1904, at Thirty-Ninth and Woodland avenue, and that the car was going south. It was about 11 o'clock in the forenoon. He said they stopped on the north side of Thirty-Ninth street with the rear end of the car. "Q. When your car stopped there, did you see the plaintiff in this case? Did you see her when the car stopped, or soon after it stopped? A. Yes, sir; when the car stopped, I noticed a lady standing just at the front end of the car, like. Q. How was your car arranged with reference to the entrance to the vestibule from the street, the front end of it, at that time? Could a person get in from the west side? A. No, sir. Q. The entrance was on the east side of the car? A. Yes, sir. Q. At the front end? A. Yes, sir. Q. Now, do you know how you came to start your car up when you did from that point? A. I got a signal from the conductor; got two bells to go ahead. Q. And did you start your car up then? A. Yes, sir. Q. Did you afterwards receive any further signal? A. Yes, sir; just after I started the car I got a signal to stop, and the car had probably gone three or four or five feet. Q. What did you do then with reference to stopping, after you started? A. I stopped the car immediately as soon as I got the signal. Q. How far did your car run altogether from the time it started up till it stopped? A. Oh, from three to five feet; not over four or five feet—just started. Q. Now, after seeing this lady at the front end of the car, when did you see her next? A. I noticed her when I got to the end of the line—Forty-Third street. Q. I am not speaking about after starting up—after you stopped your car, didn't you? A. Yes, sir. Q. Well, what did you do then, after you stopped the car? A. Well, I noticed—I just looked around to see what was wrong, and she was getting up the steps into the vestibule, in the rear vestibule. Q. Now, when you got this signal to stop, did you see anybody else or get any signal from anybody else at that time? A. There was a man standing about 15 feet in front of the car, right at the edge of the sidewalk, right at the edge of where the curbing is, and he threw up his hand and I stopped my car and looked around then to see what was the matter. Q. Who was that man? A. His name was Sullivan. Q. Do you remember his first name? A. Charlie, I think, is his name. Q. Now, after you saw that, you looked around then, and where do you say that she was then? A. She was just getting up, coming up the steps into the vestibule when I looked around. Q. How soon did you look after you got your car to a stop? A. Just as soon as the car stopped I looked around to see what the trouble was, if there was any. Q. State whether or not there was any other passengers on the car at that time? A. There was no one in the car at the time; no, sir; no passengers. Q. State whether or not from there to the end of the line anybody got on or off the car? A. There was no one got off the car or on the car. Q. State whether or not you made any stops from there to the end of the line? A. No, sir; did not make any stops. Q. Now, when you got to the end of the line, or while you were going to the end of the line, did you notice where this lady was in the car—what part of the car she sat in? A. Not till after I got to the end of the line and started back through the car. Q. Now, what did you do, what did you do after you got to the end of the line, and after stopping your car, what was the next thing that you did? A. Why, I took the controller handles and the air lever off and started—and the sand punches—and started back to the rear end of the car with them, to change ends. Q. And did you see the plaintiff then? A. Yes, sir; after I got out in the car I noticed her. Q. Where was she then? A. She was sitting on the short horizontal seat in the rear end of the car, and just after I got up in the car she got out. Q. What, if anything, was said as you went through the car? A. Well, she turned around to the conductor and was saying something to him; I could not hear what she said, and I got up pretty close to her, and she turned around to me and said, I think that she said, 'You saw me,' or something, and I told her if she wanted to chew the rag she would have to hunt some person else. I saw that she was angry, and it was too pretty a morning to fuss with anybody. Q. Now, which end of the car, then, did she go to? After she went from that place, where did she go to? A. She went to the south end of the car, what had been the front end of the car. Q. Did she get off then or did she remain there, or what did she do? A. No, sir; I went on out into the vestibule about my work, and she went to the south end of the car, and then came back to the north end of the car, and looked at my badge number, and then she started back through the car again, and got off at the south end of the car. Q. Now, when she got off the—or when she turned to the south end of the car the first time or the second time, state whether or not on either occasion you followed her to the south end of the car? A. No, sir; I was attending to my work in the vestibule, in the north vestibule. Q. I will ask you if at any time, either in the car or in the vestibule, or anywhere there in the car, you made such motions with your foot as though you were going to kick her? A. No, sir."

On cross-examination witness testified as follows:

"Q. You saw the woman standing there, did you, as you came up to Thirty-Ninth street? A. Yes, sir; I noticed her standing there as I came up, as the car stopped. Q. She had the appearance of a person who wanted to take your car, did she? A. No, sir; I did not; never thought of anything of that kind. Q. Why didn't you? What was there about her attitude of standing there waiting for the car on the west side of the street, which would be the natural side? Why weren't you aware of the fact that she wanted to take your car? What was she doing that made you think she did not want to take it? A. Well, I was not paying much attention to her, and I had a bell to stop at Thirty-Ninth street, and I stopped at the regular place, and I was not paying much attention to her, and I noticed her standing there as the car stopped. Q. Well, and as the car stopped you saw her start for the other end, didn't you? A. No, sir. Q. Well, she did go toward the south end, didn't she? A. No, sir; not that I know of; she was a-standing at the south end of the car at the time. Q. Well, what did she do when your car stopped? A. She just stepped back and went toward the north end of the car. Q. How did she go toward the north end of the car—I got confused myself in the directions? A. Yes, sir; that is what I thought. No, she just stepped back; I didn't pay any attention to her; she just stepped back and started north. Q. Started north? A. Yes, sir. Q. Well, that was toward the place— A. Where she would get on, yes, sir. Q. Get on? A. Yes, sir. Q. Well, she acted then as though she was about to take the car, didn't she? A. She didn't give me any idea that she wanted the car. I didn't know whether she wanted to cross the street behind the car or what. I didn't know what her intentions were. Q. You don't know whether she wanted to cross the street? A. Yes, sir; I didn't know her, and didn't know that she wanted the car; no, sir."

Witness said there was nothing that attracted his attention at the time of the alleged accident. "Q. You carried thousands of people? A. Yes, sir. Q. Very well; now you say just as the car came to a stop you saw her getting on your car; you looked back and saw her getting on? A. No, sir. Q. Then I misunderstood your testimony. I thought you said that as you came to a stop you looked back and you saw the woman getting on the platform? A. No, I said she was at the front end of the car. Q. I mean afterwards, after you had gone four or five feet and got another bell. Now you stopped at Thirty-Ninth street. Then you started up, and here Sullivan gives you the signal to stop, something wrong, this man standing on the side of the street; you get a bell from the conductor to stop; you stopped, didn't you? A. I stopped when I got a bell. Q. And you looked back, didn't you? A. Yes, sir. Q. Then you saw her getting on the platform, didn't you? A. No, sir, I saw her getting on the steps. Q. On the steps, just as soon as you stopped? A. Yes, sir. Q. Very well. So we get along that far. So there wasn't anything in that incident that attracted your attention very much, was there? A. No, sir."

Witness said he knew Sullivan, who had been formerly in the employ of defendant. He had formerly been a conductor on defendant's road.

Defendant filed an application for a continuance of the cause because of the absence of Charles Sullivan, one of its witnesses, and stated therein what he would testify to if present.

Upon the election of counsel for plaintiff that Sullivan's testimony might be read to the jury, the court overruled the application for a continuance.

Sullivan's testimony was as follows:

"Q. Mr. Sullivan, I wish you would state what you know in regard to this trouble. A. I was standing on the corner of Thirty-Ninth and Woodland in front of a little grocery store; I was waiting for a car to take it to town; while I was standing there a car came from the north and stopped; several passengers got off, and the conductor then gave two bells to go ahead; about this time a woman who was standing somewhere near the center of the car on the ground started toward the rear end and took hold of the handhold of the car and attempted to board it; the conductor warned her, and at the same time rang the bell for the car to stop; the car came to a stop, and the conductor assisted her on and he then went on; the lady acted and looked very mad. Q. I will get you to state if she fell down? A. No, sir; she did not. Q. Do you know who this lady was? A. Some one in the grocery store said her name was Mrs. Wellman."

This was all the testimony in respect to what occurred at the time and place of alleged accident.

Defendant also introduced several witnesses whose testimony tended to show that plaintiff was sickly and diseased at the time of and prior to the time of her alleged injury; and, among others, were Dr. G. H. Donaldson and his son, Dr. J. E. Donaldson. The former testified as follows:

"Q. I will ask you if you were at any time called in consultation with your son, J. E., to see Mrs. Wellman, the plaintiff in this case? A. I was; he asked me to go with him. Q. When was that, Doctor? A. I think that was about in May, as well as I can remember, about 1903, I guess. Q. What condition was she in at that time? A. She was in a very nervous neurotic condition. Q. Was she in bed, or where? A. She was in the bed. Q. What examination did you make of her, Doctor, at that time? A. I made just a physical examination. I did not make any digital examination of the uterine appendages or anything of that kind, but just over the abdomen, the general pulse and tongue, and in a general way. Q. What was the seat of her troubles at that time? A. Seemed to be in the uterine appendages, the ovary or uterus, and so on. Q. When, if at any time, did you see her after that? A. Never saw her except at the hospital the day she was operated on. Q. Did you then make an examination or see her condition? A. Yes, sir. Q. What was her condition then? A. She had a lacerated cervix and also peritoneum, and a congested, large congested flabby womb. Q. What was its position, Doctor? A. It was prolapsed; it was prolapsed. Q. What do you mean by that? A. That in common parlance would be falling of the womb; done that on account of its heft, you know, dragging it down. Q. Was it out of position at that time? Could you tell in any other respect whether it was retroverted or not? A. I do not recall of retroversion or antiversion or anything of the kind; I do not recall anything. Q. But it was large and flabby? A. Yes, sir. Q. And you say congested. What do you mean, Doctor, by that? A. Why, it was large and full of blood, and made it heavy, you know, so that when she got on her feet it dragged down and pulled. Q. You speak about the cervix being lacerated; is that the mouth of the womb? A. Yes, sir; that is the neck of the womb; cervix would be the neck. Q. And what, if any, effect does that have on a person? A. Oh, it makes them nervous, and in a general way it breaks them down, becomes physically dilapidated and exhausted. Q. What was her general physical condition at that time, Doctor? A. She was in— She was a wreck. Q. She was a wreck? A. Yes, sir. Q. Now you speak about something else being torn there, Doctor? A. The peritoneum; that is, to make it plain, the section from the vagina down towards the anus, and that part of the integument there between lacerated, torn down there; that is what we call the peritoneum. That was lacerated. Q. And that part of the neck of the womb being lacerated, how could that be caused, Doctor? A. Why, I presume it would be caused by delivering of child and confinement."

On cross-examination witness said plaintiff, on account of giving birth to children, etc., was not a very sturdy type of woman, and would be more susceptible to injuries than a rugged person. He said the tear was an old one and may have been there five years. He said this frequently occurs in giving birth to children, and when torn should be sewed up. He said complications follow that are sometimes very serious. He said the operation performed upon plaintiff was a successful one.

Dr. J. E. Donaldson testified that he saw plaintiff and treated her in May, 1903. He visited her frequently before the operation in 1903. "Q. Now, what did you visit her and treat her for in May, 1903? A. Well, I think, as near as I can remember, at that time she was suffering from a nervous neurotic condition, and which I believed was caused from the condition of her female genital organs. Q. Did you make an examination of her pelvic organs or any of them at that time? A. I don't know just exactly when it was. I examined her several times; I don't know whether just— Q. What was the condition as you found them? A. Well, she had a lacerated cervix, a tear on either side of the cervix, the mouth of the womb, and also a badly torn peritoneum. Q. Were there any effects from that, doctor, which she appeared to be suffering from? A. Why, I thought that that had a good deal to do with her nervous condition at that time; the reason I recommended her going to the hospital and having it repaired. Q. Was she at this time that you saw her, in May, was she in bed or sitting up? A. She was in bed. Q. Were there some times, doctor, there during that period that you visited her twice a day? A. I could not answer that now; I don't know. Q. You called your father, did you, in consultation at that time? A. Yes, sir. Q. Over her case? A. Yes, sir. Q. What was the matter with her then, from the 4th of August up to the time she went to the hospital? A. Why, she was in a very nervous neurotic condition, and was suffering a good deal from pain and inflammatory condition of the female organs. Q. Where was the seat of all that trouble that she was suffering from at that time? A. I don't know what you are trying to get at. Q. Where was the suffering, if she suffered, where was the pain? A. Why, she had more or less pain and tenderness over the abdomen, over the genital organs." He then advised her to go to the hospital. "Q. Now, at the time the operation was performed, could you tell us what the conditions of her genital organs was then? A. Well, there was a laceration, a tear on either side of the cervix or mouth of the womb, and there was also quite an extensive tear on the peritoneum of the outside portion of the vagina, and left the female organs without their normal supports, and with a constant irritation to the nervous system. Q. What was the position and condition of the womb—uterus? A. Well, naturally being irritated that way, it would be inflamed and congested. Q. Do you remember whether it was prolapsed or not? A. Yes, sir; there was some prolapsus all right. Q. Was there any tenderness about the abdomen and the parts? A. Yes, sir; there naturally would be when there is an inflammatory process going on."

On cross-examination witness said he thought it was best to have these tears sewed up, as they tended to create a nervous condition, and complication of all characters might result. He said it frequently happens to women who have children. He thought the operation at the hospital was a success. She was delivered of her last child in 1902.

At the close of plaintiff's case, and again at the close of all of the testimony in the case, counsel for defendant asked an instruction in the nature of a demurrer to the evidence, both of which the court refused, and defendant duly excepted.

Thereupon counsel for plaintiff asked, and the court gave, in her behalf, the following instructions:

"(1) The court instructs the jury that if you believe from the evidence that the defendant on October 30, 1904, was operating the car mentioned in the evidence, for the purpose of carrying passengers for hire, and that on said day it stopped said car at or near the corner of Thirty-Ninth street and Woodland avenue, in Kansas City, Mo., for the purpose of taking on or discharging passengers, and that while said car was so stopped plaintiff was standing at such stopping point, and thereupon immediately exercised reasonable expedition to get upon said car, and that while she was in the act of getting upon said car it was started forward by defendant before plaintiff could, by the exercise of reasonable expedition and reasonable care on her part, have gotten safely upon said car, and that the conductor of said car saw, or by the exercise of the highest practical degree of care ought to have seen, said plaintiff while she was attempting to get on said car (if she was); and if you further believe that by the starting of said car (if it was started) said plaintiff was thrown off her balance, and that defendant's conductor in charge of said car jerked plaintiff toward him on the car in attempting to keep her from falling to the ground (if she was), and that she was thereby caused to fall against parts of said car and to the ground; and if you further believe that prudent men engaged in the street railway business, in the exercise of the highest practicable degree of care, would not have started said car forward under such circumstances—then the defendant was guilty of negligence; and if you believe that said plaintiff was, as the direct result of such negligence (if any), thrown against parts of said car and to the ground, and was thereby injured, then your finding should be for the plaintiff, provided you further believe that plaintiff was in the exercise of reasonable care, at the time.

"(2) By the term 'reasonable care' as used in these instructions is meant such care as would be used by an ordinarily prudent person under the same or similar circumstances.

"(3) It is the duty of a carrier of passengers to exercise the highest degree of care that can reasonably be expected of prudent men engaged in that line of business to carry its passengers safely, and a failure on the part of such carrier to use such care is negligence on its part. A passenger is required to use such care as would be used by an ordinarily prudent person under the same or similar circumstances, and the failure on the part of a passenger to use such care is negligence on his or her part.

"(4) If you find for the plaintiff, you will, in assessing her damages, take into consideration her age and condition, the physical injuries inflicted (if any), the bodily and mental pain suffered (if any), and any and all such damages (if any) of the kind and character mentioned, which will in the future reasonably result to her as the direct result of said injuries (if any), not to exceed in all the sum of $15,000."

To which action of the court in giving said instructions, and each of them, defendant then and there at the time duly excepted.

At the request of the defendant the court instructed the jury as follows:

"(3) The court instructs the jury that if you find and believe from the evidence that the whole or any part of the present physical condition of the plaintiff, complained of in this case, is due to any other cause than being thrown or falling off of the car of defendant, then you are instructed that, for such whole or part of such condition not due to or the result of being so thrown or falling from said car, she cannot recover for in this case.

"(4) The court instructs the jury that if, after the car had started forward and while it was in motion, plaintiff attempted to get upon said car, and was injured thereby, she cannot recover in this case, and your verdict must be for the defendant.

"(5) The court instructs the jury that the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to establish her case by the preponderance of the evidence, and by a preponderance of the evidence is meant the greater weight of the credible testimony.

"(6) The court instructs the jury that the plaintiff is a competent witness in her own behalf, and you must consider her testimony in making up your verdict; but in determining what weight and value you will give her testimony, you may take into consideration, with all the other facts and circumstances in evidence before you, the fact that she is the plaintiff testifying in her own behalf and her interest in the result of the suit. Whatever statements, if any, that she may have made against her own interest, must be regarded as true; what she may say in her own favor is to be taken to be true or false when taken into consideration with all the other facts and circumstances detailed in evidence before you."

Guthrie & Smith, Boyle & Howell, and J. K. Stickney, for appellant. John H. Lucas and R. T. Ralley & Son, for respondent.

WOODSON, J. (after stating the facts as above). 1. While counsel for appellant asked an instruction in the nature of a demurrer to respondent's evidence, and renewed that offer again at the close of all of the testimony in the case, both of which were by the court refused, yet that action of the court is not called to our attention for review, either in appellant's brief or argument; but notwithstanding that omission, we have carefully read the entire evidence of the case, as preserved in the record; and, if it were within our province to weigh the evidence and to judge of the credibility of the witnesses from the face of this record, we would have no hesitancy in holding that it preponderates in favor of the appellant; but that is not within our province, nor have we the opportunity to see the witnesses who testified in the case, nor to observe their demeanor upon the witness stand and their manner of testifying, as the jury and trial judge had, which placed them in a more favorable position to judge of the credibility of the witnesses and the weight to be given to their testimony than we have. Brecker v. Fillingham, 209 Mo. 578, 108 S. W. 41. We are therefore of the opinion that there was no error on the part of the trial court in refusing to give the demurrers to the evidence.

2. Counsel for appellant insists that the first instruction given by the court for respondent is erroneous, for the reason that it is misleading, indefinite, and uncertain. In our judgment, that insistence is untenable. That instruction in a clear and concise manner tells the jury that if they find the facts therein stated to be true, then they would find for respondent. A similar instruction was approved by this court in the case of Devoy v. St. Louis Transit Co., 192 Mo., loc. cit. 206, 207, 91 S. W. 140.

3. Counsel for appellant contends that instruction numbered 3 given by the court on behalf of respondent is erroneous, in that it is simply a statement of an abstract proposition of law, and failed to tell the jury what facts were necessary to constitute the plaintiff a passenger. While it is not good practice to give instructions to the jury which are legal abstractions, yet it has not been suggested in what possible manner the giving of that instruction could have worked injury to appellant, nor have we been able to conceive any such. It was the duty of the jury to read all of the instructions given together, and when so read, and especially with instruction numbered 1 given for respondent, it cannot be seen in what possible manner it could have worked prejudicially to the rights of appellant. Harrington v. City of Sedalia, 98 Mo. 583, 12 S. W. 342. We, therefore, hold there was no error in giving that instruction.

4. It is also contended by counsel for appellant that instruction numbered 4 given on behalf of respondent, relating to the measure of damages, is erroneous for the reason assigned, that it authorizes the jury in assessing her damages to take into consideration her physical condition, which would include the prior diseased condition of her genital organs. This instruction does not contain the vice suggested by counsel. It was clearly the duty of the jury in assessing respondent's damages to take into consideration "her age and condition" at the time of the trial, and "the physical injuries inflicted, if any," etc. And when that instruction is read in connection with No. 1 given on behalf of appellant, which told the jury that they should not allow her any sum for any injury "due to any other cause than being thrown or falling off of the car of defendant," we are unable to see in what manner the jury could have allowed her for any of the prior injuries suggested by counsel for appellant.

5. It is next insisted that this judgment should be reversed because of improper remarks made by counsel for respondent in the argument of the case to the jury. The record discloses that Gen. Boyle, counsel for plaintiff, in making his closing address to the jury, took the application for a continuance made by defendant in this cause, which said application for continuance contained the statement of what Charlie Sullivan would testify to if he was present, and shook it in the face of the jury in a contemptuous, sneering manner, and stated, "This paper representative of Charles Sullivan which was filed in this case is an affidavit for continuance. Who is this Charles Sullivan? Who knows this Charles Sullivan? Why is he not here for cross-examination?" Whereupon, and upon the objections and exceptions of counsel for defendant to the said language of Gen. Boyle, the court stopped him and admonished him that his language was improper. There can be no doubt but what that language of Gen. Boyle was improper, but this court would not be warranted in reversing this judgment upon that ground, especially since the record discloses the fact that the court stopped him and admonished him that his language was improper. In addition to that, Gen. Boyle withdrew the statement and asked the court to instruct the jury not to consider it, which the court did. Too frequently, in the heat of argument before a jury, improper remarks are indulged in by counsel on each side of the cause. Counsel should be more careful in that regard, and confine their remarks to the record, and refrain from improper argument.

6. Counsel for appellant contends that during the examination of Drs. Palmer and Hyde, on behalf of respondent, they were permitted, over his objection, "to express opinions as to the effect of the blows upon the abdomen, without being confined to the case under consideration, and without offering to connect the matter, by offering to show subsequently a state of facts to which such testimony could have applied." That objection is without merit. The court, jury, and counsel all understood and knew the witnesses were testifying regarding the case on trial, and none other, and that the blows had reference to those received by respondent by being thrown against the end of the car by the conductor.

7. Appellant's counsel contends that the action of the court in giving the following instruction was improper and erroneous: "If the injury may have resulted from one or two causes, for one of which, and not the other, the defendant is liable, the plaintiff must show, with reasonable certainty, that the cause for which the defendant is liable produced the result, and if the evidence leaves it to conjecture, the plaintiff must fall in his action." He states his objection thereto in the following language: "Under the foregoing authorities, the above instruction numbered 4, given at the instance of plaintiff, not only failed to state the law properly, but turned the jury loose, and gave it a roving commission, to assess future damages, without any evidence on which to base it, as heretofore shown. The verdict returned is conclusive evidence in support of above contention." There is evidently some mistake surrounding this contention. We have searched this record in vain for that instruction. If it was asked by counsel for either party, or if given by the court of its own motion, this record wholly fails to disclose that fact. Not only that, but, judging from the character of the instruction itself as it appears upon its face, we are unable to comprehend why counsel for respondent should ask it on behalf of their client. If it was asked at all, it is more probable that counsel for appellant asked it, and failed to preserve it in the record; but however that may be, it is useless to prosecute these surmises and probabilities further, for the reason that we have no authority to pass judgment upon the instruction, because it was not incorporated in the bill of exceptions.

8. The final insistence of counsel for appellant is that the verdict of the jury was excessive, and that the judgment should be reversed for that reason. It is their contention that, assuming that the respondent was entitled to recover under the evidence, yet the amount of the verdict "is so outrageously excessive, unjust, and oppressive as to shock the conscience of any reasonable person, and must have been brought about by passion or prejudice, or a misunderstanding of the legal effect of the testimony on the part of the jury in respect to plaintiff's alleged injuries." No reasonable person can read this voluminous record without coming to the conclusion that prior to the date of the injuries complained of respondent had been sick and diseased in and about the pelvic regions, involving the uterus, peritoneum, cervix, and fallopian tubes, as well as their connecting parts. The evidence is also equally conclusive that the neurotic troubles she then suffered from were due to and directly traceable to that diseased condition of those parts of her person. It is true she testified that the operation performed upon her was successful, and that she had completely recovered from all of those previous troubles prior to the infliction of the injuries sued for. She also introduced other testimony in corroboration thereof, which tended to prove her recovery. But, upon the other hand, there was much convincing testimony introduced by appellant which was contradictory of her testimony in that regard, and which tended strongly to show that she had not fully recovered from her previous ailments at the time she claims she received the injuries complained of in this case. That conflicting testimony presented a question of fact for the jury's determination; yet when we consider the fact that the evidence of such injuries rests largely in the mind and conscience of the injured party, and the difficulty with which they may be disproved, under the most favorable circumstances, if the party is simulating (of which there is much evidence in this record), it then becomes the duty of the courts to scrutinize all phases of such claims; and where the record discloses the fact that the jury misunderstood the evidence, or ignored the same, or did not give effect to the greater weight thereof bearing upon a particular question, or returned a verdict for an excessive amount, then it becomes the plain duty of the court to step in and correct the wrong or injustice done thereby. And when we read this record and consider the cause of respondent's injury, the similarity of her former condition and troubles to her present condition and complaints, taken in connection with the size of the verdict, we are fully convinced that the verdict was excessive and out of proportion to the injuries she received. When we recall the manner of her injury, what caused it, the conductor pulling her against the end of the slowly moving car, which moved only four to six feet, and in her own language, "I just come down in a heap on my feet, just all in a bunch, so to speak," then, in our judgment, that alone would not have caused the serious injuries she claims to have received in consequence thereof, nor warrant a verdict for $7,000.

The judgment is excessive, and it will be reversed and the cause remanded, without respondent will within 10 days from and after this date enter a remittitur of $3,500 upon the judgment. If the remittitur is entered within that time, then the judgment will be affirmed. All concur.

CLARK et al. v. KANSAS CITY, ST. L. & C. R. CO.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 1. March 31, 1909. Rehearing Denied April 18, 1909.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 5*)—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.

Rev. St. 1899, c. 48, art. 2 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 2345-2365), relating to limitations in personal actions, provides (section 4285) that, in case of a nonsuit, plaintiff may commence a new action from time to time within one year after the nonsuit. Section 4292 provides that the provisions of the chapter shall not extend to any action which is otherwise limited by any statute, but such action shall be brought within the time limited by such statute. Held, that as chapter 17 (pages 1637-1658), relating to damages for torts, carries its own statute of limitations, section 4285 does not apply to actions brought thereunder.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 191*) — RETROSPECTIVE STATUTES.

The laws forbidden by Const. art. 2, § 15 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 137), prohibiting the passing of laws retrospective in operation, are laws impairing existing vested civil rights, and, as there is no vested right in a particular mode of procedure or civil remedy, the prohibition does not apply to a statute limiting the time within which actions may be brought, and embracing actions already instituted.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 534; Dec. Dig. § 191.*]

3. STATUTES (§ 267*)—CONSTRUCTION—RETROSPECTIVE OPERATION.

The general rule that statutes will be construed to be prospective in operation does not apply to statutes affecting procedure or a legal remedy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 350-359; Dec. Dig. § 267.*]

4. STATUTES (§ 181*)—CONSTRUCTION—OFFICE OF COURTS.

Courts cannot by construing a statute substitute their ideas of legislative intent for that unmistakably held by the Legislature and unmistakably expressed in legislative words, and must not interpret where there is no need of it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 259; Dec. Dig. § 181.*]

5. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 6*)—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION—"SHALL HAVE BEEN COMMENCED."

Rev. St. 1899, § 2868, repealed by Laws 1905, p. 138 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1652), provides that if any action under chapter 17 (pages 1637-1658), relating to damages for torts, shall have been commenced within one year after the cause of action shall accrue and plaintiff suffer a nonsuit, etc., he may commence a new action within one year after the nonsuit, etc. Held, that the phrase "shall have been commenced" includes pending as well as future actions, especially in view of section 4160 (page 2252), requiring that words and phrases shall be taken in their plain or ordinary and usual sense, and hence, where a death action was commenced within a year after the death and before section 2868 took effect, and a nonsuit was suffered after it was in force, plaintiff was entitled to recommence suit within a year after the nonsuit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

6. DEATH (§ 9*)—ACTIONS—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE.

As there was no right of action at common law for a wrongful death, the statute giving such action, being in derogation thereof, must be construed with reasonable strictness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. § 11; Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

7. DEATH (§ 31*)—ACTIONS—PARTIES ENTITLED TO SUE.

The action for wrongful death being purely statutory, only such persons can bring it as are designated in the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. § 35; Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

8. DEATH (§ 42*)—ACTIONS—NECESSARY PARTIES.

Rev. St. 1899, § 2864 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1637), provides that when a person shall die from an injury resulting from the negligence of a railway employé conducting a train, etc., and shall be an unmarried minor, the corporation in whose service the employé was shall forfeit a sum which may be sued for by the father and mother, if both living, who may join in the suit and shall each have an equal interest in the judgment. Held, that the penalty is indivisible, and all of it or none must be sued for, both parents joining prior to judgment, though they are divorced, and decedent has been in the exclusive custody of the mother, and, if the father refuses to join, the mother cannot recover by making him a coplaintiff against his consent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Cent. Dig. §§ 56-58; Dec. Dig. § 42.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jackson County; John G. Park, Judge.

Death action by Emma Clark and another against the Kansas City, St. Louis & Chicago Railroad Company. A demurrer to the petition was sustained, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Emma Clark had a son, Charles Ritter (at his death an unmarried minor), by a former divorced husband, Thomas Ritter. Joining her former husband in the suit as a coplaintiff against his consent, she sues for the statutory penalty of $5,000 for the wrongful death of Charles. Defendant demurred. Cast thereby, plaintiff refused to plead over, and, judgment going against her, she appeals.

Sufficient of the record to determine questions raised will appear in the following statement of the case: (Nota bene: Dates are material.) The petition was filed September 11, 1905. After alleging that plaintiffs had been married, and that Charles Ritter was born to them as lawful issue; that on the 21st day of July, 1904, he was a minor without descendants and had never been married; that on that day he was negligently killed at a street crossing by defendant's servants operating a train (seven specific acts of negligence being set forth)—the petition makes the following substantive allegations at which the demurrer is aimed: "Plaintiff Emma Clark further states: That on the ——— day of August, 1887, at which time said minor was about five months old, she was duly divorced from the bonds of matrimony with said Thomas Ritter by a decree of the circuit court of Marion county, in the state of Illinois, and since that time she has married one Edward H. Clark. That the exclusive care and custody of said minor was given to her by said decree of said Marion circuit court, and she retained the same up to the time of his death. That on the 20th day of September, 1904, plaintiff filed her petition in this court against the defendant for damages for causing the death of said Charles Ritter, in which suit said Thomas Ritter afterwards joined as a coplaintiff. That said suit was transferred to the circuit court of the United States for the Western District of Missouri on the 12th day of October, 1904, and plaintiffs suffered a nonsuit in said cause in said United States court on the 19th day of August, 1905. That said Thomas Ritter has refused to join in this suit, but his name is used herein to assert the rights of this plaintiff Emma Clark, and said Emma Clark hereby offers to indemnify her complaint against any costs or expenses which may be incurred by him because of the use of his name as complaintiff."

The demurrer follows: "Comes now the defendant, and demurs to the plaintiff's petition for the following reasons, to wit: (1) That there is an improper and unlawful joinder of parties plaintiff. (2) That the petition shows upon its face that Thomas Ritter refuses to be joined as a party plaintiff to this suit, and that the said Thomas Ritter cannot be joined, and is not joined, as a party plaintiff within the meaning of the statutes of Missouri under which this suit is instituted. (3) That the plaintiff Emma Clark alone under the statutes of Missouri cannot maintain this suit. (4) That the petition does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against this defendant. (5) Because it appears upon the face of the petition that this suit was filed and instituted more than one year from the date of the death of the said Charles Ritter, and that the plaintiff was at the time of the institution of said suit, and is now, barred by the statutes of limitations from bringing any suit on account of the death of the said Charles Ritter."

It is conceded on all sides that the case must ride off on a construction of our statutes. The statutes passing in review follow: Section 2864 (Rev. St. 1899 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 1637]) of the damage act, in its third subdivision, touching the persons who may sue for a wrongful death, provides: "If such deceased be a minor and unmarried, * * * then by the father and mother, who may join in the suit, and each shall have an equal interest in the judgment; or if either of them be dead, then by the survivor." Section 2868 (Rev. St. 1899 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 1652]) of the damage act reads: "Every action instituted by virtue of the preceding sections of this chapter (chapter 17, devoted to damages for torts) shall be commenced within one year after the cause of such action shall accrue." On April 12, 1905 (Laws 1905, p. 138 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 1652]), the Legislature repealed section 2868, supra, and enacted a new one in lieu thereof, numbered 2868, reading: "Every action instituted by virtue of the preceding sections of this chapter shall be commenced within one year after the cause of such action shall accrue: Provided, that if any action shall have been commenced within the time prescribed in this section, and the plaintiff therein suffer a nonsuit, or, after a verdict for him, the judgment be arrested, or after a judgment for him, the same be reversed on appeal or error, such plaintiff may commence a new action, from time to time, within one year after such nonsuit suffered or such judgment arrested or reversed." Absent an emergency clause, the new section went into force under the provisions of our Constitution on June 16, 1905 (Laws 1905, p. 330).

L. A. Laughlin, for appellants. Scarritt, Scarritt & Jones, for respondent.

LAMM, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). 1. There has long existed in our statutes (Rev. St. 1899, c. 48 [Ann. St. 1906, pp. 2335-2365] on Limitations of Actions, art. 2, Personal Actions) a section containing a saving clause in case of a nonsuit, and providing that a plaintiff "may commence a new action from time to time, within one year after such nonsuit suffered" (section 4285). This saving clause was substantially borrowed and used in the new section (2868), supra, now part of chapter 17, on damages and contributions in actions of tort. But in said article 2, c. 48, it is further provided as follows (section 4292): "The provisions of this chapter shall not extend to any action which is or shall be otherwise limited by any statute; but such action shall be brought within the time limited by such statute." Proper construction of the last section precludes the idea that section 4285 applies to actions instituted for damages for torts under the damage act. This because the damage act carries its own special statute of limitations, which must control. Gerren v. Railroad, 60 Mo. 405; Wilson v. Knox Co., 132 Mo. 387, 34 S. W. 45, 477; Davenport v. Hannibal, 120 Mo. 150, 25 S. W. 364; Revelle v. Railroad, 74 Mo. 438; Packard v. Railroad, 181 Mo. 421, 80 S. W. 951, 103 Am. St. Rep. 607. In the latter case it was held that a widow nonsuited within the year might sue again, provided she instituted her suit within a year after the cause of action accrued, not within a year after nonsuit suffered. McQuade v. Railroad, 200 Mo., loc. cit. 157, 98 S. W. 552. It is practically conceded by counsel for appellant that unless section 2868, passed in 1905, applies to the case at bar, then the demurrer is well taken; for up to that time as the law stood there was no saving clause tolling the statute of limitations relating to damage suits grounded on tort, and permitting a nonsuit and the institution of a new suit within one year after the nonsuit. It is conceded, too, that the act of 1905 was passed to remedy the construction put on the damage act by Gerrin v. Railroad, supra.

2. A main proposition argued by counsel for respondent is that the statute of limitations (section 2868, supra) is a bar to the present suit because commenced more than one year after the cause of action accrued. Contra, appellant's counsel argues that the saving clause in section 2868 applies. To that respondent's counsel replies that the statute was not intended to affect suits then pending, but its force is spent on suits to be instituted in the future. If, now, the fact be recalled that the present suit was brought more than a year after the death of Charles Ritter, that the original suit was commenced before the present section 2868 was enacted, and that the nonsuit was suffered on the 19th of August, 1905, and while the new section was in force, we have the whole contention outlined.

Attending to it, we have come to the conclusion that the statute of limitations is no bar. This because:

(a) It cannot be held that the section in hand is violative of section 15, art. 2, Const. (Ann. St. 1906, p. 137), prohibiting the passing of laws retrospective in their operation. This because the retrospective laws forbidden by that instrument are laws impairing existing vested civil rights. The law must take away such vested right, or it must create a new obligation, impose a new duty, or attach a new disability in respect to gone-by transactions, in order to be retrospective and under the constitutional ban. Gladney v. Sydnor, 172 Mo. 318, 72 S. W. 554, 60 L. R. A. 880, 95 Am. St. Rep. 517; Hope Mutual Insurance Co. v. Flynn, 88 Mo. 483, 90 Am. Dec. 438. There is no vested right in a particular mode of procedure. Roefeldt v. Railroad, 180 Mo. 554, 79 S. W. 706. Laws merely affecting civil remedies and modes of procedure are not within the constitutional interdiction. Golden City v. Hall, 68 Mo. App. 627; In re Life Ass'n of America, 91 Mo. 177, 3 S. W. 833; Coe v. Ritter, 86 Mo. 277; Wellshear v. Kelley, 69 Mo., loc. cit. 354, 355; Porter v. Mariner, 50 Mo. 364; Haarstick v. Gabriel, 200 Mo., loc. cit. 244, 98 S. W. 760, et seq.; O'Bryan v. Allen, 108 Mo. 227, 18 S. W. 802, 32 Am. St. Rep. 595.

(b) But it is argued by respondent's counsel that the grammatical construction of section 2868 precludes actions instituted before the passage of the law. They point out that a future form of the verb is used in the phrase, "shall have been commenced," and they contend that the amendment of 1905 applies only to actions that "shall have been commenced" after that act took effect. They contend, further, that all legislation must be construed as prospective even where it relates to the remedy, unless the contrary intention appears in the act itself. That there is a presumption running that way.

(1) Attending to the last proposition, we observe that the general rule is that legislation is construed to be prospective; but it will be found in considering the Missouri cases in which that rule is invoked (e. g., Leete v. Bank, 115 Mo. 184, 21 S. W. 788) that they do not relate to mere procedure and to legislation merely affecting a legal remedy. In Lewis' Sutherland Statutory Construction (2d Ed.) § 674, the general doctrine is stated to be that: "Where statutory relief is prescribed for a cause which is continuous in its nature, as a statute of limitations, or desertion for a certain time as ground for divorce, if the cause continues after the statute goes into effect, the future continuance of the cause may be supplemented by the time it was continuous immediately before the act was passed to constitute the statutory period. No person can claim a vested right in any particular mode of procedure for the enforcement or defense of his rights. Where a new statute deals with procedure only, prima facie it applies to all actions—those which have accrued or are pending and future actions. What was before a subject of equitable relief may be made triable by jury without affecting vested rights. If, before final decision, a new law as to procedure is enacted and goes into effect, it must from that time govern and regulate the proceedings. But the steps already taken, the status of the case as to the court in which it was commenced, the pleadings put in, and all things done under the late law will stand unless an intention to the contrary is plainly manifested; and pending cases are only affected by general words as to future proceedings from the point reached when the new law intervened. If what has been done under the old law is bad or insufficient under that law, it remains so, though it would have been good if done in the same way under the new law. A remedy may be provided for existing rights, and new remedies added to or substituted for those which exist. Every case must to a considerable extent depend on its own circumstances. General words in remedial statutes may be applied in past transactions and pending cases, according to all indications of legislative intent, and this may be greatly influenced by considerations of convenience, reasonableness, and justice." And Mr. Endlich (End. on Inter. Stat.) § 287, puts it this way: "In this country the general rule seems to be, in accordance with the English, that statutes pertaining to the remedy—i. e., such as relate to the course and form of proceedings for the enforcement of a right, but do not affect the substance of the judgment pronounced, and neither directly nor indirectly destroy all remedy whatever for the enforcement of the right—are retrospective, so as to apply to causes of action subsisting at the date of their passage." Id. § 288: "Indeed, much of this kind of legislation is held to apply, not only to existing causes of action, but also to pending proceedings. It is said that an act dealing with procedure only applies, unless the contrary intention is expressed, to all actions falling within its terms, whether commenced before or after the enactment." The doctrine thus announced seems well-bedded in principle. We think it applies to the statute in hand, which in its essence is purely a remedial one; hence no presumption lies that it was intended to operate prospectively only. Being highly remedial, it should be most liberally construed to further its life in advancing the remedy and striking down the mischief aimed at—the need and occasion of the law, the mischief felt, and the object and remedy in view being cardinal elements in statutory interpretation.

(2) Courts have no right, by construction, to substitute their ideas of legislative intent for that unmistakably held by the Legislature and unmistakably expressed in legislative words. "Expressum facit cessare tacitum." We must not interpret where there is no need of it. McCluskey v. Cromwell, 11 N. Y., loc. cit. 601, 602. Therefore, if the law says it is to operate only upon cases to be brought thereafter, if it in terms excludes pending cases, then we have nothing to do but to enforce it. Attending to that view, we do not read the statute as contended by counsel for the respondent. Its use of the future form of the verb, "commence," as developed in the phrase "shall have been commenced," in correct usage in the discourse of good writers and speakers, includes the past as well as the future. That phraseology in a statute has been held by the Supreme Court of Connecticut to be "susceptible of both past and future application. They [the words] furnish a convenient form for legislative use when it is desired to give all-inclusive force to a single expression. Therefore, as they may mean future, or past and future, it becomes a question of legislative intent in each statute." Norris v. Sullivan, 47 Conn. 474. To the same effect is People ex rel. v. Board of Education, 126 App. Div. 414, 110 N. Y. Supp. 769. Counsel for appellant have cited us to 2 Wis. St. 1898, p. 2913, where the Legislature of that state has recognized the idea of past and future meaning in such future forms of the verb, and has enacted a rule of statutory construction to the effect that "the words 'shall have been' include past and future cases." Our own statute on construction (Rev. St. 1899, § 4160 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 2252]) requires that "words and phrases shall be taken in their plain or ordinary and usual sense." With that rule in mind, let us illustrate: If a rule were bulletined on a given Tuesday by the headmaster in charge of teaching grammar in a school, as follows: "No pupil shall be whipped twice for a mistake which shall have been made in parsing"—would any boy in the school take the rule to apply only to future mistakes in parsing? Could he not well plead the rule (with high hope of its allowance) if his mistake and one flogging occurred on the Monday prior and another flogging was threatened on the Wednesday subsequent to the rule for the same mistake? Or if C., a plantation owner, is building barns, and writes his overseer, "Paint all barns red that shall have been commenced," would B., his overseer, take that command to mean that only barns commenced after the order should be painted red? Nay, if a very stickler for grammatical precision—a John Horne Tooke, a Lindley Murray, or a Dr. Marsh—should make a New Year's rule for his self-guidance, viz., "If my reading of any book shall have been commenced, I will finish it," would he construe his own rule not to include Anatomy of Melancholy or the Decline and Fall put in reading on the prior Christmas? See Foley v. Dillon (Ky.) 105 S. W. 461; Douglass v. James, 66 Vt. 21, 28 Atl. 319, 44 Am. St. Rep. 817. We may presume all legislators grammarians but that presumption would not drive us to the conclusion that they meant only future action when they wrote "shall have been commenced."

(3) Moreover, section 2868 refers to "any action" which "shall have been commenced" within the time prescribed within "this section." The time prescribed in "this section" is the same time prescribed in the repealed section—i. e., the old law is continued in force in that regard. It is quite difficult to see why, according to the English used, as got at by correct usage from the grammatical construction employed, pending actions were not included. When the nonsuit was suffered, the statute was in force. It therefore operated on that particular nonsuit, and we are of opinion that plaintiff was entitled to recommence her suit within one year after the nonsuit. That is the reasonable and just view; accordingly we so rule. The demurrer therefore cannot stand on such foot.

8. It is charged in the petition that the mother of Charles was divorced; was awarded the custody of her child born of the marriage with Thomas; that she was bearing the burden of maintaining and educating him; that Thomas refused to join in bringing suit for his negligent death; and that the mother joined him as plaintiff willy nilly. Defendant demurs because of a misjoinder of parties plaintiff appearing on the face of the petition. The next question is: Was it well taken on that score? Although our damage act had existed for a half century with section 2864, supra, in the form quoted, yet this is the first time, so far as counsel's or our own research goes, that the precise point was here to be ruled. It must, therefore, be determined by aid of general principles of law, by construing the statute equitably—that is, in the light of its true intentment—and by parity of reasoning. It is argued by appellant's counsel that Thomas Ritter settled with defendant; hence his refusal to join. We are cited to cases elsewhere holding that one of two persons entitled to jointly share in a statutory penalty or who are jointly interested in the proceeds of a judgment based on such statute may not execute a release barring the other. We doubt not that such doctrine is good law in this jurisdiction. But, at the outset, it is well to keep the case within the channel marked out in the petition. There is no allegation that Thomas settled with defendant or executed a release. Therefore, that phase of appellant's brief must be taken as coloring matter used arguendo by way of hypothesis. A bitter hard case is put by learned counsel in his brief, viz.: May Thomas, undeserving, having a joint right of action with Emma and an equal share in the amount recovered, as a mere dog in the manger, through caprice, malice, pique, stubbornness, selfishness, or other ignoble reason, refuse to join in the suit, and will the law permit Emma, the deserving mother, to be wronged or tricked out of her rights to the compensation by such refusal? But there is another side to the picture. Why not suppose that Thomas, through scruples of conscience or some motive resting in honor, refused to take part in the contemplated litigation? Is that not a thinkable hypothesis? In determining the hard case put by counsel, it is well to bear the adage in mind that hard cases make bad law—are the quicksands of the law. In our exposition of the statute it has been steadily held that as there was no right of action for a wrongful death at common law at all, and as the statute transmitting such right of action is in derogation of the common law, it must be construed with reasonable strictness. Furthermore, as the right of action is only of statutory origin, the Legislature had the right in creating it to prescribe a preclusive remedy, and nominate those entitled to sue and the terms on which they could sue, and has done so.

In Barker v. Railroad, 91 Mo., loc. cit. 94, 14 S. W. 282, it was said: "In statutory actions of this sort, the party suing must bring himself strictly within the statutory requirements necessary to confer the right, and this must appear in the petition. Otherwise, it shows no cause of action." The doctrine so announced is bottomed on the reasoning in McNamara v. Slavens, 76 Mo. 329, and in Coover v. Moore, 31 Mo. 574—the latter case holding that: "There being thus no general right of recovery open to all persons, representing the estate of the deceased, or interested in his life, only such persons can recover in such time and in such manner as is set forth in these statutes." In Oates v. Railroad, 104 Mo., loc. cit. 518, 16 S. W. 488 (24 Am. St. Rep. 348), Black, J., quoted with approval section 413 of 3 Wood's Railway Law, reading: "It is needless to say that actions under these statutes must be brought by the persons designated therein, and within the time and in the manner therein provided. If the statute provides that the action shall be brought by the executor or administrator of the deceased, no other person can maintain an action"—adding his own comment, as follows: "The statute gives the cause of action and points out the persons who may sue, and they, and they alone, can sue, and they must sue within the time prescribed by the statute." See, also, Barron v. Mining Co., 172 Mo. 228, 72 S. W. 534, and Packard v. Railroad, 181 Mo. 421, 80 S. W. 951, 103 Am. St. Rep. 607. In Hennessy v. Bavarian Brew- ing Co., 145 Mo., loc. cit. 113, 46 S. W. 967 (41 L. R. A. 385, 68 Am. St. Rep. 554), Marshall, J., speaking to the point with the concurrence of his learned Brethren, said: "Our statute, on which the right alone rests and by which it has been transmitted from the child (i. e., the child killed), vests it expressly in the father and mother eo nomine (who must join in the suit and each have an equal interest in the judgment), or, if either of them be dead, then to the survivor. * * * The fact that the statute is intended to transmit the rights of the deceased child to the father and mother, and that the relation between them as husband and wife does not affect their rights as parents, and the dissolution of the marital relations between them does not dispense with the necessity for joining both in litigation, and that neither can maintain the action alone, and that the remarriage of the wife after the dissolution of her former marital relations makes no difference as to her rights as the mother of deceased, is aptly illustrated by the history of the cases of Buel v. St. Louis Transfer Co., 45 Mo. 562, and Crockett v. St. Louis Transfer Co., 52 Mo. 457." What was said in the Hennessy Case was somewhat by way of argument and illustration, therefore is somewhat obiter, but it is obiter of a high order, based on the reasoning of the cases cited, and must be taken as sound exposition when read with other cases and the statute in review, for instance Senn v. Railroad, 124 Mo. 621, 28 S. W. 66. Undoubtedly it must be allowed to appellant that we have held that one of two living parents may save the statute of limitations from running by instituting a suit for the death of their child within one year, joining the other parent after the year has run. Cytron v. Transit Co., 205 Mo. 692, 104 S. W. 109. But that holding was leveled at the limitation phrase of the statute and made a liberal application of our statutes relating to amendments—that and no more. What we said in those cases falls much short, in principle, of holding that one living parent could prosecute such suit to a judgment or could join the other as coplaintiff against his will. The Legislature enacting section 2864 of the old damage act knew that divorces might ensue, and that parties entitled to the penalty might refuse to join, and yet in creating a new right of action in parents it put the right to recover in both (if living) and shut its eyes to complications arising by divorce or refusal to join. The many Legislatures coming after that one knew that this court uniformly construed that statute with some strictness as in derogation of the common law, and that, strictly construed, it made no provision for a divorce and none for parents who would not join to recover the death penalty. It would be idle to speculate upon the ground for such legislative omission and silence. For aught that we know, both omission and silence may have been grounded on an allowable legislative reason. As the clear law reads, this defendant must pay in a specified case, to wit, when a father and mother join in the suit prior to judgment and in a specified sum—no more, no less. Shall we write into it by construction an added provision, to wit, that the wrongdoer is not only liable in cases put by the statute itself, but is also liable in any case where one of two parents or one of a family of minors, or (under a late statute) one of two administrators or executors is alone willing to sue for the penalty? Is it the statutory scheme that the wrongdoer should pay to one what the statute ordains should go to both parents, or all the minors? Or must he pay in full what all are not willing to receive? Or, if he is to pay only part, what part shall it be? The statutory penalty is indivisible, and all of it or none must be sued for. Casey v. Transit Co., 205 Mo. 721, 108 S. W. 1146. We cannot well write the law as requested by learned counsel without thereby doing away with the rule of reasonable strict construction, and without writing into the statute provisions not now there. When at common law the assignee of a chose in action could not sue in his own name, common-law courts invented a device to get round that injustice by permitting the assignee to sue in the name of the original party, and, when necessary, indemnify such party against costs. So at common law, "if one of the several owners of a joint interest refuses to join as plaintiff, the common-law procedure, reverting to the device of 'nominal and use plaintiffs,' permitted the other owners to use his name as co-plaintiff." 30 Cyc. p. 107. In our own statute there is a section regulating procedure where an interest is transferred in any action pending and borrowing that idea in a modified form. Rev. St. 1899, § 764 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 743). But our statutory scheme is to require suits to be brought in the name of the real party in interest. If one necessary party will not join as plaintiff, he may under given conditions be made a party defendant. Rev. St. 1899, § 544 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 583).

We think learned counsel has mistaken the source of the power to correct evils, if any, in the statute. He should go to the Legislature, and request that body to enlarge the remedy, and make it flexible and broad enough to include cases within the hardships put by him in the case at bar, and see what the lawmaker says; for it seems sensible that the lawmaker should first write the law, and not we. To us the maxim applies: "Jus dicere et non jus dare."

The judgment is affirmed. All concur.

QUINN v. METROPOLITAN ST. RY. CO.
(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 1.
Feb. 25, 1909. Rehearing Denied March 31,

1. CARRIERS (§ 321*)—PASSENGERS—ACTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS—CARE REQUIRED—"HIGHEST"—"UTMOST."

It is usual to use the word "highest" in instructions upon the decree of care required by carriers toward passengers, instead of the word "utmost," and the former word should be used, though there may be but slight difference in their meaning.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1067*)—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where the court instructed that if plaintiff offered himself as a street car passenger when the car stopped for passengers and defendant did not permit the car to remain standing sufficiently long to allow plaintiff to board it, and while he was in the act of boarding it the car was negligently started and plaintiff was injured, he could recover, it was not prejudicial error to refuse a requested instruction that if the car stopped at the usual place, and while it was standing plaintiff attempted to board it as a passenger, defendant was bound to exercise toward him the utmost care for his safety that a prudent man would have exercised under the circumstances.

3. CARRIERS (§ 348*)—PASSENGERS—INJURIES—INSTRUCTIONS—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

In a passenger's action for injuries claimed to have been caused by the premature starting of a street car while he was boarding it, where the evidence showed that the car stopped at a usual place and for the usual time, and plaintiff testified that he was waiting for the car and that he heard and understood the signal to start, and another testified that she boarded the car at the rear and had walked through it when the signal to start was given, an instruction was proper, as going to plaintiff's negligence, that, if the car stopped at the usual place a reasonable length of time to enable plaintiff to board it in safety by exercising ordinary care, the jury should find for defendant.

4. CARRIERS (§ 328*)—PASSENGERS—INJURIES—TAKING UP PASSENGERS—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Where a street car has stopped for a reasonable time for passengers and gives the signal to start before one attempts to enter, the invitation to enter the car ceases, and one thereafter attempting to enter would be negligent, especially if he heard and understood the signal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1367-1369; Dec. Dig. § 328.*]

5. CARRIERS (§ 348*)—PASSENGERS—ACTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—APPLICABILITY TO EVIDENCE.

Plaintiff testified that when he fell off a street car he had both feet upon the steps and was holding to the guard rails with both hands, and rode a short distance in that position, until a passenger discovered that her child had not entered the car and began to scream, when plaintiff released his hold with one hand, thinking the woman was going to jump off, and was thrown off by a jerk, but it was not shown that the jerk was unusual under the circumstances, the car being then crossing other tracks. Held, that it was proper to instruct that if plaintiff got on the car and rode some distance in a reasonably safe position, and thereafter let go one of his handholds and fell from the car, the jury should find for defendant.

6. TRIAL (§ 238*)—INSTRUCTIONS—CREDIBILITY OF EVIDENCE—PLAINTIFF'S TESTIMONY.

An instruction that while plaintiff is a competent witness, yet in determining the weight of his testimony the jury should consider his interest, and, while the law presumes that what he says against his interest is true, the jury need not believe his testimony in his own favor, but could treat it as true or false, as they believed it when considered with all the other testimony, was erroneous.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1064*)—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS—PREJUDICIAL EFFECT—CREDIBILITY OF WITNESS.

The instruction was prejudicial error.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1069*)—HARMLESS ERROR—PREJUDICIAL EFFECT.

Where counsel agreed to permit a witness' testimony to be read in the jury room if all of it was read, and the stenographer read part of it to the jury, when they told him that they had heard enough and excluded him from the jury room, his failure to read the rest of it was not prejudicial error; it not appearing that the jury knew of the agreement that all of the testimony should be read.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1069.*]

9. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF (§ 7*)—CONTENTS.

Bills of exceptions should show only what actually occurred in court, and what the court stenographer told the court as to what happened in the jury room, where he was sent to read testimony to the jury, should not have been embodied in the bills of exceptions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exceptions, Bill of, Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

10. TRIAL (§ 156*)—DIRECTION OF VERDICT.

The evidence introduced by defendant does not aid plaintiff, and, if there was no evidence to go to the jury a demurrer thereto should have been sustained at the close of plaintiff's evidence, without considering defendant's evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 355; Dec. Dig. § 156.*]

11. CARRIERS (§ 346*)—PASSENGERS—ACTIONS—INJURIES—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—CAUSE OF ACCIDENT.

In a passenger's action for injuries sustained in falling off a street car, plaintiff's evidence held to show that the accident resulted from plaintiff's voluntary act in letting go his hold on the car.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1401; Dec. Dig. § 346.*]

12. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1068*)—HARMLESS ERROR—DECISION CORRECT ON MERITS.

Where the verdict was correct on the merits, it will not be disturbed for error in instructions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4225-4228, 4230; Dec. Dig. § 1068.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jackson County; Jno. G. Park, Judge.

Action by James D. Quinn against the Metropolitan Street Railway Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Bird & Pope and T. J. Madden, for appellant. Jno. H. Lucas and Ben F. White, for respondent.

GRAVES, J. Defendant, a street railway corporation, is sued by plaintiff for personal injuries. Trial in the circuit court, before a jury, resulted in a verdict for defendant, upon which judgment was entered. From this judgment, plaintiff in due form appealed. The negligence charged to the defendant is thus couched in the language of the petition:

"That on or about the 29th day of January, A. D. 1908, at about the hour of 8 o'clock p. m. of said day, plaintiff offered himself as a passenger on a west-bound cable train of said defendant at the junction of Ninth, Main, and Delaware streets, in Kansas City, Jackson county, Mo. That said cable train was not permitted to remain standing a reasonably sufficient length of time to enable said plaintiff to board said train, but was carelessly and negligently started forward by said defendant and its conductor and gripman in charge thereof (whose names are unknown to plaintiff) while plaintiff was in the act of boarding said train, and before said plaintiff had had reasonably sufficient time to board said train. That said cable train was also carelessly and negligently started forward without its said conductor and gripman giving plaintiff any warning of the starting of said train, although said defendant, its agents, servants, and employes in charge of said train, knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care should have known, that plaintiff was in the act of boarding said train, and by reason of the said careless and negligent acts of said defendant as aforesaid plaintiff was thrown and dragged or caused to fall from said train with great force and violence to the street and pavement."

Severe injuries were alleged to have been received, including injuries to the nervous system, brain, back, spine, hip, right side, eyes, arms, shoulders, "and internal injuries, the exact nature of which are unknown to plaintiff." In other words, injuries, both unknown and known, were charged, and in quantity evidently sufficient in number and in quality, sufficient in seriousness, to justify the damages asked in the amount of $5,000.

The answer was a general denial and a plea of contributory negligence. Reply was in the conventional form for such an answer.

The plaintiff complains of the action of the trial court in refusing an instruction asked by him, and in giving several asked by defendant, as well as some given by the court of its own motion. He also urges as error the fact that the trial court erred in permitting the stenographer to read his notes to the jury.

Defendant contends that there was no error in these regards, but urges that even if there were errors thus committed, yet the evidence shows that plaintiff was not entitled to recover, and the verdict is for the right party and should not be disturbed.

1. Plaintiff's instruction which was refused, and of which complaint is made, is in this language: "If you find and believe from the evidence that the cable car in question came to a standstill at the usual stopping place at the junction where passengers were let off and on, that while said car was standing the plaintiff attempted to board the same with the intention of becoming a passenger thereon, then you are instructed that the defendant was bound to exercise towards him the utmost care and skill for his safety that prudent men would have exercised while engaged in the same business under the same and similar circumstances." As an abstract statement of the law, this instruction may be correct, but we do not so say. It uses the word "utmost" instead of the word "highest," as is usually used in instructions defining the measure of care required, but there may be but slight difference in the two words. The latter has the approval of the courts, and should be used. Considering this act of the court alone, i. e., the refusal of this instruction, when considered with the instructions given, we would not denominate it further than error, but not necessarily reversible error. By the first instruction for plaintiff the learned trial court had told the jury in effect that if the plaintiff had offered himself as a passenger on the car in question whilst the same was stopped for that purpose, and that defendant had not permitted the car to remain standing for a sufficient time to allow plaintiff to board the same, and further that, whilst he was in the act of boarding the same, said car was negligently and carelessly started, and the plaintiff was thereby injured, then the finding should be for the plaintiff. This instruction given for the plaintiff made it imperative to find for him under a given state of facts. It does not include the abstraction as to defendant's duties to its passengers, but it does say that, if the jury found certain things, it must find for the plaintiff. These certain things were (1) acts upon his part which in law made him a passenger, and (2) acts upon the part of the defendant which, if found, evidenced a failure to perform the high duty required of a carrier to its passenger. With this instruction given, imperative and absolute as it is, the plaintiff lost nothing by the refusal of the abstract declaration contained in the one refused. The refusal of this instruction, when considered with those given, was not reversible error, to say the least. The case of Orcutt v. Century Building Company, 201 Mo. 424, 99 S. W. 1062, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 929, is cited as authority. In that case we did discuss the duties of carriers to passengers, and we did announce that the highest degree of care was required, and we did reverse the case because the court had refused to give an instruction upon the degree of care required, and, as we think, properly so, in that case. But there the situation was different. In that case the defendant was claiming that the plaintiff was a mere licensee, and therefore was only entitled to ordinary care; but the plaintiff was contending that he was a passenger, and thereby entitled to the degree of care required in cases where such relation of passenger and carrier exists. In that case the court adopted the defendant's theory and instructed only on the use of ordinary care. In that we said the court was wrong. In that case the refusal of the plaintiff's instruction for the highest degree of care, and the giving of the defendant's instruction for only ordinary care, evinced the fact that the court tried the case on the wrong theory, i. e., that plaintiff was a mere licensee and not a passenger. No such condition appears in this case. Standing alone, the refusal of this instruction should not reverse the case.

2. Nor is there error in the giving of instruction 9D for the defendant. The instruction reads: "The court instructs the jury that if you find and believe from the evidence that the car upon which the plaintiff boarded, or attempted to board, stopped at the usual stopping place, where plaintiff claims to have been injured, a reasonable length of time to enable plaintiff to board the same in safety by the exercise of ordinary care on his part, then you will find your verdict for the defendant." Under all the evidence, this was a usual stopping place. Under all the testimony, the car stopped. Plaintiff says he was waiting for it before it came, but was talking to a friend in the meantime. One of the plaintiff's witnesses says she boarded the car at the rear end and had walked through the car to the front end and was seating herself when the signal to start the car was given. If she could do that, why could not plaintiff? Nor is it disputed that the signal to start the car was given prior to the start. Plaintiff says he heard it and understood it. The cars were not crowded, according to all the evidence. By "cars," we mean the grip car and the trailer which followed, for this was a cable train composed of the two cars. This instruction, whilst not mentioning the term, goes to the contributory negligence of the plaintiff in not using reasonable care and expedition in boarding the train whilst it was there standing for the receipt of passengers. He says he was there beforehand, and no express evidence shows that the car did not stop for the usual time. There is express evidence that it did stop the usual time for cars at that place, and this from plaintiff's witnesses. Under the facts disclosed, this instruction was proper. When a car has been stopped for the receipt of passengers for a reasonable time, and then the signal to start is given before a person attempts to enter, then the invitation to enter is closed. Without some kind of notice prior to the signal to start, street railways are not required to anticipate that parties at or near its stopping place are intending to become passengers. And, if the signal to start is given prior to any attempt to enter the car, the party must heed the signal, and especially so if he knows the meaning, as did the plaintiff. The giving of the signal to start is evidence of the fact that the invitation to enter has been closed, and an attempt to enter the car after such signal and after it started would be contributory negligence.

3. Nor can we say there was error in giving instruction 8D for the defendant. This instruction reads: "The court instructs the jury that if you find and believe from the evidence that plaintiff got upon the car in question before the car started, or while it was in motion, and rode upon said car some distance with each hand holding to the guard rail in a reasonably safe position and place upon said car, and that thereafter he let go of one of said guard rails and fell from the car, your verdict will be for the defendant." The plaintiff admits that he had both feet upon the steps of the car and both hands holding the guard rails on the car, in which position he rode a short distance, until a lady passenger discovered that her six year old son had not entered the car and began to scream. He says he thought she was going to jump off of the car and told her not to jump, but about the same time released the hold he had with one of his hands, and by a jerk was thrown off. Had he held to the position he occupied, no trouble would have ensued. Such is the import of his testimony, although not in express language. The release of his hold upon the car was not occasioned by the defendant, for at the time the boy was safely upon the sidewalk of the street. It was occasioned by the acts of the woman, for which the evidence does not convict the defendant. The car was crossing other tracks in another street, and the alleged jerk is not shown to be out of the usual for the place and the surroundings, when the character of the train is considered. The giving of this instruction was not error.

4. Instruction 11D given by the court for the defendant is urged as error, and in this we think there is force in the objection. The instruction reads: "The court instructs the jury that while the plaintiff is a competent witness in this case, and you should consider his testimony in arriving at your verdict, yet in determining what weight and credibility you will give to his testimony you should consider his interest in the result of the trial, and that he is the plaintiff testifying in his own behalf. Whatever he may have said against his interest the law presumes to be true, because against his interest; but whatever he may have said in his own behalf you are not obliged to believe, but you may treat the same as true or false, just as you believe it true or false, when considered in connection with all the testimony in the case." This form of an instruction has been especially condemned by this court, and we think rightfully. Zander v. Transit Company, 206 Mo. 445, 108 S. W. 1006, and cases cited. Nor will it do to say that the giving of such an instruction does not work prejudice.

5. The other objection to an instruction given by the court does not seem to us at all tenable, and not one to which we should give space in an opinion. Nor is the objection as to the stenographer good, for it appears from the record thus: "While the jury were deliberating upon the verdict, the jury sent word to the court that it desired to have read to it the testimony of plaintiff. Mr. Loomis, attorney for defendant, stated that he was willing to have the stenographic notes read to the jury. One of the counsel for plaintiff said he was willing to have that done, but wanted all of it read. During the noon recess of a case then on trial, the court sent the official stenographer, Darius A. Brown, Esq., into the jury room with instructions to read said stenographic notes. Some time during the afternoon the jury returned a verdict and were discharged. Afterwards the official stenographer reported to the court that before he had finished reading his stenographic notes the jury stopped him, saying, 'We have heard enough; that is all we want,' and excluded him from the jury room." Under this narration in the bill of exceptions it appears that both parties agreed to the stenographer reading all of his notes upon the testimony of the plaintiff. By this agreement the stenographer entered and read. His presence there was by consent. What the jury did with him thereafter was not at the suggestion of the defendant, nor does it appear that the jury was apprised of the full agreement, so as to make it misconduct upon their part. We hardly think this unsolicited act upon the part of the jury should be held prejudicial error. But, further, the bill of exceptions goes beyond the limit. Such bill should only show what actually occurred in court, and not what may have been reported to the court. Such part should be excluded.

6. This brings us to the critical question in this case. Defendant urges that upon the whole record the verdict is right. This requires both an inquiry as to the pleadings and the evidence. That the petition charges specific acts of negligence cannot be questioned. The extent and character of the charge is, however, for consideration. An analysis of these charges and an application of the evidence deduced by plaintiff's witnesses will solve this question. We say this because the evidence introduced by defendant does not aid the plaintiff. In other words, if the case was wrongfully submitted to the jury, the demurrer to the testimony should have been sustained at the close of plaintiff's case. Matz v. Mo. Pac. Ry. Co. (not yet officially reported) 117 S. W. 584.

As to the evidence, the record shows that the plaintiff was waiting for this car, but talking to a friend, a young man from the stockyards. His witnesses say that the car stopped the usual length of time at that place. The car was a west-bound car on Ninth street, but went out on Summit street. The stopping place was the junction of Main and Delaware streets in Kansas City, too well known to the jurisprudence of this state and the reported cases to need further comment. Just how many got off of the car does not appear, but it does appear that the cars were not crowded, and that only four parties were taking passage, including the plaintiff. It does appear that one of these parties, who, like plaintiff, was there awaiting the car, did get on the coach from the rear end, and, walking clear through the car to the front end, was in the act of seating herself when the signal to start was given. It does appear that two of the prospective passengers were a woman and her six year old son, who had come in on a car from another direction. This lady had some baskets of groceries, and she herself got on the car on the platform thereof. She was recognized by the other lady, who, instead of seating herself, started to open the front door of the coach for her when the car started. At that moment it was discovered that the little boy had not gotten on the car, and the mother evidently made some demonstrations. Plaintiff says that the little boy was trying to board the car after it started, and he pushed him back, fearing that he would fall under the wheels. Plaintiff finally admitted that he got both feet upon the steps of the car and was holding with both hands, when the mother of the boy, as he thought, was going to attempt to get off of the moving car. He rode in this position from the junction sidewalk and stopping place, practically half across Delaware street, and was thrown down by an accelerated forward movement of the car, if such it could be called under the evidence. Plaintiff reiterates a description of the manner of his fall several times, but the following from his cross-examination fairly states his views of the matter:

"Q. Now, Mr. Quinn, I am trying to get at this fact. I understood you to say that you got on the car, and was standing on the step of the car with both feet on the lower step, with your right hand ahold of one railing, the front railing, and your left hand ahold of the other; that after the car started you got into that position. Now, can you understand me? A. It moved up onto Delaware street; the front end of the car was right up to the tracks on Delaware street. Q. Now, Mr. Quinn, the front end of which car had got up to the tracks, the rear car or the front car? A. The rear car. Q. The rear car had got up to the tracks on Delaware street? A. Yes, sir. Q. Now, Mr. Quinn, what did you do then? A. Why, this lady was in front of me, and I thought she was going to get off, and the man rang the bell. Q. Who rang the bell? Mr. Bird: I submit, if the court please, he ought not to interrupt this witness. The Court: He was not going to interrupt the witness; he just asked him who rang the bell. (To which action and ruling of the court the plaintiff at the time duly excepted.) Q. Who rang the bell? A. Some man that was standing in front on the platform, on the far side. Q. Rang the bell? A. Rang the bell. Q. Then what was done? A. And this lady came over. Q. From where? A. Over towards me, and I thought she was going to get off. Q. Well, what did she do? A. And she came over, and it seemed I let go of this hand to let her off—the left hand. Q. Let go of which hand? A. The left hand. Q. Let go of your left hand, yes, that is the hand you had hold of the railing of the body of the car? A. Yes, then the car, it seemed like, it fastened onto the rope, and jerked us right across the street; that is the time I fell. Q. Then you fell off? A. Yes, sir. Q. Did she try to get off? A. I don't know."

He also says that, although this lady was standing in front of him, yet no one touched him. His language is: "How far did you ride on the car? A. From—What do you mean? Q. From the time you got on, until you fell off. The Court. How far did you fall off from the place where the car started? A. I fell off about halfway across Delaware street. Q. You rode from the place where you got on to about halfway across Delaware street. A. Yes, sir. Q. That is correct, is it? A. Yes, sir. Q. Well, where were you riding during that time? A. I was on the step of the car. Q. Sir? A. I was on the step of the car. Q. You were standing on the step of the car? A. Yes, sir. Q. All that time? A. Yes. Q. And had hold of the hand rail in front of you all that time? A. Yes, sir. Q. Well, clear up to the time that you fell off, Mr. Quinn, there was nobody touched you or interfered with you at all, was there? A. No, this lady was in front of me. Q. Well, I asked you, Mr. Quinn, if anybody touched you, or interfered with you at all? A. No, sir. Q. Did not? A. No, sir."

That plaintiff had notice of the starting of this car before it started, he concedes. This admission eliminates that charge of negligence. The evidence for plaintiff, as before stated, shows that the car stopped the usual time. The evidence also shows that plaintiff had gotten to a reasonable place of safety before he fell. He was upon the car with both feet upon the step and both hands holding to the rails, from which he could have easily reached the platform, but for his own act later, the voluntary release of his handhold, and this from a cause which is not chargeable to defendant.

Nor does the testimony show any such unusual lurch or jerk of the car as would be denominated negligence. We all know that as the grip becomes more firmly attached to the cable there will be an increase of the speed, and that cable cars are not free from lurches thus produced. There should have been some evidence upon this point showing an unusual and negligent running of this car, to say the least. It must also be borne in mind that the cable train was crossing these tracks in Delaware street, which of itself would produce some disturbance. But after all, this evidence tends to show that the accident was the result of plaintiff's own voluntary act, which act of his was superinduced by an independent cause. We do not think that plaintiff made a case on the evidence adduced by his witnesses. The defendant's evidence tended to show that he was not on the car, but fell in an attempt to place the little boy on board the moving train. We mention this to show that the evidence of defendant did not aid plaintiff's case. Our discussion has been confined to plaintiff's evidence. The woman said she was not attempting to leave the car, but was trying to stop the car so that the child might get aboard. The signal was given and the car stopped about the time it crossed Delaware street. The plaintiff and the child both boarded the car and proceeded west. No complaint was made by plaintiff at the time as to any injury or as to the treatment of him by defendant's employes. Upon the whole, we think the verdict found was the only one which could have been found by the jury, and we will not disturb it for the error above pointed out.

The judgment will be affirmed. All concur.

STEVENS et al. v. FITZPATRICK et al.
(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 1.
March 31, 1909.)

1. JUDGMENT (§ 122*)—DEFAULT—ENTRY—NECESSITY OF REQUEST.

If there was no reply to a cross-bill, so that defendants were entitled to have it taken as confessed, they should have asked for entry of a default.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 222; Dec. Dig. § 122.*]

2. QUIETING TITLE (§ 39*)—DEFENSES—PLEADING.

In an action to quiet title, an allegation in a cross-bill that the land belonged to W. at his death and descended to his heirs, and that defendant was a bona fide purchaser from another without notice of adverse claims, would not support a judgment for defendant, she not having connected her grantor with W.'s title or alleged a valuable consideration paid by her to her grantor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Cent. Dig. § 80; Dec. Dig. § 39.*]

3. PLEADING (§ 79*)—ANSWER—CONTENTS.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 604 (Ann. St. 1903, p. 631), requiring the answer to contain a general or specific denial and a statement of any new matter constituting a defense or counterclaim, defendant is entitled to but one answer, which must contain all his matter of defense and counterclaim.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 160; Dec. Dig. § 79.*]

4. QUIETING TITLE (§ 40*)—PLEADING—REPLY.

In an action to quiet title, the answer denied that the petition stated facts sufficient to divest defendant's title to land theretofore conveyed to her by D., and plaintiff replied by a general denial, and thereafter defendant filed a cross-bill alleging her purchase from D., and the trial was had as if all the issues were joined. Held, that the reply was properly treated as answering the cross-bill.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Cent. Dig. § 81; Dec. Dig. § 40.*]

5. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 235*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASER—CONSIDERATION—NECESSITY.

Payment of consideration is essential to entitle one to protection as a bona fide purchaser.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 568; Dec. Dig. § 235.*]

6. QUIETING TITLE (§ 52*)—JUDGMENT—REQUISITES—CONFORMITY TO PLEADING.

Where, in an action to quiet title, defendant's cross-bill was insufficient to support a recovery and was not supported by evidence, and its averments were covered by the general findings for plaintiff, there was no error in not mentioning it in final decree.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Cent. Dig. § 102; Dec. Dig. § 52.*]

7. PARTIES (§ 6*)—REAL PARTIES IN INTEREST—ACTIONS FOR LAND.

Plaintiff was the real party in interest so as to entitle her to bring an action to quiet title to land which her husband had contracted, during his lifetime, to sell to another, and for which part of the consideration was paid, though the sale was never consummated; she being interested in the payment of the balance of the purchase money, as well as in the complete performance of the contract of sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Parties, Cent. Dig. § 7; Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

8. ACTION (§ 48*)—JOINDER OF ACTIONS—SAME TRANSACTION.

A count alleged that plaintiff's husband purchased and paid for land, but that title was taken in the name of his father, under whom defendants claim, and that thereafter the father executed a deed to plaintiff's husband, which was lost; and the second count, in addition to those facts, alleged a contract of sale of the land by plaintiff's husband to defendant corporation, and prayed that the lost deed be restored and title adjudged in plaintiff. Held that, if the counts stated two causes of action, they arose out of the same transaction, and hence were properly joined under Rev. St. 1899, § 598 (Ann. St. 1903, p. 619).

9. PARTIES (§ 92*)—DEFENDANTS—MISJOINDER—MODE OF OBJECTION.

An objection to two counts for misjoinder of defendants should be made by special demurrer, as authorized by Rev. St. 1899, § 598 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 624), and not by motion to elect on which count plaintiff would stand.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Parties, Cent. Dig. §§ 150, 151; Dec. Dig. § 92.*]

10. QUIETING TITLE (§ 30*)—PARTIES—DEFENDANTS—JOINDER.

In an action to quiet title and restore a lost deed to land claimed to have been purchased and paid for by plaintiff's husband, and deeded to his father, through whom defendants claim, and to have been thereafter deeded to plaintiff's husband by an unrecorded lost deed, a corporation to which her husband had contracted to sell the land was properly joined as a defendant, it being interested in the subject-matter of the action and being willing to consummate its contract to purchase.

13. TRUSTS (§ 62*)—"RESULTING TRUSTS"—NATURE.

Resulting trusts do not depend upon an agreement between the parties, but arise by operation of law from their acts; the law implying a trust where honesty and fair dealing require that the property be considered as held in trust, as where the purchase money is paid by one person and title taken in the name of another.

14. TRUSTS (§ 81*)—RESULTING TRUSTS—PAYMENT OF CONSIDERATION FOR CONVEYANCE BY ANOTHER.

Where one purchased and paid for land, but, for convenience, had it conveyed to his father, the latter held the land in trust for his son.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 117; Dec. Dig. § 81.*]

15. TRUSTS (§ 88*)—RESULTING TRUST—EVIDENCE TO ESTABLISH—PAROL EVIDENCE.

The death of one in whose name title is taken to land purchased and paid for by another does not prevent the latter from showing by parol the trust relationship.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 130; Dec. Dig. § 88.*]

16. TRUSTS (§ 89*)—RESULTING TRUSTS—EVIDENCE TO ESTABLISH—WEIGHT—PAYMENT.

The death of the one in whose name title was taken to land purchased and paid for by another makes it necessary for the court to use greater care in weighing the evidence of the trust relation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 134; Dec. Dig. § 89.*]

17. LOST INSTRUMENTS (§ 7*)—RESTORATION—PLEADING—DELIVERY.

In an action to restore a lost deed and quiet title in plaintiff, etc., it was sufficient to allege that defendant executed and delivered the alleged lost deed to plaintiff, since to specify the manner and form of the delivery, whether made by defendant personally or through another, would be to plead evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Lost Instruments, Cent. Dig. § 16; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

18. QUIETING TITLE (§ 44*)—PROCEEDINGS—EVIDENCE.

In an action to quiet title in plaintiff to land claimed to have been purchased and paid for by her husband, and title taken in the name of defendant's ancestor for convenience, proof of facts showing the resulting trust, and that plaintiff's husband had been in possession for 21 years, was sufficient, without showing that plaintiff was in possession when the action was begun.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Cent. Dig. § 91; Dec. Dig. § 44.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Clay County:
J. W. Alexander, Judge.

Action by Ellen S. Stevens and others

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes against Fannie D. Stevens, O. H. Stevens, and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, the defendants named appeal. Affirmed.

Scarritt, Scarritt & Jones, for appellants.
Frank Titus, for appellees.

VALLIANT, J. This suit involves the title to about 17 acres of land in Clay county, just across the river from Kansas City, being E. $\frac{1}{4}$, S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$, N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$, Sec. 23, T. 50, R. 33. According to the petition, the land was purchased in 1881 by Edward A. Stevens and paid for by him, but at his request and for his convenience the title was taken in the name of his father, William Stevens. William Stevens died in 1896; Edward died in 1902. The plaintiff Ellen is the widow of Edward, the executrix of his will and his devisee; the other plaintiffs are his heirs; the defendants (except, of course, the North Kansas City Development Company, a corporation) are heirs of William. The plaintiffs, other than Ellen, are also heirs of William. Edward in his lifetime made a contract of sale of the land to the defendant corporation, the development company, and part of the consideration was paid, but he died before the sale was consummated. The main question in the case is, did the land belong to Edward or to his father, William?

The petition is in two counts. The first is under section 650, to adjudge and quiet title; the second is in equity, to restore an alleged lost deed from William to Edward. In the first count, in addition to the allegations that the land was bought and paid for by Edward and the title taken for convenience in the name of his father, William, it is alleged that afterwards William and his wife made and executed a deed, duly acknowledged, conveying the land to Edward, but that that deed was never recorded and is now lost; also that Edward in his lifetime, and the plaintiff Ellen since his death, have been in adverse possession of the land for more than 10 years. The second count contained substantially the same averments as the first, with the addition of the statement of the contract of sale to the defendant corporation, with a prayer to have the lost deed restored and the defendants divested of their apparent record title and the plaintiff Ellen invested with title.

Defendants O. H. Stevens and Fannie Stevens, his wife, who are the appellants in this court, filed their answer, in which they aver that this suit is not instituted or being prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest, because prior to his death Edward had sold whatever interest he had in the land to one Shaffer, and that the defendant, the North Kansas City Development Company, at the time of the institution of this suit, was and for a long time had been in adverse possession of the premises, and that Shaffer when he bought had notice that the title was in the heirs of William Stevens, deceased. The answer also pleads that the plaintiffs' claim is barred by the statute of limitations and by laches, and there are specific denials of several statements in the petition about which there was really no dispute at the trial, to wit, that plaintiff Ellen was not the widow or executrix or devisee of Edward, or the other plaintiffs his heirs, etc. The answer of the North Kansas City Development Company set up the contract of sale from Edward to Shaffer, the payment of $1,000 of the purchase money at the date of the contract, and $4,000 paid later, and the balance to be paid still later; that Shaffer really made the contract for the corporation, and afterwards assigned it to them; that thereafter the long illness and subsequent death of Edward Stevens prevented the fulfillment of the contract on his part, and it remains to be executed.

Defendant Fannie D. Stevens and her husband, the appellant herein, also filed a cross-bill, in which they set up that she was a bona fide purchaser without notice of the adverse claims of any of the parties to this suit of an undivided two-thirds of one-fifth of the land in suit under a warranty deed from one Jacob Davis, and prays a sale of the land for partition. None of the facts constituting that transaction are stated.

The testimony in the case leaves really no ground to question the truth of the statements in the plaintiffs' petition. The testimony shows that the source of the title was a sale of a 40-acre tract for taxes in 1881, which sale was attended by Henry A. Smith and Edward Stevens, each having a purpose to buy the land advertised for sale. They were acquainted with each other, and on meeting there, each disclosing to the other his purpose, Mr. Stevens saying that he was interested in the east half of the 40, it was agreed between them that Mr. Smith should purchase, take the sheriff's deed, and afterwards convey the east half to Edward Stevens. That agreement was carried out; Edward Stevens paid to Mr. Smith the amount agreed on between them for the 20 acres he was to have, which was one-half the purchase price, with costs, etc., added, and requested the deed to be made in the name of his father as grantee, and that was done. That was the testimony of Mr. Smith, and there was none to the contrary. The testimony tended to show that after the purchase Edward Stevens rented the land and held exclusive possession through his tenants from that date, 1881, to the date of the contract of sale to Shaffer for the defendant corporation, January 8, 1902, when the latter went into possession under Edward and has held it ever since, awaiting the consummation of the contract.

The testimony is also quite satisfactory that in 1889, or about that date, the father, William Stevens, joined by his wife, executed a deed conveying the title to Edward. The testimony on this point is, first, that of an attorney for a railroad company which wanted to obtain a right of way through the land, and he negotiated with Edward for the purchase of such right. The record title then stood in the name of William Stevens, and the attorney knew that fact. The deed for the right of way, as submitted to the attorney for the railroad, was signed by William Stevens and wife; the names of the grantors were not written in the caption of the deed, but the space was left blank. The attorney came to the office of Edward with the deed in that condition to consummate the sale; there he met Edward and William Stevens, his father. The witness was asked to state what Edward said at that time, but on objection of defendant the court ruled that the statements of Edward were not admissible; that the witness should state what occurred. Whereupon the witness testified that Edward went to his safe, and, in the presence of his father and witness, took out a deed and showed it to witness; it was a deed for this land from William Stevens and wife to Edward, dated in 1889 (the more exact date witness did not remember), and duly acknowledged, but not recorded. Edward then asked witness if he preferred to have him (Edward) and his wife also join in the deed as grantors, but witness said he did not care to have them do so, whereupon Edward filled the blank in the caption of the deed with the names of William and his wife, and witness gave Edward a check for the money and took the deed. This witness a few years afterwards saw the deed again, in 1895 or 1896. As attorney for another railroad company he at that time had occasion to examine it, and did so. It was then in the possession of Edward Stevens. A son of Edward Stevens testified that he had seen the deed many times, and he specified two occasions when he read it. He described it as a deed for this land to his father executed by his grandfather and grandmother and duly acknowledged. He knew the signatures of both his grandfather and grandmother, and recognized their signatures on this deed. The last time he saw the deed he put it in his father's safe. Since his father's death he had searched for it, but could not find it. The testimony on that point was practically undisputed.

The testimony also showed that plaintiff Ellen was the widow of Edward, and that by his will she was the sole devisee of all his real estate while she remained his widow, and at her death or marriage it was to go to their two children, who are plaintiffs. One of whom has deeded his interest to his mother.

The testimony for defendant tended to show that during the period plaintiffs claim that Edward was in possession of the land through tenants some of the leases were made in the name of William, and that a lawsuit with one of the tenants about rent was instituted in the name of William. But on cross-examination of the witnesses they said that Edward transacted the business and signed William's name; that he conducted the lawsuit and settled it.

Defendant also introduced in evidence a deed from William Stevens and wife to John Seaville, September 6, 1881, to 3 acres of the original 20, also the deed for the right of way to the railroad company mentioned in plaintiffs' testimony, and a deed from defendants O. H. Stevens and his wife, Fannie, to Jacob Davis for an undivided two-thirds of O. H. Stevens' interest in the land in question, dated November 3, 1902, and a warranty deed two days later in date from Jacob Davis conveying back the same interest to Fannie. The consideration named in the deed from O. H. Stevens and wife to Davis is $3,000, that named in the deed from Davis back to the wife of O. H. is $4,000.

The court found all the issues in favor of the plaintiffs, and decreed that the lost deed from William Stevens and wife to Edward be restored, and that defendants be divested of their record title as heirs of William Stevens, and the plaintiff Ellen, as executrix of the will of Edward, be invested with the same, and that upon the payment to her by the defendant the North Kansas City Development Company of $2,784, with 6 per cent. interest from March 1, 1903, plaintiff Ellen execute to that corporation, or to any one whom it may designate for that purpose, a good and sufficient deed, the money to be paid within 30 days on tender by her of such deed, and if not then paid plaintiff Ellen is not bound to make a deed and the contract for the sale shall become null and void. Then followed judgment for costs in favor of plaintiffs against defendants except the defendant corporation, and judgment for costs in favor of the corporation against the plaintiffs.

1. There are some points made by appellants that we will notice before taking up the case on its merits. It is said that appellants' cross-bill is ignored in the final judgment; that, there being no reply to it, it stands confessed. The answer of appellants was filed November 7, 1904, a reply, general denial, was filed November 18, 1904, the cross-bill in February, 1905. The abstract of the record says that a demurrer to the cross-bill was filed March 7, 1905, and overruled on same day. The demurrer is not set out in the abstract, and we do not know on what grounds it was based, nor does the abstract show that a reply was filed after the demurrer was overruled. But the cross-bill is set out in full in the abstract, and if we assume that there was no reply to it, and that appellants were entitled to have had its averments taken as confessed, then they ought to have asked the court for an entry of default against the plaintiffs, which they omitted to do. But there are really no statements of facts in the cross-bill upon which any judgment in the appellants' favor could have been founded. After statements to the effect that the land belonged to William Stevens at his death, and a statement as to who are his heirs, the cross-bill continues: "The said Fannie D. Stevens further avers that she is a bona fide purchaser from Jacob Davis of Jackson county, Mo., by lawful deed of warranty, and without notice of any adverse claims of any of the parties hereto, or that may hereafter be parties to this cause, and that she is a co-owner of said lands." According to the averments in the cross-bill, the title descended to the heirs of William Stevens, yet there is no statement to connect her alleged grantor with that title, and there is no statement that she paid a valuable consideration for the deed.

If the demurrer had been based on the ground that the cross-bill did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, it should have been sustained. Under our Code pleading, a defendant is entitled to but one answer, and that one must contain all his matters of defense and counterclaim. Section 604, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 631). At the time appellants filed this cross-bill they already had an elaborate answer on file, in which, after denials and statements in effect showing a one-fifth interest in O. H. Stevens, her husband, as heir of William, it concluded with a denial that plaintiffs' petition states facts sufficient to justify the divesting of her title to her share of the "land conveyed to her long before the institution of this suit by Jacob Davis, by deed, said deed being duly recorded," etc. That is all that that answer contains bearing on the Davis title. To that answer there was a reply, general denial. The cause went to trial as if all the issues were joined, and was so treated by court and counsel, doubtless construing plaintiffs' reply as covering the after-filed cross-bill, and that was proper. Appellant introduced evidence to sustain their cross-bill, though their evidence fell short. The only evidence they offered was a deed from appellant O. H. Stevens for two-thirds of one-fifth of the land to Davis, and a deed from Davis straightway back to the wife of O. H. for the same interest. There was no offer to prove that even one cent had been paid for either deed. Even if the cross-bill had stated a case calling for relief, the proof failed to sustain it. The averments of the cross-bill were covered in the general finding of the issues in favor of the plaintiff. The court did not err in making no further mention of it in the final decree.

2. There is nothing in appellant's point that the suit is not prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest. It is true the North Kansas City Development Company is interested in the decree the plaintiffs are seeking to obtain, but it is also true that the plaintiffs are interested not only in the balance of the purchase money to be paid on the consummation of the contract of sale, but in the faithful performance by them of the contract which Edward in his lifetime made, and which they in good conscience are bound to fulfill.

3. There was a motion to require the plaintiffs to elect upon which of the two counts in their petition they would stand: First, because it did not appear that both causes of action arose out of the same transaction, therefore, under section 593, Rev. St. 1899, could not be united; second, the parties interested in the alleged lost deed are not interested in the sale of Edward Stevens to the North Kansas City Development Company. The court overruled the motion, and exception was saved. Although the petition is divided into two counts, yet it may be questioned if it really states but one cause of action; the second count contains all that there is in the first, and differs from it only in the fact that it contains the averments concerning the contract for sale to the defendant corporation. But if it be considered two causes of action, they grow out of the same transaction.

The second ground of the motion, to wit, that the defendants other than the corporation are not interested in the matter of the alleged contract of sale by Edward to the corporation, is in the nature of an objection for misjoinder of parties, and, if there is any merit in it, it ought to have been presented in the way of a special demurrer. Section 593, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 624). But the plaintiffs were justified under the rules of good pleading in making the defendant corporation a party to this suit. That corporation, by virtue of its contract with the plaintiffs' testator and ancestor, had an interest in the subject-matter of this suit, had a right to take part in the litigation to obtain a restitution of the alleged lost deed. There was no independent conflict between the plaintiffs and the defendant corporation; the pleadings of both show that no cause of action had arisen between them, because both were willing as far as they could to carry out the contract made with Edward Stevens in his lifetime. The court did not err in overruling that motion.

4. Appellants contend that the petition does not state facts sufficient to constitute a case of resulting trust. There are three kinds of trusts mentioned by name in the lawbooks, express, implied, and resulting. Express trusts are created by agreement between the parties expressing the particular trust intended; implied trusts arise also by agreement, but when the words used in the agreement leave it to implication, rather than express specification, as to the trusts intended; but resulting trusts are those which arise from the acts of the parties by operation of law. The party to be charged as trustee may never have agreed to the trust, and may have really intended to resist it; yet if his acts have been such as are in honesty and fair dealing consistent only with a purpose to hold the property in trust, a trust will result by operation of law. "They are sometimes called presumptive trusts, because the law presumes them to be intended by the parties from the nature and character of their transactions with each other, although the general foundation of this kind of trusts is the natural equity that arises when parties do certain things. Thus, if one pays the purchase money of an estate, and takes the title deed in the name of another, in the absence of all evidence of intention, the law presumes a trust, from the natural equity that he who pays the money for property ought to enjoy the beneficial interest. The statute of frauds does not affect the creation of those trusts, for the reason that, where there is no evidence of intention, it would not be expected that a declaration in writing, properly signed, would be made or could be produced." Perry on Trusts (5th Ed.) § 124.

There are other conditions than the one just suggested where a trust will result by operation of law, one of which is where a person intrusted with money of another buys property and takes title in his own name; but for the purpose of our present inquiry it is sufficient to say, in the language of the text-writer just quoted, "if one pays the purchase money of an estate, and takes the title deed in the name of another, in the absence of all evidence of intention, the law presumes a trust." The petition in this case states facts to constitute a resulting trust under that definition.

It is argued that the petition does not undertake to show any reason why Edward Stevens, a lawyer and a man of wealth, should have conducted this transaction in his father's name. Since both Edward and his father are dead, the plaintiffs could not know what the motive was, and hence they could neither allege nor prove it. The death of the party in whose name the title is taken does not prevent proof of the case by parol evidence, though, of course, it is a fact rendering it necessary for the chancellor to be more careful than otherwise in weighing the evidence. Perry on Trusts, § 138.

It is also said that the petition does not state that William Stevens in person delivered the alleged lost deed to Edward, or that it was delivered by the hand of any one else by order of William. The petition states that William executed and delivered the deed, and that is all that was necessary; all, in fact, that the rules of good pleading permitted, for to go on to specify the manner and form under which the delivery was made would be to plead evidence. The petition was sufficient.

5. Appellants' remaining point relates to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the allegations of the petition. There is little for us to say on that point, because we think the evidence entirely sustains the chancellor's findings. Appellants say that a vital allegation in plaintiffs' petition is that they were in possession of the land when the suit was instituted. There is an allegation of that kind in the petition, in connection with other averments going to show continuous possession and acts of ownership by Edward Stevens after the purchase in 1881; but the averment that the plaintiffs were in actual possession when the suit was begun was not a vital one, because if the averments going to show a condition from which a trust would result by operation of law, and, under that condition, Edward had remained in possession from 1881 to the time of his death in 1902, 21 years, it made out the plaintiffs' case. Besides, the fact on which appellants rely to contradict the averment in the petition that plaintiffs were in possession at the date of filing the suit does not contradict, but really sustains, the averment. The fact on which appellants rely is that the defendant corporation was in actual possession at that date. But the corporation was there under license from Edward under the contract for sale, and its possession was the possession of the heirs and devisee of Edward.

We agree with the learned counsel for appellant in his estimate of the character of evidence that the law requires to establish a case like the one presented in the plaintiffs' petition. This court, in every case where it has had occasion to speak on the point, has held the party asserting such a case to a very high standard of proof, and we have never been satisfied with proof that does not measure up to that standard. We think the plaintiffs in this instance have come fully up to that standard, and have proven their case beyond a reasonable doubt.

The judgment is affirmed. All concur.

HALL v. MISSOURI PAC. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 1.
March 31, 1909. On Rehearing, April

1. RAILROADS (§ 275*)—INJURY TO LICENSEE OR TRESPASSER—AUTHORITY OF BRAKEMAN.

The act of a brakeman in directing plaintiff to get upon a moving car and set the brakes was an act beyond the scope of his authority, and did not change the relation of plaintiff to defendant railroad company from trespasser to that of employee or licensee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 884; Dec. Dig. § 275.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

2. RAILROADS (§ 273½*)—INJURY TO TRESPASSER.

A railroad company's duty to a trespasser is only the use of reasonable care not to injure him after discovery of his danger.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 273½.*]

3. NEGLIGENCE (§ 2*)—LIABILITY FOR INJURIES TO LICENSEE OR TRESPASSER.

The rule that "plaintiff should recover if defendant knew or by ordinary care might have known of the peril of plaintiff in time to avoid the accident by the exercise of ordinary care and failed to do so," only applies where defendant has reason to expect persons to be in danger.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. § 2*]

4. RAILROADS (§ 282*)—INJURY TO TRESPASSER—KNOWLEDGE OF DANGER—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action against a railroad company for injuries to a trespassing boy while setting the brakes on a car by direction of a brakeman, evidence as to the brakeman's knowledge of plaintiff's peril and negligence in failing to avoid the accident by stopping another car held to raise a question for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 919; Dec. Dig. § 282.*]

5. RAILROADS (§ 282*)—INJURY TO TRESPASSER—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action against a railroad company for injuries to a trespasser, evidence held to raise a question for the jury whether plaintiff was guilty of such contributory negligence as will bar his recovery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 919; Dec. Dig. § 282.*]

6. NEGLIGENCE (§ 83*)—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—"HUMANITARIAN DOCTRINE."

The "humanitarian doctrine" presupposes negligence or contributory negligence on the part of the party invoking the rule, and, in its essence, is that, "conceding that I am guilty of negligence in being where I am, yet if you know of my peril in time to save my life or limb, by the exercise of ordinary care on your part, then it is your duty to exercise such care, and a failure to do so renders you liable."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. § 115; Dec. Dig. § 83.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 882*)—REVIEW—PERSONS WHO MAY ALLEGE ERROR—CONFLICTING INSTRUCTIONS.

Where the instructions given for plaintiff were correct and those given for defendant were erroneous, defendant is not entitled to complain on review that the instructions were conflicting.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 8602; Dec. Dig. § 882.*]

On Rehearing.8. RAILROADS (§ 282*)—INJURY TO TRESPASSER—NEGLECT OF BRAKEMAN—SUFFICIENCY OF PETITION.

A petition alleging that, while plaintiff was in a place of peril, "defendant and its said conductor, agents, servants, and employes operating said train," knowing of plaintiff's perilous position, negligently "mismanaged the said engine," etc., causing plaintiff's injury, is sufficiently broad to include the negligence of the brakeman whose acts caused the injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 921; Dec. Dig. § 282.*]

9. RAILROADS (§ 282*)—INJURY TO TRESPASSER—ACTION—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action against a railroad company for injuries to a trespasser, the court instructed that if "defendant's agents, servants, and employes operating an engine and cars attached thereto saw plaintiff and his peril and danger, and became aware thereof in time by ordinary care to have avoided injuring him, and that defendant's agents, servants, and employes * * * failed to exercise such ordinary care, and negligently ran said engine and cars against the car on which" plaintiff was, then defendant is liable. Held, that the instruction covered the negligence of a brakeman whose act caused the injury.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Johnson County; W. L. Jarrott, Judge.

Action by Errett Hall, by next friend, against the Missouri Pacific Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Martin L. Clardy and R. T. Ralley, for appellant. O. L. Houts, Walter L. Lampkin, and Charles E. Morrow, for respondent.

GRAVES, J. Plaintiff, a boy of 14 years at date of accident, sues by his next friend to recover from defendant damages in the sum of $25,000 for personal injuries alleged to have been received through the negligence of the defendant in the operation of one of its freight trains. By the petition it is charged that the plaintiff boarded defendant's local freight train No. 122 at Pleasant Hill, Mo., to go to the town of Kingsville, a few miles to the east; that he had theretofore been accustomed and was permitted by defendant's conductors, agents, servants, and employes to board cars and to be carried thereon from one station to another, and assist them in handling freights and switching cars; then with reference to this particular occasion, and the alleged negligence of the defendant, the petition says:

"That on the 22d day of September, 1902, at the said town of Pleasant Hill, plaintiff boarded defendant's local freight train called 'Freight Train No. 122,' with the knowledge and permission of defendant, defendant's conductor, servants, agents, and employes operating the same, as plaintiff had been accustomed to do, as before stated, for the purpose of being carried to the said town of Kingsville, a station on defendant's said line of railway, and assisting in the operation of said train as aforesaid. That after boarding said train as aforesaid, plaintiff was carried thereon to the said town of Strasburg, a station on defendant's line of railway, between the said towns of Pleasant Hill and Kingsville, where said train was stopped and engaged in switching, which became necessary in its operation. That defendant and the said conductor ordered plaintiff to assist in, and ordered one of the brakemen on said train to take plaintiff and do, said switching and that plaintiff thereupon, in obedience to said order and under the direction of said brakeman, boarded one of defendant's freight cars on one of its said tracks and assisted in said switching, and was in a place of peril. That while plaintiff was so engaged on said car, and was in said place of peril, defendant and defendant's said conductor, agents, servants, and employees operating said train, knowing that plaintiff was on said car and in a place of peril, and after they could have known it by the exercise of ordinary care, negligently and unskillfully mismanaged the said engine, cars, and train, and carelessly and negligently, and with great and unusual and unnecessary force and violence, ran said engine and freight cars attached thereto against the said car on which said plaintiff was, by reason of which plaintiff was thrown from said car to the ground, his right leg broken, and his whole body wounded, bruised, and permanently injured, so that he has been rendered unable to labor, and has suffered and will continue to suffer during his life great bodily pain and mental anguish, and was compelled to and did expend and obligate himself to pay the sum of five hundred dollars for medicine and medical attendance."

That answer was, first, a general denial, which was followed by a special plea of contributory negligence couched in this language: "Said defendant, for further defense, states that, if said Errett Hall was injured as charged in the petition, it was by reason of his own wanton, willful, and reckless conduct in unnecessarily, wantonly, recklessly, and willfully climbing upon defendant's train and cars while the same were in motion, without any authority so to do, and while he was a trespasser in so doing. That the injury, if any, to said Hall was occasioned solely by the negligence of his own acts aforesaid, contributing directly to his own injury aforesaid, without any fault on the part of this defendant."

Reply, a general denial. Verdict and judgment for plaintiff in the sum of $6,000, from which, after the necessary but futile motions for new trial and in arrest of judgment had been passed upon, the defendant brings the case here by appeal.

The accident occurred September 22, 1902, at the town of Strasburg, as stated in the petition. At this town the defendant has three tracks, i. e., the main track and a north and south switch track. The main track runs to the south of the depot, the south switch track is south of the main track, and the north switch track north of the main track and also north of the depot. In other words, the depot stands between the north switch track and the main track. The east end of the north switch track is further east than that of the south switch track, and both some distance east of the depot. Actual measurements are given by one witness, as follows: The south switch leaves the main track 93 feet west of the point where the north switch track leaves it; at the widest point the south switch track is 9 feet from the main track, but the north switch track is further because it spreads out to go around the depot; the place of the accident was 15 feet west of the east point of the south switch; from the point of the accident to the first street crossing west was 16 rails or 48 feet; from the east point of the south switch to the window in the depot was 900 feet. These measurements are of but little value, save and except as they go to affect the credibility of the witnesses. There are three street crossings spoken of in the evidence, two to the east of the depot and one to the west. The first to the east runs just east of the depot.

From the evidence it appears that the plaintiff, rather an unruly orphan boy, being raised by his grandparents, had for some years been in the habit of jumping on defendant's freight trains, and in some instances riding from one station to another. He had been frequently notified by the station agent and by his grandfather of the danger of such conduct. He, himself, admits much of this conduct upon his part, and also some of the notices aforesaid. The station agent claims to have not only warned his grandfather, but the city marshal as well. He also claims to have driven plaintiff from the depot on several occasions, and on the morning of the day of the accident says that he notified him to keep away from the depot.

On the day of the accident, shortly before noon, the plaintiff boarded one of defendant's freight trains at Kingsville, his home, and went west to Pleasant Hill. Upon reaching Pleasant Hill he says that he and some other boys were sitting on a flat car in the local freight going east, when the conductor came by and saw them. That the conductor undertook to fix a drawhead in one of the cars, and told the boys that if they expected to ride they had better get down and help fix the drawhead, which they did, then returned to the flat car, upon which plaintiff rode to Strasburg. The train reached Strasburg at about 2:20 p. m., and, as there was an east-bound passenger train due there at 2:32 p. m., the local freight ran in on the south switch track and stopped with the caboose about opposite the depot. The plaintiff's car was several cars ahead of the caboose. When the train stopped, plaintiff got off on the side next to the depot, and there met another boy, William Epple, who lived at Kingsville, and who with his brother had on that morning ridden on the same freight train upon which plaintiff went to Pleasant Hill. The Epple boys got off and remained at Strasburg, the station between Kingsville and Pleasant Hill.

Upon the arrival of his train the conductor got off and gave some directions to the middle or swing brakeman about switching. One witness says that the conductor said to the brakeman: "A. I heard the conductor say—when he got down on the ground off the steps I was just behind him—he said to the brakeman—I think he said it to the brakeman. He said, 'Take the boys down and do the switching.'" Another said: "Why, when I passed him he says to the brakeman, he says, 'You take the boys and go and do the switching.'" Another put it this way: "Well, I heard some man tell these boys to go down and set up the brakes." William Epple puts it thus: "The conductor told the brakeman to go and take the boys and go and do the switching."

The plaintiff upon this point says: "Q. And then what was done? What did the conductor do? A. Pulled down to the depot, and the conductor came off of the caboose. Q. What did you and the boys do? A. I climbed down off the car. Q. Then did you see the conductor after you got on the ground? A. Yes, sir. Q. What, if anything, did he say? A. He says, 'Take the boys and go down and do the switching.' Q. Who was he speaking to? By Mr. Ralley: I object to that; it is simply calling for the conclusion of the witness. By the Court: State what he said. (To which ruling plaintiff excepted, and saved his exceptions at the time.) Q. Who did he say that to? A. The brakeman. Q. How many brakemen was there? A. Two is all I seen. Q. Two where? A. Standing there. Q. When he said that, what did the brakeman do? A. The brakeman started down the track. Q. How many started? A. Just one. Q. What, if anything, did he say? A. He says, 'Come on, boys.' Q. Which way did he go? A. Down east. Q. Along which track? A. Right down between the south track and main track. Q. How many tracks were there? A. Three. Q. Which track did you say this train pulled in on? A. South switch track. Q. How many boys went along with him down there? A. Just the two. Q. What two? A. Will Epple and I."

It appears that there were several people around the depot, and among them some boys other than the plaintiff and Epple. It also appears from other evidence that the plaintiff's own statement that there were two brakemen present at the time of this talk; and further, that at the time of the talk plaintiff was from 15 to 35 feet away from the conductor. This from evidence introduced by plaintiff. The defendant's version we will state later.

The evidence then discloses that there were some cars on the north switch track (four or five in number) to the north of the depot. Of these cars the west one of the string was loaded with poles upon which to put signboards; that there were orders to put this car in the train to be taken to the next station. It was an ordinary coal car loaded with poles of the character aforesaid. To get this car in the train it became necessary to cut the train and leave a part standing upon the south switch track. This was done, and the engine with three or four cars was cut loose and pulled out upon the main track past the point of the north switch track, from which place the engine and cars were backed in on the north switch track and coupled to the string of cars above mentioned. After this coupling the cars were all pulled down off of the north switch track, and an attempt made to kick this pole car in on the south switch track, where the caboose and remainder of the train was standing. The train seems to have been made up of from 15 to 20 cars.

The plaintiff describes his movements after the conductor's talk at the depot thus: "A. Went down there and he uncoupled the train, and I climbed on and rode out of the switch and back in the north switch, and I seen they were going to hit the cars hard, and I jumped off until they started up again. Q. And then did you crawl on again on that same car? A. Yes, sir. Q. What, if anything, did he say to you at that time? A. Never said anything; pretty soon he climbed on that car and started down that ladder, and than he said, 'Get off, kid, and catch the next car.' Q. Was that at the time you went down the north track east? A. Yes, sir. Q. That put you before or behind the brakeman? A. Behind. Q. You rode down, how far? A. I rode down to the south switch. Q. To where the south switch left the main track? A. Yes, sir. Q. And what did you do? A. I climbed off and went over to the south side. Q. Which side of the south switch did you stand on? A. Right by the side of it. Q. What did the brakeman do, and what did they do with the car? A. They kicked that car loaded with poles back, and it did not clear; never did get into the clear, and started back slowly, and the brakeman says, 'Kid, get up there and catch that car and set the brake,' and I got up to set the brake, and after I got up and got hold of the brake I seen him signal him to come back. Q. Who? A. The brakeman. Q. What kind of signal did he give? A. He give it this way (indicating). Q. How near was he to you when he gave that signal—about how near? A. About 30 feet. Q. Was there anything between him and you? A. No, sir. Q. Could he see you? A. Yes, sir. By Mr. Ralley: We object to that as a conclusion of the witness. By the Court: Just state where he was. (Objection sustained; to which ruling plaintiff excepted and saved his exceptions at the time.) Q. He gave the signal to come back? A. Yes, sir. Q. Then what happened? A. They came back. Q. What came back? A. Cars and engine. Q. And were they all together? A. Yes, sir. Q. Then what happened? A. Hit the corner of the car I was on. Q. Then what happened? A. Knocked me off and two crossing poles. Q. When the brakeman gave this signal to come back, who did he give it to? By Mr. Ralley: I object to that as calling for the conclusion of the witness. By the Court: He stood where? Q. Where was the man on the engine when he gave the signals? A. Looking back toward us. Q. How was his head and face and body? A. Turned back west. Q. Where was he with reference to the window, leaning out or not? A. Leaning out. Q. When the signal was given? A. Yes, sir. Q. Window of the cab, I mean? A. Yes, sir. Q. Which way was he looking? A. Looking back at us. Q. Which way was his face turned? A. South. Q. Do you know anything about what kind of lick the cars struck? A. It was hard enough to tear the end out of the coal car. Q. Did it knock you senseless? A. Yes, sir. Q. When you came to, where were you? A. Lying on the ground."

William Epple describes their movements in this manner: "Q. What, if anything was said or done at the platform at that time? A. The conductor told the brakeman to go and take the boys and go and do the switching. Q. Well, then, what did you do? Did the brakeman say anything to you? A. Said, 'Come on, boys, and let's go and do the switching.' Q. Who went with him? A. I and Errett. Q. Which way did you go? A. East. Q. How many brakemen were there? A. One. Q. Where did you go then? When you went east, where did you go? A. How was that? Q. Where did you go? A. Went east to the end of the switch. Q. What did you do? A. With him? Q. Do you remember what you did? A. No, sir, I don't. Q. What is the next thing you remember? A. Riding down out of the switch. Q. On the cars? A. Yes, sir. Q. What kind of cars were they? A. Box cars. Q. What switch was that on? A. North. Q. Well, then, where did the cars and engine go? A. East. Q. What was the purpose of going up on the north switch? A. To pull out this pole car. Q. What was this coal car loaded with? A. Signposts. Q. Then what happened when they pulled down off of the north track on the main track? A. Kicked it back. Q. Kicked what back? A. The coal car. Q. Where did they kick it to? A. On the south. Q. How far back on the switch did it go? A. It didn't quite clear. Q. What was that? A. It didn't quite clear the track. Q. Then what happened? A. Then he knocked the corner off of the coal car? Q. Did you get up on that car? A. Yes, sir. Q. What caused you to get up there? A. The car started back. Q. Did Errett get up on that car? A. Yes, sir. Q. How did he happen to get upon that car? By Mr. Ralley: I object to that; it is merely calling for a conclusion. By the Court: He can state what he saw. Objection sustained. (To which ruling plaintiff excepted, and saved his exceptions at the time.) Q. What did you see him do? A. The brakeman told him to go up and set the brake down. Q. Well, was the car moving when he got on it? A. Yes, sir. Q. Was it going fast or slow? A. Slow. Q. Where was the engine and cars just before it was struck? A. East of the switch. Q. Could you see anybody in the engine? A. Yes, sir. Q. Which side were they on? A. Right side. Q. What would that be, north or south? A. South side. Q. Describe the position of the man in the engine. A. He had his head and waist out looking back towards us. Q. What direction would that be? A. West. Q. Could you see his face? A. Yes, sir. Q. Which way was it turned? A. Toward us. Q. Where was the brakeman? A. He was down there by us. Q. How far was he from you? A. About 20 or 25 feet. Q. What direction from you? A. East. Q. I will ask you to tell what happened when the car was struck, that you and Errett were on. A. It threw us both off. Q. Did it throw anything else off the car? A. A pole. Q. What was Errett doing when the car struck? A. Putting on the brake. Q. Sir? A. Putting on the brake. Q. Putting on the brake? A. Yes, sir. Q. What end was he on? A. East. Q. Where were you? A. South. Q. Did you notice what the train did after they struck this car—the engine and other cars east of it? A. What they did with it? Q. Yes, sir. A. I don't know. Q. Well, state to the jury how they came back, fast or slow? A. Fast. Q. How was the jar? Describe it to the jury. A. It was awful; came back about 30 miles an hour. By Mr. Ralley: We move to strike that out; he has not shown himself qualified to judge the rate of speed. By the Court: Yes, sir; he would have to show himself qualified. (To which ruling plaintiff excepted, and saved his exceptions at the time.) Q. You may state to the jury whether or not the engine and the cars all came back together? A. Yes, sir. Q. About how many cars were there with the engine at that time? A. Five. Q. What kind of cars were they? A. Box cars. Q. Did you notice, after that, what became of the engine and box cars? A. No, sir."

In this connection it will be well to mention that this witness had given two written statements to the defendant's claim agent, in which he says that he did not hear the conductor's talk at the depot, and did not hear the brakeman tell Hall to set the brakes on the pole car.

Another witness, Haynes, says: "Q. Then what did they do? A. Well, then they run the cars down to get the post car off of the side track, and run it up on the main track, and when they run it up on the main track it looked like they wanted to make a flying switch, but they didn't get it quite far enough up, and then the car commenced moving down east, the car the boy was on, and the brakeman was on the south side of the main track that they was pulling on, and he says to the kid, he says, 'Kid,' he says, 'set that brake,' and then they gave it another punch to shove it back, and they hit so hard they knocked a piece off the car, and the boy went off, and the posts went with him."

There is considerable evidence for plaintiff tending to show that the engine and all the cars ahead of the pole car were attached when they struck the pole car, and that they struck it with great force. Both cars were considerably damaged by the collision.

For the defendant, the evidence tended to show that the plaintiff and the other boys alighted from the car east of the second crossing east of the depot; that they then were next seen riding on a car on the north switch. The conductor says that he did not see nor converse with any boys at Pleasant Hill; that they repaired no car there; that if a car had been out of repair at Pleasant Hill there was a car repairer there by name of Lane, and the car would have been turned in on the repair track for repairs. In this he is corroborated by all the train crew.

The conductor says that he had no knowledge of plaintiff being on his train, and that he gave him no orders about switching at Strasburg. He says that he did tell the swing brakeman, who had gotten the switching list and order from the agent, to take the boys and do the switching, but says that in the use of the word "boys" he used it in railroad parlance, which meant the brakeman and crew; that he used it in that sense, and had no reference to plaintiff or any other outsider; that he had no knowledge of the fact that plaintiff was in any way assisting in the switching of cars; that at the time of the accident he and the rear brakeman were unloading the local freight. It also appears that there was the full complement of men with this train, i. e., conductor, three brakemen, a fireman, and engineer. It is shown that neither the conductor nor any member of the train crew has any authority to employ outsiders to do any of the train work for the company. Both the engineer and fireman say that they did not know the plaintiff was on the train. They say that the pole car was kicked in on the south track, and that they cut loose from the train the other cars which stood ahead of the pole car whilst on the north track, and aimed to kick them in on the north track. The engineer said that they kept the cars supplied with air brakes next the engine to assist in stopping the train, but did not remember just how many they had with them when they backed on the north switch track for the pole car.

The engineer describes the collision thus: "Q. Then went north? A. Yes, sir; on the house-track switch. Q. Then what did you do? A. Backed in on the north side, and there was several cars in there—I don't know how many—and we coupled them and brought them down on the main line. Q. What car or cars were you after? A. A coal car loaded with crossing signs that was back of some cars that were on the side track.

Q. Do you know how many there were in front of this pole car? A. No, sir; not exactly; probably six or seven. Q. What did you do with them? A. We come out there and kicked the coal car back on the south siding, or started it back on the south switch to our train; the brakeman cut it off and signaled me to go ahead; I went ahead probably three or four car lengths; anyhow, over east of the east end of the north switch; then he gave me the signal to back up, to kick the cars, to kick them back on the north track; the cars that were in there ahead of this coal car—that is, between us and the coal car—and I gave them a little kick, and he gave me the signal to stop, and I applied the air, and the head end of the train stopped. The cars that were going back on the north side run back; I guess they were 10 or 15 feet apart when I saw the dust fly off of the coal car. Q. That far from the locomotive? A. The two parts of the train were probably 10 or 15 feet apart when I seen the dust fly off the coal car, and about that time I saw a boy fall off the car, and I says to the fireman, 'they have knocked a boy off the car,' and we stopped. In the first place, I saw that he didn't get up; seen he must be hurt; he laid there after he fell off; then I gets off the engine and walks back and seen the boy's leg was broken; I was the first man to him."

The fireman says he did not see the boy at all. The engineer further testified that in switching the engineer acted under signals given by the brakeman; that it was the duty of the brakeman, when they kicked in a car, to see that it was in the clear before giving a signal to back up; that in this instance he got the signal to back up and did so, but got a signal to stop and did at once apply the air and brakes and stopped.

Other evidence showed that it was the duty of the swing brakeman, who was a man by name of Boggs in this instance, to get from the station agent the switching list, and then look after the switching of the cars.

The conductor, fireman, engineer, and rear brakeman testified in person at the trial. As to the other two, statements of their evidence were read by counsel. Their statements are:

"It is agreed by and between counsel for both plaintiff and defendant that the following statement may be read to the jury as the evidence of H. M. Boggs, which said statement was read to the jury, and was in words and figures as follows, to wit:

"That he put the plaintiff, Errett Hall, off the train a short time before the accident complained of, and told him to keep away from said train; that said plaintiff, without the knowledge and consent and against the protest of said Boggs, got upon defendant's box car at the time of his injury, and was there without any authority or invitation or direction from any of the train crew; that neither the conductor nor any of the other train crew, either directly or indirectly, authorized, directed, or requested said Hall to get upon said defendant's train of cars, or to perform any other duty or service connected with said train.'

"It is further agreed by and between counsel for both plaintiff and defendant that the following statement may be read to the jury as the evidence of Louise Buske, which said statement was read to the jury, and was in words and figures as follows, to wit:

"That he was at the east end of the switch at the time of the accident; that neither he nor any of the other brakemen or train crew authorized or directed said plaintiff to get upon the car where he was injured, or to perform any other service connected with said train."

One matter of dispute was whether the car which struck the pole was attached to the engine or the string of cars next to the engine, or whether it and others had been cut loose from the train, and was separated therefrom at the time of the collision. For the defendant, this testimony tends to show that the pole car was first cut loose from the train, and then the others belonging on the north switch track; for the plaintiff, contra. A number of photographs of the track and depot situation were in evidence.

The court refused a peremptory instruction for defendant, both at the close of the plaintiff's case, and at the close of the whole case.

For the plaintiff, the court instructed thus:

"(1) The court instructs the jury that if you should find and believe from the evidence that Errett Hall was on one of the defendant's freight cars on its tracks in Strasburg and engaged in setting the brake on said car, and while so engaged he became and was in a place of danger, and that defendant's agents, servants, and employes in charge of and operating and managing an engine and cars attached thereto saw the said Errett Hall and his said peril and danger and became aware thereof in time, by the exercise of ordinary care, to have avoided injuring him, and that the defendant's said agents, servants, and employes in charge of said engine and cars attached thereto failed to exercise such ordinary care, and negligently ran said engine and cars against the car upon which the said Errett Hall was, with great and unusual force and violence, and by reason thereof the said Errett Hall was thrown from said car to the ground and injured, then you should find for the plaintiff, although you may believe from the evidence that plaintiff, Errett Hall, was guilty of negligence in going upon said car and attempting to set said brake, and was a trespasser, unless the jury should further find from the evidence that after he became aware of his own peril, or by the exercise of ordinary care might have become aware of his peril, he could have, by the exercise of ordinary care, avoided the injury."

"(3) By ordinary care is meant such care as an ordinarily careful and prudent person would exercise under the same or similar circumstances. Negligence is the failure to exercise ordinary care.

"If you find that Errett Hall was a boy of immature age, and had not the capacity of an adult, and that he exercised such care as ought reasonably to have been expected of one of his age and capacity, then he is not guilty of contributory negligence.

"(4) If the jury find for the plaintiff, in estimating his damages, they will take into consideration not only his age, the physical injury inflicted, and the bodily pain and mental anguish endured, but also any and all damages, if any, which it appears from the evidence will reasonably result to him from his injury in the future, not to exceed in all the sum of $25,000."

For the defendant, the court gave the following instructions:

"(1) The court instructs the jury that, under pleadings and evidence in this cause, the plaintiff, Errett Hall, at the time and place of accident, was not a passenger upon defendant's train or cars, and was not an employe of said defendant; on the contrary, at the time and place of accident aforesaid, said plaintiff, Errett Hall, had no legal right to be upon said car, and was a trespasser thereon, and the jury, in disposing of the case, should try it accordingly.

"(2) Even if the jury believe from evidence that the conductor told this brakeman to take the boys and do the switching, and the brakeman to whom the remarks were addressed went with plaintiff and directed him to get upon the car from which he was thrown, yet this conferred no authority upon plaintiff to get upon said car, and in getting upon the same to set the brake, if he did attempt to do so, he was a trespasser, without any authority to be there, and it is your duty to dispose of the case accordingly.

"(3) If the jury believe from the evidence that defendant's engineer kicked the cars back on the north switch, which struck the one on which plaintiff climbed and undertook to set the brake, and that plaintiff thereafter got upon said car, from which he was thrown, then was thrown, then he is not entitled to recover in this cause, regardless of all other facts.

"(4) Even if the jury should find and believe from the evidence that plaintiff, Errett Hall, was upon defendant's pole car, attempting to set a brake, with the knowledge and consent or on the invitation of one of defendant's servants, yet he assumed the risk in being thus located, and is not entitled to recover, unless he got upon said car while locomotive was still attached to the cars which came in on the north track, and that the engineer in charge thereof actually saw him upon said car and had good reason to believe at the time that the cars upon said north track could not pass said pole car without striking same.

"(5) Before the plaintiff can recover herein, the jury must find and believe, from the greater weight of all the evidence, not only that the engineer in charge of the train actually saw plaintiff on the car of poles, when he backed or kicked the cars onto the north track which struck the one upon which plaintiff was stationed, but that said engineer at the time knew said car upon which plaintiff was stationed was so close to the north track that it was bound to be struck by the cars so backed or kicked on to said north track. Unless the jury so find, your verdict must be for defendant, regardless of all other facts in the case.

"(6) Unless the jury believe from the greater weight of the evidence that defendant's engineer, when he kicked or pushed the cars onto the north track, actually knew that the pole car was so close to said north track as that the cars so kicked or pushed onto said north track would strike the same, then the plaintiff is not entitled to recover herein, even if said engineer did actually see the plaintiff, Errett Hall, stationed on said pole car.

"(7) Before the jury can find for plaintiff, you must find and believe from the greater weight of the evidence: First. That defendant's locomotive was attached to the cars sent in on the north switch, immediately before the collision. Second. That the pole car from which plaintiff fell was known by the engineer, at the time he was pushing back the cars onto the north track, while still attached, to be so close to said cars on the north track that they were bound to strike same. Third. That the engineer in charge of said train, while his locomotive was still attached to the said north cars, actually knew plaintiff, Errett Hall, was upon said pole car, and that the latter was too close to the north track at said time for said cars on the north track to pass without colliding with said pole car. Unless the jury find from the evidence all three of the propositions aforesaid in favor of said plaintiff, your verdict must be for defendant, regardless of all other facts in case.

"(8) The court instructs the jury that defendant has read in evidence a statement as to what the testimony of brakemen Boggs and Buske would be if they were present in person and had testified in this cause. In arriving at your verdict, you will consider the statement of said witnesses as though they had been personally present and had testified in court to the facts set in said statement.

"(9) While the plaintiff, Errett Hall, is a competent witness to testify in his own behalf, yet the jury, in determining what weight, if any, they will give to his testimony, have a right to consider his interest in the result of this litigation, and what he has testified to against his interest is to be taken as true, and what he has testified to in his own favor is to be given only such weight as the jury, under all circumstances in the case, deem it entitled to.

"(10) The jury are the sole judges of the credibility of the witnesses and of the weight to be given their testimony. In arriving at your verdict, it is your duty to take into consideration all the facts and circumstances detailed in evidence—the interest, if any, which the witnesses testifying have in the result of litigation; their means of information, as well as their conduct upon the stand—and if you believe from the evidence that any witness has knowingly or willfully sworn falsely to any material fact in the case, then you are at liberty to disregard the whole or any part of the testimony of such witness.

"(11) The court instructs the jury that, in arriving at a verdict in this case, they must exclude from their consideration the evidence of the witness Alcorn, drawn out in cross-examination, in which he swore it was the duty of defendant's brakeman to see that the car mentioned in evidence as the 'pole car' or 'coal car' was in the clear before giving a signal to the engineer or person in charge of defendant's engine."

And, for the defendant, the court refused to give the following:

"(a) If the jury believe from the evidence that an ordinarily prudent person possessing the intelligence and experience in regard to the operation of trains which plaintiff possessed at the time of accident could have learned, before getting upon the pole car, that it was too close to the north track for cars kicked in thereon to pass by said pole car without colliding with same, then he is not entitled to recover herein, regardless of all other facts.

"(b) If the jury believe from the evidence in this case that, at the time plaintiff attempted to get upon the pole car, it was so close to the north track as to prevent cars being moved west on said north track without colliding with the pole car, and that said fact was open and apparent to one of plaintiff's age and intelligence, then said act upon his part constituted such negligence as to preclude him from recovering in this case, and under such circumstances your finding must be for defendant, irrespective of any other facts in the case."

We have made this statement perhaps fuller than necessary, but defendant insists upon its demurrer, and thus the necessity for a full statement.

1. Counsel with much zeal discuss the question of liability in this case. For defendant, it is urged that no case has been made for the jury. With equal force, counsel for plaintiff urges contra. To read the brief of counsel for plaintiff, one would think that it would be useless expenditure of time to investigate the question of liability, so apparent is there liability to their mind. On the other hand, reading from counsel's brief and argument for the defendant, you would be impressed with the idea that even a cursory examination of the record discloses no case made for the plaintiff, and a further examination would be at a great waste of labor. But wiping away the zealous presentations by the respective able counsel, and going to the cold record before us, we are brought to a realization that the question is an exceedingly close one, not to be brushed aside either one way or the other without outlining the facts in detail. We have given a full statement, that the relative acts of the parties might fully appear, but much of it may be cast aside before we reach the crucial point. Thus it is a disputed question whether defendant's conductor knew of plaintiff's being on the train from Pleasant Hill to Strasburg; but taking plaintiff's version of it (as we must in determining the question whether a demurrer to the testimony should have been sustained), yet we think all this has but little bearing on the ultimate issue in the case. At most, this testimony simply shows that plaintiff was permitted to ride on the train in consideration of his having assisted in repairing a car at Pleasant Hill. As to how far he was to ride, or where on the train he was to ride, does not appear, except by inference, and this inference is that he was to ride on the flat car, where plaintiff said the conductor found himself and some other boys. Singular to say, these other boys drop out of sight entirely in this case after the incident in Pleasant Hill was over. The relation of plaintiff to defendant on the trip from Pleasant Hill to Strasburg is immaterial, because no injury resulted to plaintiff by reason of that relationship, or by reason of being at the place the conductor permitted him to ride. We must go to the occurrences at Strasburg to determine the status which plaintiff bore toward the defendant. There plaintiff left the position occupied by him from Pleasant Hill to Strasburg, and a new alignment is made. Plaintiff there gets off the train some three or four cars ahead of the caboose, and goes north toward the main track and west towards the depot where he met young Epple, who, with himself and a brother of Epple's, had beat their way from Kingsville to Strasburg that morning. What became of his fellow passengers, three Holden boys, from Pleasant Hill down, does not appear. Plaintiff then says that when he got within 15 or 20 feet of the conductor, who had gotten off of the caboose, he heard the conductor say to the middle brakeman, "Take the boys and go do the switching." This remark, he says, was addressed to the middle brakeman; that at the time there were two brakemen and some four or five other boys near the conductor.

Epple says there were eight or ten boys. This number did not include plaintiff and Epple. This testimony, standing alone, is of but little value. It does not show that either plaintiff or Epple were included in the direction given by the conductor. As we gather it, both plaintiff and Epple were further from the conductor than the brakeman and the other four or five boys. If we are to apply these remarks at all to parties outside of railroad employees, they could with more propriety be applied to the other boys than to plaintiff, so that to this point we have but little tending to fix the status of plaintiff towards the defendant. The brakeman was to the west of these boys at the time of this remark, as we gather it from the evidence.

From this point on, the plaintiff either makes or does not make his case. Plaintiff's testimony is that one of the two brakemen started east, and said, "Come on, boys." We are left to infer that these remarks were addressed to plaintiff and Epple, so far as plaintiff's individual testimony is concerned; but Epple fills up the gap by saying that the remarks were addressed to them. At any rate these two boys followed, but seem to have done little toward switching until the accident. Plaintiff claims to have set a brake before the train was first cut on the south track and to have loosened a brake on one of the cars on the north track. The plaintiff's evidence made it appear that these boys were there, whatever they were doing.

Going now to the last link in the chain, we find plaintiff and Epple on the south side of the south switch track in a place of safety. The pole car is "kicked back" on the south switch track; it begins to move slowly toward the east. The car was to the west of the point of the south switch track, and this was 93 feet west of the point of the north switch track. Thus far, to get positions. The middle brakeman, after the pole car had been "kicked" in on the south switch, and the engine and other cars pulled up east of the north switch track, opened this north switch so as to allow the other cars to be pushed or "kicked back" on that track. He then went across to the south side of the main track to give signals. Epple says he was 30 feet to the east of him, but it is not explained how he was only 30 feet to the east if he came directly across from the north switch, which was 93 feet east of the south switch. Plaintiff himself says he walked right across from the north switch to the south side of the main track, but he also said in chief he was 30 feet east of him when he gave the signal. On cross-examination, when pressed, he said he didn't know how far east of him the brakeman was at the time. The car started to move slowly eastward, and he and other witnesses say the brakeman told him to get up and set the brake, which he attempted to do. We take it that under all the facts of this case his status as to defendant is fixed by this order. This evidence shows that the brakeman knew the place occupied by plaintiff, but does it show that the brakeman knew that the car had reached a point where a collision would occur at the time he gave the signal to the engineer to back up? At this juncture it becomes necessary to determine the relation which plaintiff bore to the company. The case was tried on the theory that he was a trespasser. Instructions for both sides so read, and the humanitarian doctrine alone is invoked. Both sides having adopted that theory below, we might proceed here upon the same theory with propriety, and without determining the exact status of plaintiff, and would do so but for the fact that plaintiff's counsel now urge in the brief that he was not a trespasser, and therefore defendant was really favored by the theory upon which the case was tried.

We are of opinion that the plaintiff was a trespasser, and the defendant's liability, if any there be, must be gauged by the care required of it as to trespassers. The evidence shows that there was a conductor in charge of this train, and that neither the conductor nor any other train employé was authorized to employ or direct persons to perform work for the defendant. There is nothing in the record to show any such powers or duties. The act of the brakeman in directing plaintiff to get upon the moving car to set a brake was an act beyond the scope of his authority. Snyder v. Railroad, 60 Mo. 413; Sherman v. Railroad, 72 Mo. 62, 37 Am. Rep. 423; Milton v. Railroad, 193 Mo., loc. cit. 57, 91 S. W. 949, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 282. If the direction was without authority, it was not such as would make the plaintiff a licensee of the defendant. A license could only be granted by some authorized act of the defendant, or by acquiescence of defendant for a length of time.

The status of plaintiff being fixed as that of a trespasser, the only duty owing to him by the defendant was to use reasonable care not to injure him after he was discovered and known to be in a place of imminent danger or peril. In some of the cases applying the humanitarian rule it is stated that "if defendant knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care might have known, of the imminent peril of deceased in time to have averted the accident by the use or exercise of ordinary care and caution upon its part, and did not do so, then the plaintiff is entitled to recover." But this broad rule does not apply to this case. In this case it is incumbent upon the plaintiff to show that defendant or its agents actually knew that plaintiff was in a dangerous place. The rule that a defendant might have known of the dangerous position of a party by the exercise of ordinary care only applies to such cases where the defendant has a reason and right to expect persons to be in danger, as at a public crossing, or on a portion of track habitually used by the public, or such other similar conditions. In all other cases the plaintiff fails unless actual knowledge is shown. As shown by his instructions, the plaintiff in this case understood the law as do we, for the first instruction requires actual knowledge of the dangerous position. Does the evidence so show? We shall take the engineer and brakeman separately.

The positive statement of the engineer is that he never saw the boy until after he had fallen to the ground. For the plaintiff, the evidence shows that the engineer was on the south side of the cab leaning out and looking west toward where the pole car stood, taking signals from this brakeman, who stood on the ground to the south of the main track. Two things must be shown to convict the engineer: (1) That he saw plaintiff upon this car; and (2) that he knew the car was in position to be struck by the cars in his train when he backed them to the west, and with this knowledge proceeded to bring about the collision, and not only destroy his master's property, but injure the plaintiff. No sane man believes he did this. The plaintiff's whole case as to the engineer rests upon the theory that he was facing west toward where this car was, taking signals from the brakeman. He had no reason to expect a trespasser upon any car. He had no reason to look further than to the signals of the brakeman. Under the evidence it was his duty to watch the brakeman for signals, and in this very case the necessity of the engineer watching the brakeman who gives the signals, rather than the cars or trucks, is fully demonstrated, for it appears that the brakeman finally discovered danger and had to give another signal to stop. Defendant explains the inability to stop by showing that the cars for the north track had been cut loose from the engine, and whilst the engineer stopped the other cars and his engine attached thereto he could not stop these cars. As to whether this was a fact was disputed by plaintiff's evidence. It is also shown that there were a number of box cars between his engine and the pole car, and it is not shown that in his position he could even see the track upon which he was running. He might have had his face in the direction of plaintiff, and no doubt did, because he was taking signals from the brakeman, which required him to look in the direction of plaintiff; but this does not show that he saw the plaintiff, or saw and knew that the pole car was not in the clear. The evidence is not sufficient to convict the engineer, nor the defendant for the alleged negligence of the engineer.

Now as to the brakeman. His position is different from that of the engineer. Under the evidence he was the man who directed and controlled the acts of the engineer. Upon his signals the engineer moved. He was the man in charge of this work under the record evidence. Under plaintiff's evidence the car had not cleared the main track in the effort to "kick" it in on the south track. Under the evidence it was moving eastward. As to how far it would have to move to occasion a collision with cars going in upon the north switch track is not apparent, but that it did move to such a point is apparent. The evidence for plaintiff shows that the brakeman did know that plaintiff was on that car, and did know that it was moving eastward, and that it either was in, or might soon reach, a place where a collision would be inevitable. Without evidence the court knows that it was the duty of this brakeman, having charge of the switching, to see that this car was in the clear before giving orders for other cars to be "kicked" or pushed back in that direction. This was a duty to his master. But extended discussion of this question is unnecessary. As above stated, the brakeman knew the boy was on the car, and knew the car was moving in the direction from which the other cars were to come upon his signal. The distance was evidently short. These facts alone render the position of a boy of plaintiff's age a perilous one, conditioned upon the movement of the car and the boy's ability to mount it and apply the brakes. Under the plaintiff's evidence all this was apparent to the brakeman. The boy was in a perilous position from the time he attempted to mount the car to the moment of the accident, and this was known to the brakeman. As to the brakeman, the evidence is sufficient to take the case to the jury. He should have seen that the car had been stopped in a safe position before giving his signal.

2. It is next contended that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in going upon and remaining upon the pole car. It is said that he had been jumping cars for some five years, and was perfectly familiar with switching movements; that he was 15 years old, lacking 8 months, and should have seen the peril he was in and protected himself by jumping off the car when he could have seen that it was in a position to be struck. It is true that the evidence showed the boy to have jumped and ridden upon moving cars for a long time prior to the accident. It is also true that the evidence discloses his age to be nearer 15 than 14 years. All this we grant, but can it be said that there was such contributory negligence as to take the case from the jury in a case wherein contributory negligence would be an effective defense? When he boarded the car it was under the direction of an experienced man, and presumably such experienced man would not have directed the act if it amounted to negligence as a matter of law. But to the facts. The car was moving slowly, and the boy got on it. We can't say that was so negligent as to take the question from the jury, even if contributory negligence were a matter of defense in the case. When on, he was attempting to set the brakes and stop the car; and if, in such act, his mind was diverted from the exact position of the car, we can hardly denominate that negligence as a matter of law. Again, in going there he had a right to rely upon the brakeman not giving a signal until the proper time. The evidence also shows that the engine and cars were backed up at a very rapid rate of speed. Under all these facts it was a question for the jury to say whether or not plaintiff was guilty of such contributory negligence as would bar a recovery, if, in fact, a question of contributory negligence is in this case at all, which question we reach later.

We conclude, therefore, that the demurrer to the testimony was properly overruled.

3. Connected with the foregoing and closely allied thereto is another contention of defendant, to the effect that the court refused to give instruction "a" and "b" as by it requested. These two instructions submit the question of the alleged contributory negligence of the plaintiff in getting upon the car. To our mind, the theory upon which this case was tried upon both sides fully answers this contention. That theory was that plaintiff was a trespasser and had no right to be where he was, and that if he recovered at all it was upon the humanitarian rule. The petition is drawn upon the humanitarian doctrine. The plaintiff's case is put to the jury upon that idea and none other. The humanitarian doctrine presupposes negligence or contributory negligence upon the part of the party invoking the rule. That doctrine in its essence is that, "Conceding that I am guilty of negligence in being where I am, yet if you know of my peril in time to save my life or limb, by the exercise of ordinary care on your part, then it is your duty to exercise such care, and a failure to so do renders you liable." In this case there was no error in refusing these instructions.

4. It is next urged that plaintiff's instruction No. 1, supra, is in a measure conflicting with Nos. 4 to 7, inclusive, given for defendant. This is true. Plaintiff's instruction permits the jury to consider the negligence of all the defendant's employes then engaged in the operation of the engine and cars, whilst the four instructions mentioned limits it to the negligence of the engineer alone. The plaintiff's instructions permitted a recovery upon the negligence of the employes or either of them. Plaintiff's instruction, we think, was well enough, following, as it did, the petition. Defendant's instruction Nos. 4 to 7 were erroneous in undertaking to limit the right of recovery to the negligence of the engineer alone. In such case, the error was committed in defendant's favor in this matter. In Christian v. Insurance

Co., 143 Mo., loc. cit. 468, 45 S. W. 269, Sherwood, J., said: "A long while ago it was decided in this state that a party cannot complain of errors in an instruction given at his own instance. Flowers v. Helm, 29 Mo. 324. This ruling was thought indisputably good law for many years. Later on, however, in Bluedorn v. Railroad, 108 Mo. 439, 18 S. W. 1103, 32 Am. St. Rep. 615, a brand new doctrine was proclaimed, to wit: That if the instructions of a plaintiff in a damage suit were all right and regular, but one asked by and given for defendant was erroneous and in conflict with the correct instructions of plaintiff, and the latter recovered, that this conflict, on the appeal of defendant, would necessitate the reversal of the judgment. * * * In other words, that self-invited error was ground for reversal. But this heresy was not long-lived; it received its coup de grace in Baker v. Railroad, 122 Mo. 533, 26 S. W. 20. So that having held plaintiff's instruction 7 is free from error, it must needs follow that if defendant's instruction 2 is in conflict therewith, it must be erroneous, and, if so, defendant takes nothing by reason of such conflict."

It should not be overlooked that this swing brakeman was the man controlling the movements of the engine and the cars in the yard. Under the plaintiff's instruction, the jury could have well found for the plaintiff on the negligence of this brakeman.

Other points made have been examined, but these are the only ones we deem necessary to mention in further detail.

The judgment is affirmed. All concur.

On Rehearing.

It is earnestly insisted in the motion for rehearing that the negligence of the brakeman was never submitted to the jury, and that therefore the issue found by this court as vital to defendant's case is an entire new theory injected here for the first time. And it is further insisted that the petition does not count upon the negligence of the brakeman. If either of these contentions were well founded, there would be error in the opinion, but they are not as we read the petition and the instructions.

In the first place, the petition, after stating that plaintiff was placed in a place of danger by the direction of the brakeman, then proceeds: "That while plaintiff was so engaged on said car, and was in said place of peril, defendant and defendant's said conductor, agents, servants, and employes operating said train, knowing that plaintiff was on said car and in a place of peril, and after they could have known it by the exercise of ordinary care, negligently and unskillfully mismanaged the said engine, cars, and train, and carelessly and negligently, and with great and unusual and unnecessary force and violence, ran said engine, and freight cars attached thereto, against the said car on which said plaintiff was, by reason of which," etc.

This petition is certainly broad enough to include the brakeman. It includes in its allegations not only all the agents and employes of defendant, but the defendant itself, the language being, "defendant and defendant's said conductor, agents, servants, and employes operating said train." It does not stop here, but it avers that "they" (referring to the clause above, which included defendant and all of its employes) "negligently and unskillfully mismanaged the said engine, cars, and train, and carelessly and negligently * * * ran said engine and freight cars attached thereto against the said car on which plaintiff was," etc.

So that it is apparent that a fair construction of this petition leads to the inevitable conclusion that it charges the injury to plaintiff to have been occasioned by the negligence of the brakeman, as well as by the negligence of the engineer and other employes. Then, going for a minute to the evidence, it is there shown that the middle brakeman was the vice principal so far as the switching of cars was concerned. Under the evidence, this peculiar duty was to get the switch list from the station agent and proceed to do the switching. Whilst so doing, the engineer acted under his orders and signals. When he signaled to the engineer to come, he came, and when he signaled to him to go, he went. He was in fact the party, at that time, managing and "operating" that train, or portion of the train. He was in charge of and operating that train in the doing of this work. This, under the testimony, was his duty.

Now, was this negligence submitted to the jury? We think so. Instruction No. 1 for the plaintiff, among other things, says: "That defendant's agents, servants, and employes in charge of and operating and managing an engine and cars attached thereto saw the said Errett Hall and his said peril and danger, and became aware thereof in time, by the exercise of ordinary care, to have avoided injuring him, and that the defendant's said agents, servants, and employes in charge of said engine and cars attached thereto failed to exercise such ordinary care, and negligently ran said engine and cars against the car upon which said Errett Hall was," etc. When this is read in connection with the portion of the petition above quoted, it will be seen that the instruction covers the negligent acts of the same persons as is covered in the petition. It covers the acts of all agents and employes engaged in operating the train at the time, and certainly covers the negligence, if any, of the brakeman, who, under the evidence, was in fact the controlling spirit of the operation of the train at the time.

The negligence of this particular employe was not only pleaded, but submitted. In the original opinion we discuss fully the effect of the giving of an erroneous instruction for the defendant, when a proper one had been given for the plaintiff, and will not reiterate here.

Under the facts, had defendant asked and the court refused an instruction limiting the liability to the negligence of the brakeman, the defendant would have been in condition to complain.

Other points made are sufficiently answered in the original opinion.

Motion for rehearing overruled. All concur.

GARRETT v. ST. LOUIS TRANSIT CO.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 1. March 31, 1909.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 219*)—ADMISSIONS.

That a party induced a witness by threats of a criminal prosecution to return to the state and testify is not admissible as an admission of such party, since it does not show an attempt to improperly influence the witness or his testimony, in the absence of any proof indicating an evil purpose on the part of the party.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 763; Dec. Dig. § 219.*]

2. WITNESSES (§ 309*)—IMPEACHMENT—EVIDENCE.

In an action against a street railway company for the death of a person, ejected from the car by the conductor for failure to pay fare, the fact that the conductor, testifying for the company, refused to testify at the coroner's inquest, on advice of the company's attorney, on the ground that his testimony might incriminate him, was inadmissible to impeach him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Dec. Dig. § 309.*]

3. WITNESSES (§ 393*)—IMPEACHMENT—INCONSISTENT STATEMENTS.

The testimony given by a witness at the coroner's inquest is admissible to impeach him, when he subsequently testifies in a court regarding the same matter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 1254; Dec. Dig. § 393.*]

4. WITNESSES (§ 305*)—PRIVILEGE—WAIVER.

A witness cannot be compelled to testify at a coroner's inquest where he believes that his testimony will incriminate him; but he may waive his constitutional right, which is a personal privilege, and testify on all matters relevant to the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 1063, 1057; Dec. Dig. § 305.*]

5. CARRIERS (§ 304*)—INJURIES TO PASSENGERS—CARE REQUIRED.

One who boards a street car with no intent to pay fare, and who does not pay fare when requested by the conductor, and who refuses to leave the car on the demand of the conductor, is a trespasser, and the street railway company owes to him only the duty of not unnecessarily and intentionally injuring him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1447, 1450; Dec. Dig. § 304.*]

6. CARRIERS (§ 381*)—INJURIES TO PASSENGER—ACTION—EVIDENCE.

One suing a street railway company for the death of a person ejected from a car by the conductor thereof, and basing his right to recover on the ground that decedent was a passenger and criminally assaulted by the conductor, must show not only that decedent was assaulted and killed by the conductor, but that he was a passenger.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 381.*]

7. CARRIERS (§ 370*)—PASSENGERS—INJURIES—LIABILITY.

Where, on the refusal of a passenger to pay fare when demanded by the conductor, a fight ensued, which was brought on by the passenger or voluntarily entered into by him during which the passenger was thrown or fell from the car and received injuries causing his death, the carrier was not liable for the acts of the conductor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 370.*]

8. DEATH (§ 14*)—ACTION FOR DEATH—STATUTES.

To authorize a recovery under Rev. St. 1899, § 2864 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1637), authorizing recovery for the death of a person from the negligence or "criminal intent" of any servant in charge of trains, etc., the evidence must show a criminal intent, followed by criminal conduct resulting in the fatal injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Death, Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Daniel G. Taylor, Judge.

Action by Annie Garrett against the St. Louis Transit Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

The plaintiff filed this suit in the circuit court of the city of St. Louis on April 8, 1904, against the defendant, for the recovery of $5,000 damages for the alleged wrongful killing of her husband, John Garrett, on the 28th day of March, 1904, by one of defendant's conductors, in charge of a car on the Olive street line, while attempting to eject Garrett for the alleged failure to pay his fare. The petition was in three counts, and a trial was had thereon before the court and a jury, which resulted in a verdict and judgment for defendant; and, the court refusing a new trial, the cause was brought here by the plaintiff for review.

The first count of the amended petition was as follows:

"That on the 28th day of March, 1904, the plaintiff's said husband, John Garrett, entered and was received by the defendants as a passenger on an east-bound car of the defendants on the said Olive street, at Beaumont street, on their said line of street railroad; that while the plaintiff's said husband was riding on said car on the rear platform thereof, and while said car was running at a rapid rate of speed on the said Olive street, between Jefferson avenue and Twenty-Third street, the defendants' conductor, in charge of their said car, and whilst running, conducting, and managing said car as the agent, servant, and employé of the defendants, wrongfully and forcibly attempted to eject the plaintiff's husband from said car, and in so doing caused the plaintiff's said husband to fall from said car while said car was in rapid motion, and to strike the street with great force and violence, whereby the plaintiff's said husband sustained injuries from which he died in the said city of St. Louis on the 13th day of March, 1904, and within six (6) months prior to the commencement of this action; that said acts of the defendants' said conductor in attempting to eject the plaintiff's said husband from said car, and in causing him to fall therefrom, were done negligently and with criminal intent, and that the injuries sustained by the plaintiff's said husband, and from which he died as aforesaid, resulted from, and were occasioned by, said negligence and criminal intent of the defendants' said agent, servant, and employé, to wit, the conductor aforesaid, whilst running, conducting, and managing the defendants' said car; and that by reason of the death of the plaintiff's said husband, caused as aforesaid, an action has accrued to the plaintiff to sue for and recover from the defendants the sum of five thousand dollars ($5,000)." Wherefore, the plaintiff prays judgment, etc.

The second count is the same as the first, with the exception that it charges that the wrongful acts complained of and which resulted in the death of plaintiff's husband were done negligently. The third count is also the same as the first, with the exception that it charges that the wrongful acts of the conductor of defendants which resulted in the death of plaintiff's husband were done with criminal intent.

The answer of defendant, St. Louis Transit Company, omitting formal parts, is as follows:

"Now comes the St. Louis Transit Company, and answers the three counts of plaintiff's petition as follows:

"This defendant denies each and every allegation in each and every count contained.

"This defendant, further answering each and every count, states that John Garrett boarded the street car mentioned in each count, and refused to pay a fare thereon, and after riding some blocks insisted upon leaving said car without paying fare, and while said car was in motion, by reason of which insistence of his he sustained the injuries, if any, mentioned in each count of plaintiff's petition.

"This defendant, further answering each and every count of plaintiff's petition, stated that John Garrett, mentioned in each count thereof, boarded a street car and attempted to pull the conductor off said car while it was in motion, and while struggling with the conductor, and when about to succeed in pulling him off the car, a person unknown to this defendant kicked said Garrett and caused him to release his hold upon said conductor and fall to the ground, whereby he received the injuries, if any, alleged in each count of the plaintiff's petition.

"Wherefore, having fully answered, this defendant asks to be discharged with its costs."

The answer of the defendant United Railways Company of St. Louis is a general denial.

Plaintiff's evidence tended to prove that at the time of the injury and death of John Garrett he and plaintiff were husband and wife, and that he died of the injuries received, at the City Hospital, in the city of St. Louis, on March 30, 1904.

On the 23th of the same month, about 6 o'clock p. m., John Garrett boarded an east-bound Olive street car at Beaumont street, and stood on the steps of the rear platform of the car. What occurred after the car reached Jefferson and Olive streets, the point where the injury occurred, is well told in the language of plaintiff's witnesses, as substantially stated in appellant's abstract of the record, which is as follows:

Direct examination:

Mrs. Hannah Williams testified that she was a laundress, living in St. Louis. That she was acquainted with John Garrett. That on March 23, 1904, about 6 p. m., she boarded an east-bound Olive street car at Sarah and Olive streets, intending to get off at Jefferson and Olive streets. When the car reached Beaumont and Olive streets, John Garrett boarded it. When the car reached Jefferson and Olive it stopped on the east side of Jefferson and witness got off. When she came out of the door of the car to get off, Garrett was standing on the rear of the back platform; the conductor was in front of him, with his right hand holding Garrett's left arm. After witness got off car she turned around and saw the car going east. Garrett was standing on the step with his back to the sidewalk. The conductor was in front of him, with his hand on Garrett's shoulder. Garrett was standing about the middle of the first or second step, in front of the upright iron bar, which runs from the middle of the step to the roof of the back platform. His back was to the south, and the conductor was facing him, and right up against him with the iron bar between them. As the car proceeded, witness noticed conductor give Garrett a shove, and Garrett fell backwards to the street, Garrett at the time of the shove having one hand on the upright bar. At the time the conductor shoved Garrett a crowd came out of the car, and some one kicked Garrett, but witness could not tell who it was that kicked. This kick followed the shove. Witness went down to where Garrett was lying; blood was coming out of his mouth. Garrett fell about a half block east of Jefferson avenue, the car going at a rapid speed at the time. Witness went near enough to observe whether or not there was any odor of liquor on Garrett's breath, but did not notice any.

Dr. Meissenbach testified that he was a physician residing in St. Louis. On March 28, 1904, some one came to his office and requested him to go down on the street to see a man. He found a colored man lying with his head towards the east, his heels towards the west; he was unconscious; blood coming from his nostrils; breathing seemed labored; the eyes did not act alike; he did not respond to any stimulant; was thoroughly unconscious; blood was coming from one ear, and slight bruise on forehead. He was taken to the City Hospital. Witness saw this man next morning at the City Hospital, between 10 and 12 o'clock; he was unconscious, lying in bed with bandages around his head, dark blood coming from nose and mouth. When he saw the man lying in Olive street he examined him to see if he could detect the odor of alcohol, but found no evidences of it, although he smelled the nostrils and breath. The man was lying about one-third of the distance from Jefferson avenue to the next street when witness saw him.

Dr. Nies testified that in March, 1904, he was an interne at the City Hospital; that he recalled John Garrett being brought there; Garrett's skull was fractured on the back of his head; he died about 7 a. m., March 30th. Witness saw nothing other than the fractured skull which could have caused death.

August White testified that he was 13 years of age, and resided at 2627 Olive street, St. Louis, and was a newsboy, and was such in the spring of 1904. Witness boarded the car on which Garrett was riding at Beaumont for the purpose of selling papers. He noticed Garrett get on at Beaumont street. Witness did not notice anything happen before the car left Olive and Jefferson avenue. After the car left Jefferson avenue and had proceeded to about the middle of the block, Garrett was kicked off. Witness saw the kick, but did not notice who gave it. Garrett was standing on the back step of the car when the kick was delivered, and the conductor was standing close to him. After the kick, Garrett fell out into the street. The car did not go very far after Garrett fell. Witness remained on the car until it stopped.

Cross-examination:

Witness did not see Garrett or the conductor have hold of one another; he saw the kick, but did not see who gave it, he being on the north side of the platform selling papers at the time.

Direct examination:

John P. Kridzer testified that he resided in St. Louis, and was a paper ruler by trade. On the evening of March 28, 1904, between 5:30 and 6 p. m., he was standing on the southwest corner of Olive street and Jefferson avenue, looking north; he saw the car on which Garrett was riding coming east. Garrett and the conductor were on the back platform, the conductor standing in front of Garrett. He came toward Garrett with his right arm raised and his index finger out; witness could not hear what words were spoken. The conductor was standing on the west end of the platform and near the south side; the conductor was east of Garrett and facing west. The car stopped at Olive and Jefferson, and a colored woman got off. The car then proceeded down Olive street at a fast rate of speed, and increased its speed as it proceeded. The conductor went towards Garrett, and the latter moved off towards the edge of the platform; the conductor followed him, and Garrett got down on the step and stopped there about where the iron bar runs up. When the car had proceeded about two-fifths of a block from Jefferson avenue, some one came out and stood next to the conductor; then some one kicked Garrett, and he fell off backwards. Witness could not tell who delivered the kick. At the time of the kick Garrett was standing with the right hand holding the upright iron bar, and the left holding the lapel of the conductor's coat and his right shoulder even with the iron bar; Garrett did not reach down; witness examined Garrett after he fell, and saw the print of the kick on his clothes over the lower part of the stomach.

Redirect examination:

As Garrett moved away from the conductor, the latter followed him, shaking his finger at him. It was still light enough to see when the accident occurred. "Mr. Swarts: I understand there is not objection raised to this copy of the evidence taken at the coroner's inquest, which is not certified to. I desire to offer the testimony of H. D. Crady, taken at the inquest. He was the conductor of that car. (Defendant's counsel object to the offer of the testimony before the coroner as incompetent, immaterial, and irrelevant. The objection was sustained. To which ruling of the court, plaintiff, by her counsel, then and there excepted at the time.)"

Morton Jourdan, called by plaintiff (oath waived). Mr. Jourdan did not know whether or not Mr. Walsh, of the claim department of the St. Louis Transit Company, ever represented that company in inquests before the coroner. He may have done so without his knowledge. Counsel for plaintiff here offer the deposition of H. D. Crady, filed in the case, and offered to read therefrom the following questions and answers: "Q. Do you know your wife wrote a letter of this purport to the company, dated November 6, 1904? 'Mr. Palmer'—who is he? A. Claim agent. Q. A letter as follows: 'Mr. Palmer, St. Louis, Mo.—Dear Sir: I received your letter a few days ago and was very much surprised that you wanted my husband for a witness. It is a wonder you did not keep him there while you had him. How much is his presence at that trial worth to you, and what are you willing to give? I am not sure that he can get off at that time or not, but you name your figure and if it is large enough, I will let you know where you can find him. He is doing very well now and will not come unless there are some inducements. So awaiting your reply, I am, Yours sincerely, Mrs. H. D. Crady.' A. I do not know whether she did or not. I really never paid much attention to it. Q. Did you instruct her to send such a letter as that? A. No, sir. Q. Did you ever discuss with her the sending of such a letter? A. No, sir. Q. Where were you on the 11th day of November? A. I was here in November. Q. Now, in reply to that, I will ask you if your wife ever received a letter in reply to that letter? A. I think so. Q. Did she turn that letter over to you? A. I think I read it over; yes, sir. Q. Is it not a fact that that letter informed you that you had better give your testimony in this case, or you probably be indicted for manslaughter? A. That letter said something about that. Q. Who was that letter from? A. That letter was from—I forget his name; I never saw any letter from Palmer. I forget the man's name. Q. What position did he hold? A. I think he is under Palmer; Kavanaugh is his name. Q. I will ask you to produce the letter and turn it over to the notary public to be attached to this deposition; will you do it? A. I expect the letter is destroyed. I do not expect it can be done. Q. I want to make the request that you produce it and give it to the notary. A. If I have it I will, and if I have not, I cannot. (Not found; memorandum by notary.) Q. Did the defendants in this case agree to pay you any money for your testimony in this cause? A. No, sir. Q. Did you ever write to your wife and suggest that she write them for money? A. No, sir. Mr. Jourdan: We object, for the reason, if the deposition of the witness is offered, we are entitled, and the jury are entitled, to have it all. We object to selecting out one or two extracts and offering it in that way. Mr. Swarts: As an admission, plaintiff offers this part of Conductor Crady's deposition. The Court: That does not apply to this situation. (Defendant's objection is sustained by the court, to which ruling of the court plaintiff, by her counsel, then and there excepted at the time.)"

Plaintiff there rested her case.

The defendant the United Railways Company interposed a demurrer to the plaintiff's evidence, which was by the court sustained, and judgment went for it accordingly; but as plaintiff failed to appeal therefrom, it will be unnecessary to notice further that company.

The defendant, the transit company, also asked an instruction in the nature of a demurrer to the evidence, telling the jury that plaintiff could not recover on the second count of the petition, which was by the court given, to which action plaintiff duly excepted.

Defendant's testimony was substantially as follows, as appears from appellant's abstract:

Direct examination:

William Hawkins testified that at the time of the accident he was standing on the south side of Olive street, east of Jefferson avenue; witness saw the car on which Garrett was riding coming east on Olive street; Garrett was on the back platform, holding the upright iron bar with one hand and the handhold with the other; the conductor had hold of his shoulder; Garrett looked as though he had started to jump off, when he fell back on the street; there were several people on the rear platform. Witness did not see a lick struck nor a kick, nor did he see conductor shove Garrett; he was looking towards Garrett and the conductor at the time.

Cross-examination:

Witness was standing about 20 or 35 feet from Jefferson avenue; the conductor put his hand on Garrett's shoulder, then rung the bell; the minute Garrett's feet struck the ground the conductor pulled the bell. Witness' idea was that Garrett attempted to jump and struck solidly on his feet, which went out from under him and he fell.

Direct examination:

Ira E. Benson testified that in the latter part of March, 1904, witness was a motorman for the St. Louis Transit Company; he quit that company the last of April, 1904, and at the time of the trial was a plumber. On the day of the accident he was motorman of the car following the one on which Garrett was riding; he noticed Garrett get aboard at either Leffingwell avenue or Beaumont street. Witness' car was following from three or four blocks to two car lengths; he saw the conductor go to Garrett several times before the car reached Jefferson avenue; when the car got to Jefferson it stopped an unusually long time. Witness stopped at the crossing of Jefferson avenue, and the conductor of the car in front held it so long that he rang his gong for him to go ahead; the conductor and Garrett were standing near the edge of the platform; the conductor laid his hand on Garrett's shoulder, but did not strike him; Garrett stopped, facing toward the conductor, at the edge of the platform, within a foot of the steps; the car had gone about 75 feet from Jefferson avenue when this occurred. The conductor was holding the rod with both hands; Garrett had given a jerk, when a passenger on the platform kicked or struck Garrett in the stomach; Garrett then turned loose of the conductor and stepped back. The car went down to Twenty-Third and Olive before it stopped.

Cross-examination:

At the time Garrett was kicked off the car on which he was riding it was going about 20 miles an hour. Before the car on which Garrett was riding left Jefferson avenue the conductor was standing on the platform in front of him, and Garrett was on the step; part of the time the conductor had had hands on Garrett's shoulder, and was talking to him, apparently. As the car started down Olive street Garrett had his left hand on the rod. When the car had gone about 60 or 65 feet Garrett took his hand off of the rod, the car then going about 15 miles an hour; reached down and grabbed the conductor about the legs; then some one came out and kicked two or three times; while this kicking was being done the conductor struggled to his feet, he having fallen to the platform, and held himself by the rod. Witness was about 75 feet behind Garrett and the conductor when Garrett grabbed the latter's legs.

Defendant offered the deposition of Hugh D. Crady, taken in this case at Ft. Worth, Tex., on behalf of defendants:

Witness testified that he was living in Ft. Worth, Tex.; he was conductor on the car from which Garrett fell. Garrett boarded the car at 2700 or 2800, and refused to pay his fare, and witness told him he would have to pay his fare or get off; Garrett said he was only going a short distance and was not going to pay. Witness told him to do one or the other, and Garrett said he would not get off, whereupon witness took hold of him, and while doing so Garrett told him that if he did not let go of him he would take him off, too, and grabbed witness around the ankles. Witness had hold of the lapel of Garrett's coat with one hand, and the upright iron rod in the center with the other. Witness did not know what happened, but Garrett let go and fell backwards; he did not know whether or not some one kicked Garrett. Witness jumped off of car and went to where Garrett was lying, and left him in charge of a conductor who was laying off. Witness did not attempt to strike or kick Garrett, nor did he see any one else do so; his object in holding to him was that he should pay his fare and not get off in the middle of the block while the car was going. There were several passengers on the back platform at the time.

Cross-examination:

When Garrett got on the car he said he would not pay any fare; he stood on the step, and leaned up against the post in the center; he did not get off of the step. Witness did not make him get off of the car at Jefferson avenue, because he thought that he would pay his fare; as soon as the car left Jefferson avenue he took hold of Garrett, because he thought that he was going to get off of the car; and, besides, witness wanted to collect his fare.

Witness denied in his deposition that he made the following statement to Police Officer Thomas F. Cuddihoe: "Garrett got on my car at Twenty-Seventh and Olive and refused to pay his fare, saying he was only going a short distance, and I told him he would have to get off at Jefferson avenue if he did not pay his fare. He did not get off at Jefferson avenue, and after leaving Jefferson avenue he started to get off the car, and in order to keep the man from falling I caught hold of him—in order to keep him from falling—in the meantime a citizen was going to get off at Twenty-Third street, and in jarring up against him he knocked him off." Witness admitted that he did make a statement to the officer, but not the above one. He could not tell whether he said to the motorman, G. W. Haase, "Only a man fell off the car." Witness attended the coroner's inquest held over Garrett; he made a statement, but did not suppose that it could be called testifying. He was asked, at the coroner's inquest, and stated the car on which he and Motorman G. W. Haase were running on March 28, 1904, about 6 o'clock p. m.; he was also asked if John Garrett was on the car, and stated that there was a colored man on the car; he did not know his name.

At the taking of the deposition the following questions were asked and answers given, which counsel for defendant omitted to read, but which counsel for plaintiff offered to read as a part of defendant's testimony, and also in rebuttal for the impeachment of Crady's testimony: "Q. Were you asked the following question at the coroner's inquest: 'Will you make a statement to the jury?' A. I was. Q. And to the question, did you make reply as follows: 'I do not care to make a statement to the jury.' A. Yes, sir. Q. Were you asked at the same inquest why you did not care to make a statement? A. I was. Q. And did you reply to that: 'Well, my attorney told me not to.' A. I did. Q. Then were you asked at the same inquest: 'Well, what attorney, the attorney for the transit company?' A. I was. Q. Did you answer that: 'Well, yes, sir.' A. I said for the transit company and for my personal interests, too. Q. Were you asked this question at the same inquest: 'Are you afraid you will incriminate yourself?' A. I was. Q. And did you reply to that question, at the inquest: 'Yes, sir.' A. No, sir."

All of which above set out questions and answers were objected to by counsel for defendant when said deposition was being read at the trial, and the objection sustained by the court, to which action of the court the plaintiff, by her counsel, then and there excepted at the time.

Witness was discharged by the transit company about August 1, 1904, and then left St. Louis and went with his wife to Eddyville, Ky., to visit relatives of his wife; from Eddyville he went to various places, and finally to Ft. Worth, Tex., where he was living with his wife when his deposition was taken. The wife of the witness had forwarded to him one letter which she received from the transit company, and had received one after she came to Ft. Worth; witness did not have the letters with him.

Witness testified that the car, after it left Jefferson avenue, was going about 10 miles an hour; that he stepped off of it while it was going at the same rate as it was when Garrett fell off. Witness did not take hold of Garrett to push him off, nor did he kick him off.

Redirect examination:

Witness smelt the odor of whisky on Garrett's breath, but could not say that he was under the influence of liquor. Witness appeared to give his deposition in answer to a subpoena, and had not been offered any reward or remuneration of any kind for giving his testimony; that he felt somewhat unfriendly toward defendant.

Defendant rested here.

In rebuttal:

Direct examination:

Thomas F. Cuddihoe testified that on March 28, 1906, and on the day of trial, he was a police officer of the city of St. Louis; to the best of his recollection, the conductor of the car from which Garrett fell stated to him, at the time, that Garrett refused to pay his fare, saying he was only going a short distance, and the conductor told Garrett that he would have to get off at Jefferson avenue, if he did not pay his fare; Garrett did not get off at Jefferson avenue, but afterwards started to get off, and he took hold of him to keep him from falling, and in the meantime a passenger was going to get off at Twenty-Third street, and he thought that this person shoved Garrett off.

Cross-examination:

The conductor told the officer that he did not shove or kick Garrett; that he started to get off in the middle of the block.

Thereupon the plaintiff prayed the court to give the jury the following instructions, to wit:

"The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that on the 28th day of March, 1904, and at the time of his death on the 30th day of March, 1904, the plaintiff was the lawful wife of John Garrett, and that on said 28th day of March, 1904, the defendant, St. Louis Transit Company, was a carrier of passengers for hire, and used and operated the railroad and car mentioned in the evidence for such purpose; and if the jury further believe from the evidence that the defendant, St. Louis Transit Company, received the said John Garrett as a passenger on said car on said 28th day of March, 1904; and if the jury further believe from the evidence that while the said John Garrett was on said car the defendant's conductor in charge of the said car, whilst running, conducting, and managing said car as the agent, servant, and employé of the defendant, wrongfully and forcibly attempted to eject the plaintiff's said husband from said car, and that the plaintiff's said husband was thereby caused to fall from said car while said car was in rapid motion and to strike the street with great force and violence, and that thereby the plaintiff's said husband sustained injuries from which he died on the 30th day of March, 1904; and if the jury further believe from the evidence that said acts of the defendant's said conductor, in attempting to eject the plaintiff's said husband from said car and causing him to fall therefrom, if the jury so find from the evidence, were done with criminal intent; and unless the jury further believe from the evidence that the plaintiff's said husband was injured by his voluntarily attempting to leave said car, or by an attempt on his part to forcibly pull said conductor from said car—then the verdict of the jury must be in favor of the plaintiff on the third count of her amended petition."

Which instruction the court refused to give; to which action and ruling of the court, in refusing to give said instruction, the plaintiff then and there duly excepted at the time.

And the court of its own motion gave to the jury the following instructions, to wit:

"The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that on the 28th day of March, 1904, and at the time of his death on the 30th day of March, 1904, the plaintiff was the lawful wife of John Garrett, and that on said 28th day of March, 1904, the defendant, St. Louis Transit Company, was a carrier of passengers for hire, and used and operated the railroad and car mentioned in the evidence for such purpose; and if the jury further believe from the evidence that the defendant, St. Louis Transit Company, received the said John Garrett on said car on said 28th day of March, 1904; and if the jury further believe from the evidence that while the said John Garrett was on said car the defendant's conductor in charge of said car, whilst running, conducting, and managing said car as the agent, servant, and employé of the defendant, wrongfully and forcibly attempted to eject the plaintiff's said husband from said car, and that the plaintiff's said husband was thereby caused to fall from said car while said car was in rapid motion, and to strike the street with great force and violence, and that thereby the plaintiff's said husband sustained injuries from which he died on the 30th day of March, 1904; and if the jury further believe from the evidence that said acts of the defendant's said conductor, in attempting to eject the plaintiff's said husband from said car and causing him to fall therefrom, if the jury so find from the evidence, were done with criminal intent—then the verdict of the jury must be in favor of the plaintiff on the third count of the amended petition."

"(8) If you find from the evidence that plaintiff's husband boarded the car with the intention of not paying his fare, or that when the conductor requested the payment of his fare he refused to pay same, then he was not a passenger in contemplation of law.

"(9) If you find and believe from the evidence that plaintiff's husband was engaged in a scuffle with the conductor, and just immediately before he fell or was pushed from the car he had hold of the conductor and was attempting to pull the conductor from the car, then the conductor had the right to use such force as was necessary in order to prevent plaintiff's husband from pulling him from the car while it was in motion, and, if plaintiff's husband was injured as the result of the conductor's efforts to save or protect himself, defendant is not liable, and you will find for the defendant.

"(10) If you find that the defendant's conductor in charge of the car had demanded of the plaintiff's husband that he pay his fare and that he refused so to do, and that a scuffle and fight ensued, which was brought on by the plaintiff's husband or voluntarily entered into by plaintiff's husband, and that during such scuffle or fight he was thrown, pushed, or fell from said car and was thereby injured, then this defendant is not liable for the acts of the conductor, and your verdict will be for the defendant. In order to voluntarily enter into a scuffle, one must do so for the purpose of offensive attack. One who engages in a scuffle for the purpose of defending himself cannot be said to do so voluntarily."

"(12) Before the plaintiff can recover in this case, she must establish an act of criminal conduct upon the part of the defendant's conductor by a preponderance of the testimony. This burden is imposed upon the plaintiff by law, and, in determining the facts, you should be governed by this instruction. By 'preponderance of the testimony' is meant by a greater weight of the testimony and to your reasonable satisfaction.

"In this connection you are instructed that if the plaintiff has failed to show said act of criminal conduct upon the part of the conductor, then your verdict will be for the defendant."

To the giving of which instructions, and each of them, the plaintiff then and there duly excepted at the time.

The court at the instance of the plaintiff gave the following instruction:

"(a) By the expression 'criminal intent' as used in this instruction is meant a reckless disregard for and a willful and intentional indifference to the direct consequences which an act may have on the life or limb of another."

And the court at the instance of the defendant, St. Louis Transit Company, gave to the jury the following instructions, to wit:

"The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that John Garrett, at the time and place mentioned in the evidence, of his own accord, jumped or fell from defendant's car, then your verdict shall be for the defendant.

"The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that John Garrett, at the time and place mentioned in the evidence, attempted, by throwing his arms around the knees of the conductor in charge of said car, to pull said conductor off of said car, and that the conductor resisted and defended himself against such attempt, and during and as a result of said resistance plaintiff's husband fell or was pushed from said car, then your verdict shall be for the defendant; provided you further believe from the evidence that the conductor used only such force in defending himself as the circumstances seem to warrant.

"The court instructs the jury that if they believe from the evidence that John Garrett, at the time and place mentioned in the evidence, was kicked or shoved from the car in question by some person unknown, standing on the back platform of said car, other than the conductor, and that prior to said act of kicking the conductor had no knowledge or intimation that the same would be done, and if they further believe from the evidence that the conductor in no way aided or abetted or caused said kicking to be done, then your verdict shall be for the defendant.

"(4) The court instructs the jury that, under the law and all the evidence, plaintiff is not entitled to recover against the defendant, St. Louis Transit Company, under the first count in the petition, and your verdict as to that count will be for that defendant."

"(11) You are the sole judges of the credibility of the witnesses, and of the weight and value to be given to their testimony. And in this connection you are instructed that you have a right to take into consideration the appearance and conduct of the witnesses upon the stand while testifying, their interest in the result of the case, their feeling for or against either of the parties to the litigation, the probability or improbability of their statements, their positions at the time of the accident, and their ability to see and to know what was going on; and you are instructed in this connection that, if you believe that any witness has willfully sworn falsely to any material fact, you are at liberty to disregard any portion or all of the testimony of such witness."

To the giving of which instructions, and each of them, the plaintiff then and there duly excepted at the time.

As before stated, the jury found for defendant, and from the judgment entered therein the plaintiff duly appealed.

The assignment of errors is as follows:

"(1) The court erred in excluding competent and legal evidence offered by the plaintiff.

"(2) The court erred in giving improper instructions to the jury."

Lyon & Swarts and Dwight D. Currie, for appellant. Boyle & Priest and G. T. Priest, for appellee.

WOODSON, J. (after stating the facts as above). 1. The first error assigned by counsel for appellant regards the action of the trial court in excluding from the jury that part of the deposition of H. D. Crady, taken in Ft. Worth, Tex., which relates to a letter he testified his wife received from one of the claim agents of defendant, written in reply to her letter written to Mr. Palmer, before mentioned, which is as follows:

"Mr. Palmer, St. Louis, Missouri—Dear Sir: I received your letter a few days ago and was very much surprised that you wanted my husband for a witness. It is a wonder you did not keep him there while you had him. How much is his presence at the trial worth to you, and what are you willing to give him? I am not sure he can get off at that time or not, but you name your figure and if large enough, I will let you know where you can find him. He is doing very well now and will not come unless there are some inducements. So awaiting your reply, I am, Yours," etc.

The letter from the claim agent, in reply to Mrs. Crady's letter, had been either lost or destroyed, and for that reason was not attached to and made a part of said deposition; but he testified that the substance of that letter was that if he, Crady, did not give his testimony in the case, he would probably be indicted for manslaughter.

Counsel for appellant contends that the letter written by the claim agent of respondent in reply to the letter of Mrs. Crady to Mr. Palmer was the admission of a threat made by the company of a prosecution of Hugh Crady for manslaughter if he did not appear and testify in this case. In support of that contention, counsel rely upon the cases of Snell v. Bray, 56 Wis. 156, 14 N. W. 14, and Cruikshank v. Gordon, 48 Hun, 308, 1 N. Y. Supp. 443. The former case held that letters written by or at the instigation of a party to an action to third persons warning them not to aid the other party or testify in the action or urging them to testify to a particular state of facts were in the nature of admissions by conduct, and were admissible in evidence. The latter case is to the same effect.

In our judgment, the letters referred to in those cases were properly admitted in evidence, but in the case at bar there is no pretense that the letter written by the claim agent warned Crady not to aid plaintiff or testify in her behalf, or to testify to any particular state of facts, as was true in the cases before mentioned. In fact, Crady testified that he was offered no money to testify, nor did he say the respondent desired or wished him to do or not to do anything which was improper, legally or morally. According to his testimony, the extent of the threat was simply to induce him through fear to return to the state and testify as a witness in the case. In the absence of any testimony indicating an evil purpose on the part of the claim agent in writing the letter, the court would not be warranted in presuming his motives were sinister or improper; but, upon the contrary, we must presume his intentions were good. While neither the law nor good citizenship indorse that means of procuring the attendance of witnesses upon courts of justice, yet that fact alone should not brand the writer of the letter and his principal as trying improperly to influence the witness or his testimony. We are therefore of the opinion that the court rightfully excluded the testimony.

2. It is next insisted by counsel for appellant that the trial court erred in excluding from the jury certain questions and answers contained in the deposition of H. D. Crady, the conductor, with whom Garrett had the difficulty, and which resulted in his death.

Defendant had read his deposition to the jury, wherein he testified that deceased boarded his car and refused to pay his fare; that when the car reached Jefferson avenue he told him he must pay his fare or leave the car, and that he refused to do either; that he took hold of him, and while doing so Garrett told him that if he did not let him go he would take him off too, and grabbed him, Crady, around the ankles; and that while in that position he was holding onto Garrett's coat with one hand and to an upright iron rod with the other; and that while so holding Garrett let go his ankles and fell back in the street and was injured, but that he did not know what caused him to fall.

The questions and answers were offered for the purpose of impeaching Crady, and are as follows: "Q. Were you asked the following questions at the coroner's inquest: 'Will you make a statement to the jury?' A. I was. Q. And to the question did you make a reply as follows: 'I do not care to make a statement to the jury?' A. Yes, sir. Q. Were you asked at the same inquest why you did not care to make a statement? A. I was. Q. And did you reply to that: 'Well, my attorney told me not to?' A. I did. Q. Then were you asked at the same inquest: 'Well, what attorney, the attorney of the transit company?' A. I was. Q. Did you answer that: 'Well, yes, sir.' A. I said for the transit company and for my personal interests, too. Q. Were you asked this question at the same inquest: 'Are you afraid you will incriminate yourself?' A. I was. Q. And did you reply to that question at the inquest: 'Yes, sir?' A. No, sir."

Counsel for respondent contend that the action of the court in excluding that testimony was proper, and rely upon the case of Masterson v. Transit Co., 204 Mo. 507, 103 S. W. 48, as supporting their contention. In that case this court in banc, speaking through Valliant, J., page 523 of 204 Mo., page 53 of 103 S. W., used this language:

"The motorman was a witness for defendant, and gave his account of the accident. On cross-examination he was asked if he had testified at the coroner's inquest, and he answered, 'No.' 'Were you present at the inquest?' A. Yes.' The counsel for plaintiffs then produced and showed to the court what purported to be a transcript of the evidence taken at the coroner's inquest, in which it appeared that this motorman was sworn as a witness, and had in answer to question stated his name, residence, and business; he was then asked to state all about running over this boy, whereupon he said: 'I don't care to testify; I might incriminate myself.' The court on objection of defendant ruled that that statement should not go to the jury. That is assigned for error.

"The court's ruling on that point was correct. The statement of the witness that he had not testified at the coroner's inquest was substantially true, and, as the witness evidently understood it, it was entirely true. Plaintiffs were not entitled to have the jury in this case draw an inference to the prejudice of the defendant from the fact that the motorman through caution, or timidity for his own sake, would decline to testify before the coroner. He had just gone through the distressing experience of having killed a child, and though he may have been entirely conscious of having done everything in his power to prevent it, yet the distressing fact remained; the law did not compel him to speak, and he declined to do so, but that was his personal affair, with which the defendant had nothing to do.

"The contention of plaintiffs is that the evidence was competent as tending to impeach the witness. The inference they would draw is that, if he had not been afraid of incriminating himself, he would have told a different story at the coroner's inquest from that which he told at this trial, and the fact that he declined for that reason to testify puts him under the suspicion of carrying a guilty conscience, and authorizes the jury to discredit his testimony. The right of the motorman to refuse to testify under the circumstances stated was a personal right of such high importance that it is expressly guarded in the Constitution itself. It is there given absolutely and unequivocally, yet we are now asked to declare that it is a right which the citizen will exercise at his peril, the peril of being branded with suspicion, the peril of having it brought up against him to impeach himself if he should ever assert his innocence. Such a ruling would be a gross impairment of the constitutional right, because it would burden it with a dangerous consequence. Not only is this right given in the Constitution, but the General Assembly in dealing with another feature of the same subject has shown its high appreciation of it. In section 2637, Rev. St. 1809 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1566), the right of an accused person to testify in his own behalf is given; but to guard the person from suspicion for failing to avail himself of that right that section is immediately followed by one which expressly forbids an invidious inference to be drawn from that fact, and forbids any reference to it being made by court or counsel. The courts have no right to brand as criminal or suspicious an act which the law unconditionally and unequivocally authorized to be done.

"In the brief of counsel for plaintiffs several authorities are cited as supporting their contention, but as we understand those cases there is only one that sustains the position; that is, Commonwealth v. Smith, 163 Mass. 411, 40 N. E. 189. In that case the defendant, an alderman, was indicted for engaging in a conspiracy to solicit bribes in connection with his official duties. On the trial the defendant was a witness in his own behalf, and testified in effect that he was innocent of the charge; on cross-examination, over his objection, the trial court required him to answer whether he did not refuse to testify before the grand jury on the ground that he might incriminate himself. The Supreme Court of Massachusetts held that that was not error. But in discussing the subject that court pointed out a peculiarity of the law of that state which is quite different from the law of Missouri. The court said: 'In this commonwealth, the cross-examination (of a defendant) is not restricted to matters inquired of in chief. He may be cross-examined like other witnesses. He may be questioned as to all incriminating circumstances, and he must answer all such questions as are relevant to the subject of the charge against him. Whatever he has said or done, or omitted to say or do, which is relevant, may be inquired into.' Even if our law did not, as it does, limit the cross-examination of a defendant in a criminal case to the matters in relation to which he had testified to in chief, we would not say that a man who had only availed himself of a high personal privilege which the Constitution had given him was for that reason to be stigmatized with suspicion of guilt or have it brought up to discredit him as a witness when he avails himself of the right given him by law to testify in his own behalf. We must not interpret this provision of our Constitution as if it was designed to protect the guilty, nor should we presume that one who avails himself of it is hiding his guilt. The object of the law is to protect the innocent, and the law still covers the man with the presumption of innocence, even when he refuses to give testimony that might be turned against himself.

"The trial court committed no error when it refused to allow this evidence to go to the jury to impeach the motorman as a witness."

There can be no question but what that case is directly in point, and fully supports the action of the circuit court in excluding the testimony in question; but in my judgment that case is supported by neither reason nor authority. The authorities are uniform on both sides of the Atlantic in holding that the testimony given by a witness before the coroner's inquest is admissible in evidence for the purpose of contradicting and impeaching such witness when he subsequently testifies in another court regarding the same matter. 30 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law, 1108; State v. Gatlin, 170 Mo., loc. cit. 371, 70 S. W. 885; Mulville v. Ins. Co., 19 Mont., loc. cit. 101, 47 Pac. 650; Wren's Adm'r v. Railroad (Ky.) 20 S. W. 715; N. Y. P. & N. v. Kellam, 83 Va. 851, 3 S. E. 703; Maxwell v. Wilmington City Ry., 1 Marv. (Del.) 205, 40 Atl. 945; Ice Machine Co. v. Klefer, 134 Ill., loc. cit. 493, 25 N. E. 799, 10 L. R. A. 696, 23 Am. St. Rep. 688; Knight Templars v. Crayton, 209 Ill. 563, 70 N. E. 1066; Cox v. C. & N. W. Ry., 92 Ill. App., loc. cit. 19; Bartlett v. Lewis, 12 O. B. N. S. 249, loc. cit. 263; 3 Wigmore on Evidence, § 2268; Sullivan v. Jefferson Ave. Ry., 133 Mo. 1, 34 S. W. 566, 32 L. R. A. 167.

Clearly, Crady could not have been compelled to have testified before the coroner if he considered his testimony would incriminate him. Masterson v. Transit Co., supra; Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S., loc. cit. 562 to 586, 12 Sup. Ct. 195, 35 L. Ed. 1110. The latter case is an able review of all of the authorities treating this subject.

But the law is equally well settled that the witness may waive this constitutional right and testify freely and fully upon any and all matters relevant to the case. 3 Wigmore on Evidence, p. 3132, § 2268, and cases cited. That privilege is personal to the witness, and cannot be exercised for him by any other person, even though his testimony amounted to a confession of guilt to the most heinous crime known to the law. That being true of necessity, and all of the authorities so hold, that the witness may be called to the witness stand and interrogated before the coroner upon any and all elements of the case under investigation, and neither the witness nor his counsel have a right to object to his being called, or to object to the asking of such questions; but if he does not wish to answer them, then he has a perfect legal right to refuse to do so. That refusal, according to reason and all of the authorities, guarantees to the witness all of his constitutional rights to decline to give testimony against himself. So it must logically follow that, when a witness goes upon the witness stand and testifies or declines to testify, that testimony and conduct become public property, and may and should be used to contradict and impeach him whenever he subsequently takes the stand and testifies and conducts himself differently from what he did before the coroner, even though his subsequent testimony is given in a case in which he is on trial for his life or liberty, with the limitation only that under sections 2637 and 2638, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. p. 2052), he cannot be interrogated regarding any matter to which he did not testify in chief, but he may be lawfully interrogated upon cross-examination regarding all things he testified about in chief, however self-incriminating his answers may be, even to the extent of asking him if he did not testify differently before the coroner or other court. Spies v. Illinois, 123 U. S. 131, 8 Sup. Ct. 22, 31 L. Ed. 80; State v. Mounce, 106 Mo. 227, 17 S. W. 226; State v. Avery, 118 Mo. 475, 21 S. W. 193; State v. Porter, 75 Mo. 171; State v. Turner, 76 Mo. 350.

Under the rules of evidence above enunciated, I think Crady's testimony and conduct before the coroner's jury were clearly admissible in evidence in this case, to which he was not a party, for the purpose of contradicting and impeaching him as a witness in the case at bar, wherein he testified fully and freely. To my mind it is an anomalous rule of law that will prevent any one from interposing the personal privilege of a witness to answer questions which might incriminate him, yet will permit a party to successfully object to the introduction of such testimony of such witness given upon a former occasion for the purpose of impeaching him. But, however unreasonable that rule may appear, it has been definitely settled in this state by the opinion of this court in banc, in the case of Masterson v. Transit Co., supra, and I therefore respectfully bow to the majority opinion.

3. Counsel for appellant challenges the correctness of instruction No. 8 given by the court of its own motion. The objection lodged against the instruction is that it "was not justified by any of the issues in the case, and could have no other effect than to confuse the jury by injecting into the case an immaterial issue." We are unable to yield our assent to that proposition, for the reason that the petition charged Garrett was a passenger upon the car in which the encounter complained of occurred, and appellant tried her case upon the theory that he was a passenger upon that car, and that the conductor criminally assaulted him and threw him therefrom, thereby killing him. In other words, appellant's case was tried upon the theory that Garrett was a passenger upon the car, and that the respondent owed him that high degree of care to safely carry him that a public carrier owes to a passenger, and that it grossly violated that duty by criminally assaulting and killing her husband. Before appellant could recover on the petition in this case, it was absolutely necessary for her to show, not only that her husband was assaulted and killed by the conductor, but also that he was a passenger upon the car, from which relation sprang the duty respondent owed her husband, and which she alleges it violated. Now, if Garrett boarded the car with no intention of paying his fare, and did not do so when requested by the conductor, and refused to leave the car when notified to do so, then he was not a passenger upon the car, but was a trespasser, pure and simple, and the respondent owed him no duty whatever as a passenger, but only owed him such duty as the law imposes upon every one, and that is not to unnecessarily and intentionally injure him. If as a matter of fact Garrett was a trespasser upon the car, which there was an abundance of evidence tending to show, and if he was criminally assaulted and killed by the conductor, then the petition should have been drawn upon that theory, and not upon the theory that he was a passenger. The respective rights and duties of passenger and carrier are so radically different from those of a trespasser and assaulter that the evidence establishing the one would be a total variance from the other; and if, as before suggested, Garrett was a trespasser and not a passenger upon the car at the time in question, then appellant totally failed to make out her case, and she was not entitled to recover, as stated in said instruction No. 8. In our opinion the instruction was proper, and the court did not err in giving it.

4. It is next insisted by counsel for appellant that instruction No. 10 given by the court of its own motion was erroneous. In effect, it told the jury that if Garrett was the aggressor and started the fight with defendant's conductor, and during such fight was thrown or pushed off of the car, the defendant was not liable. A similar instruction to the one under consideration came before this court in the case of O'Brien v. Transit Co., 185 Mo. 263, 84 S. W. 939, 105 Am. St. Rep. 592. The only material difference between the facts of that case and this is that in the former it was conceded O'Brien was a passenger, and the evidence showed that the difficulty which occurred started on the car, but O'Brien was shot after he and the conductor reached the street; while in the case at bar there was a very serious question as to whether or not Garrett was a passenger. There was absolutely no evidence of that fact, except the presumption to be drawn from the fact that he was upon the car at the time the trouble between him and the conductor began; and in this case the trouble occurred upon the car, which resulted in Garrett being thrown therefrom. The facts of this case are much stronger in favor of respondent than they were in that case, and the mere fact that the shooting which occurred in that case took place on the street in pursuance of and as a continuation of the trouble that began on the car does not differentiate it in principle from this case, where the trouble began on the car, and from which Garrett was kicked or thrown.

In discussing the instruction in that case, this court, speaking through Vaillant, J., on page 269 of 185 Mo., page 941 of 84 S. W. (105 Am. St. Rep. 592), used this language: "But whilst care on the part of the carrier for the safety and kind treatment of the passenger is required, yet so also is required care on the part of the passenger for his own safety and decent behavior. If the passenger assaults the conductor, the latter has a right to defend himself; and if in a personal combat between the passenger and the conductor, brought on by the passenger's wrongful assault, the latter is injured, the carrier is not liable. If, as the defendant's evidence tended to prove, O'Brien struck the conductor and then seized him and dragged him off the car to the sidewalk, it was then an affair between man and man, and the defendant was not liable for what happened on the sidewalk."

That case again came before this court, and is reported in 212 Mo. 59, 110 S. W. 705. On the latter appeal the correctness of the former rulings was challenged, and, after a careful reconsideration of the questions involved, this court affirmed those rulings. While the published report of the case through some oversight does not disclose the fact, yet the case was transferred to court in banc on the dissent of Vaillant, J., who dissented as to a question of evidence which was not involved in the former appeal. The court in banc adopted the divisional opinion, and thereby affirmed the former opinion also. That being true, we must set this question at rest and rule this objection against appellant.

5. It is finally insisted by counsel for appellant that instruction No. 12 given by the court of its own motion was erroneous. It, in substance, told the jury that the burden was on the appellant to show that the act of the conductor in ejecting Garrett from the car was "an act of criminal conduct." The statute under which this suit was brought uses the words "original intent." Section 2864, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1637). Counsel for appellant criticises this instruction because, as they say, there is a vast difference in doing a thing with criminal intent and simply intending to do that thing. Clearly, that is true, but before a recovery can be had under that section, not only must the intent exist, but the criminal conduct must follow which resulted in the injury. There is no merit in this contention.

Finding no error in the record, the judgment is affirmed. All concur, except as to remarks made regarding the Masterson Case, in which they do not concur.

MACDONALD v. METROPOLITAN ST. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Missouri, Division No. 1.
March 31, 1909. Rehearing Denied
April 13, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 585*)—RECORD—ABSTRACT—ADDITIONAL ABSTRACT—NECESSITY.

Where the answer contained in the abstract was a general denial, and appellee filed no counter or additional abstract, she cannot contend that the trial answer contained a plea of contributory negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2586, 2591; Dec. Dig. § 585.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1039*)—HARMLESS ERROR.

Whether the answer filed below contained a plea of contributory negligence is immaterial on appeal, where that issue was not submitted to the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1039.*]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 570*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—WEIGHT.

The testimony of physicians is merely advisory, and the jury can give it credence or not as it seems reasonable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2395; Dec. Dig. § 570.*]

4. CARRIERS (§ 320*)—PASSENGERS—ACTIONS—JURY QUESTION—CAUSE OF DEATH.

In an action for the death of a street railway passenger by being thrown against a stove by the derailment of the car, whether defendant's death was proximately caused by the injuries sustained held for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 320.*]

5. CARRIERS (§ 305*)—PASSENGERS—INJURIES—PROXIMATE CAUSE.

If a street car passenger's death was directly caused by being thrown against a stove in the car by a derailment, recovery could be had therefor, even though he had also suffered from rheumatism, etc., provided he would not have died when he did if he had not been thrown against the stove.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 305.*]

6. CARRIERS (§ 314*)—PASSENGERS—ACTIONS—PLEADING—NEGLECT.

In action for injury to a passenger, plaintiff may plead negligence generally, and rely upon the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, and allegations that decedent's death was caused by the sudden derailment of the car because of the negligent condition of the appliances or the negligent management of the car by the employees only charged negligence generally, and did not allege any particular acts of negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 314.*]

7. CARRIERS (§ 316*)—PASSENGERS—NEGLECT—RES IPSA LOQUITUR.

Where decedent was injured by being thrown against the stove by the sudden derailment of a street car, in an action for his death plaintiff could assume that the derailment was caused by negligence, and if the company did not show its want of negligence, or that the accident was caused by an independent cause, it would be conclusively presumed that the accident was caused by its negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1288; Dec. Dig. § 316.*]

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 173*)—REVIEW—THEORY BELOW.

Where the case was tried below on the theory that defendant conceded its negligence, which all of the instructions assumed, it cannot deny its negligence for the first time on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1079-1120; Dec. Dig. § 173.*]

9. NEGLIGENCE (§ 58*)—PROXIMATE CAUSE.

While an action will not lie for a negligent injury which could not possibly have been foreseen, it is not essential that the very injury complained of could not have been foreseen by exercising reasonable prudence, but the wrongdoer is liable if the injury was a natural and probable consequence of the negligent act, whether it could have been foreseen or not.

10. TRIAL (§ 252*)—INSTRUCTIONS—CONFORMITY TO EVIDENCE.

In an action for a passenger's death by heart disease, claimed to have been caused by being thrown against a stove in a street car derailment, where there was no substantial evidence that heart disease could not, by any possibility, have been anticipated as a result of such an injury, an instruction negating defendant's liability if such an injury could not have been foreseen was not required.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 596-612; Dec. Dig. § 252.*]

11. EVIDENCE (§ 363*)—DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE—MEDICAL BOOKS.

Medical books cannot be read to the jury as independent evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1516-1519; Dec. Dig. § 363.*]

12. EVIDENCE (§ 558*)—EXPERT WITNESSES—CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Where, in a personal injury action, medical witnesses based their testimony on their knowledge derived from books as well as from experience, counsel, on cross-examination, could frame their questions by reading from medical authorities and ask the witness whether he agreed with the author, the court having cautioned the jury that what was read from the books was not evidence.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jackson County; H. L. McCune, Judge.

Action by Mary MacDonald against the Metropolitan Street Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

A. L. Cooper and Karnes, New & Krauthoff, for appellant. John H. Lucas and Chas. A. Loomis, for appellee.

LAMM, P. J. Defendant appeals from a judgment in plaintiff's favor for $5,000. She is the widow of John L. MacDonald, injured while a passenger on defendant's car on defendant's cable road, October 26, 1902, while running round a curve. In about eight months and a half afterwards he died. There is no question but that he was injured, and by defendant's negligence. Plaintiff's theory is that such injuries caused his death; defendant's is contra. The trial was long. The issues were threshed out below closely and with ability. The briefs take a wide range. The instructions were many. However laborious a task, we shall undertake to condense the voluminous record without omitting vital matter.

After allegations immaterial to any question made here, the petition alleges:

"That in rounding said curve the car aforesaid in which the said John L. MacDonald was riding came to a sudden and violent stop, which was caused either by the negligent and careless condition in which the appliances used by said defendant for going around said curve were allowed to remain, or by the negligent and careless manner in which the gripman discharged his duty in managing and controlling said car; but it was either one or the other, or both, as plaintiff believes and alleges, and she is ignorant whether it was the one or the other. By said sudden and violent stoppage of said car, said John L. MacDonald was thrown violently forward and down, by which he was greatly injured, and which injuries so received by him caused his death, which occurred on the 13th day of July, 1903."

The abstracted answer is a general denial. Plaintiff contends the trial answer had a plea of contributory negligence, but she files no counter or additional abstract. Not only so, but no issue of contributory negligence was submitted to the jury, and that feature, on any view of the case, is by-matter.

Save on the medical testimony, there is little or no dispute about the facts. The case made is this:

Judge MacDonald was between 65 and 66 years old when he died. He came to Kansas City from St. Paul, Minn. In St. Paul (as in Kansas City) his profession was that of a lawyer in full practice, though he had served in Congress and on the bench. The winter before moving from St. Paul, he was bothered with lumbago. Lumbago is an ailment of a rheumatic kind, indicated by pain in the small of the back. The occasion of his change from St. Paul to Kansas City was, primarily, to find a milder climate to rid himself of lumbago or prevent its becoming chronic, if lurking; secondly, to better his business outlook. With these ends in view, he visited the South, seeking a location in Louisiana, Texas, and Arkansas. About a year prior, he had gone to Hot Springs and spent a few days at the baths there. In his exploring trip South, he again visited Hot Springs and took a few baths. This was in 1897, and in the fall of that year he settled in Kansas City. From that time until his injury, five years later, he was apparently free from lumbago or any other rheumatic trouble. He is described in the record as leading an active life, as being "a rugged, strong man," an "industrious man," weighing about 180 pounds, about 5 feet 10 inches in height, "broad-shouldered," "muscular," of an "athletic type," temperate, with a good appetite but restraining it, "a vigorous, strong man," "a very temperate man," "a well man," positive, but of a jolly turn and a hard worker. This, up to the time of his injury.

On the 26th of October, 1902 (in prime health to all appearances), he, with his wife, Mary, was returning from church. Suddenly, while his car was going without check, at presumably ordinary speed, around a curve, the grip car in the train was thrown from the track, the "trailer" on which he was riding was partly derailed, its front end thrown from the track, and he was violently projected ahead two or three feet, sidewise, against the immovable framework of the car stove. The cause of all this is left quite dark. One witness, speaking of the suddenness and force of the stop, said it was the same as if the car "had struck a house"; another (after the accident) saw a broken rail. Judge MacDonald was on a seat running lengthwise of the car, with the stove on his side. He evidently was thrown against it with whatever force would be given him from the momentum of a car having the speed of that one; and the force is described by the inflamed but pardonable metaphor of one witness as the same as if he was "shot out of a cannon." Just what parts of his body struck the framework of the stove is not entirely clear. The visible sign of the blow was in the neighborhood of the left ear and side of the face, and covered a place the size of your hand. Other parts of his left shoulder and chest, evidently affected by the blow, must be got at by his pains ensuing at once and those developing hard on his injuries. That he was badly hurt is put beyond all question. Being in a dazed condition, presently, on recovering, he complained of his shoulder, neck, and head. He was assisted out of the car and into a nearby drug store.

One witness, helping him from the car to the drug store, noticed he put his hand to the left side of his chest, and we may say, in passing, that this involuntary and significant motion of putting his hand to his chest was noticed by his friends as time went on. Failing to reach his family physician from that drug store, he was helped to another. There he communicated with him, and then was assisted home. The record shows him apparently unable to walk without assistance. For two or three weeks he was confined to his bed under his physician's care. Hot appliances were put to his neck, shoulder, and head, and medicine administered to relieve his pain.

It would serve no useful or obvious purpose to go over the long history of his case. There was testimony put in by plaintiff strongly tending to prove that, from being a well man at the time of his injury, he became at once a sick man and continued a sick man until he died. Although he soon recovered from the visible wound in his head, yet he continued to have pain in his neck, shoulder, and chest. He could not bear or wear a suspender on his left shoulder after that. He could not put on his overcoat without help, and generally wore it with his left arm out of its sleeve. He lost appetite, his sleep was broken, he had "less vim and snap," became less assertive in his views, and from that day his physical strength declined. The witnesses describe him as "growing gradually weaker," he looked "haggard," he seemed "worried and worn out," and was easily exhausted by physical effort. He never again walked with the springing and rising step he had before. His weight, beginning with that time, gradually fell off, and he had that in his countenance, gait, and demeanor making him a marked man to his near friends and acquaintances—some of them physicians of excellent standing. Some four weeks after his injury he began to go down town to his business office, but went later and came home earlier than was his wont. He complained of oppression in his breathing, and, when walking with an acquaintance, he not infrequently took hold of his arm because of shortness of breath or pain in his heart. He could no longer lie down with comfort, and his barber shaved him seated bolt upright. His partner testified that he may have tried two or three cases after he returned to the office, but that he was unable to work as he formerly had done, and arranged to postpone his cases. From the time of his injury to the following May, solicitous about his heart, he had himself examined time and again for heart trouble; at any rate, such medical examinations were directed to examination of cardiac conditions. Until in May, his family physician was unable to trace his chest pains to heart trouble, and by ear or stethoscope could find no sign of abnormal conditions there; but in the spring his condition, theretofore growing gradually worse and worse, developed into spells or paroxysms of pain in his chest. It was then found by experimenting that these spells of pain yielded to a medicine (amyl nitrite) deemed by the faculty to be somewhat of a specific as a temporary relief in certain phases of angina pectoris, and it was concluded by his family physician that his heart was out of order. In these spells of agony his countenance became ashen gray in color, and drops of perspiration gathered and ran down his face. As time went on, they became more severe and frequent, until he died suddenly in one of them on the 13th of July, 1903.

The tendency of the expert testimony on behalf of the plaintiff was to show that he suffered from angina pectoris. That is not a disease, speaking with scientific precision, but it is a horrible strangling pain in the chest, affecting its victim with a sense of impending dissolution, and originating in discrepancies in the heart, its arteries and valves, and the walls of those arteries, whether main or subsidiary, and the pain runs up through the left shoulder and down the left arm to the fingers of the left hand. We take it, the words "angina pectoris," though defined literally as "a strangling pain in the chest," are as near a definition as the faculty can give of diseased cardiac conditions leading up to the pain itself. At all events, the term is used in the broad sense of a disease.

Plaintiff put in proof from competent physicians tending to show that angina pectoris, or the diseased condition of the heart and its appurtenant arteries and valves to which the pain so named attaches, in at least some of its phases, could naturally be caused by shock and injury, and that it might be reasonably expected to gradually develop from small beginnings until it finally progressed far enough to carry its victim off. The term "shock," as used medically, is defined by one scientific gentleman on the stand to be "an unusual injury that a person may sustain that depresses nerve centers and lowers away vitality very extensively." Lumbago is said by plaintiff's experts to not be the phase of rheumatism affecting the heart. Heart trouble is said by them to arise now and then from inflammatory rheumatism, and decedent at no time had that.

Defendant put on medical experts, profoundly skilled in heart diseases, who took an opposite view from that entertained by the learned scientific witnesses of plaintiff, and gave the jury different advice.

There are one or two hundred pages of this expert testimony, in which lawyers and doctors vie in a battle of wits with each other in an analysis exhibiting wide and keen research in the mysterious realm of heart diseases. It covers every phase of angina pectoris, which seems to be a most insidious and deadly trouble, sometimes existing without discoverable cause, sometimes referable to lead poisoning, rheumatism, gout, etc., thickening the walls of the main and subsidiary arteries at the heart or irritating its valves, sometimes an incident to old age or intemperance, and which may originate from shock and traumatism. The testimony is laden with a luxuriant medical terminology quite useless for the administration of justice, and we have contented ourselves with shortly giving the tendency of it in everyday speech.

In seeking to disturb plaintiff's judgment, defendant's learned counsel insist that reversible error got into the case below in the giving and refusal of instructions and in ruling on the admission of testimony. Among those refused were two demurrers, one at the close of plaintiff's and the other of the whole case. There is a ground of reversal stated as follows: "The court erred in permitting counsel for plaintiff to read the contents of medical books to, and in the presence and hearing of, the jury." Further, it is insisted that the court erred in commenting upon the evidence during the progress of the trial.

Any other facts necessary to develop and decide material questions made will appear in the body of the opinion.

1. The first proposition argued is that the demurrers should have been sustained, for that there was no evidence that the death of Judge MacDonald was directly or proximately caused by the injuries sustained in the accident. But counsel argue ill, we think, in that behalf. Their argument is built up, for example, on the views that deceased went about his labors after his injury, that physicians were unable for several months to determine the existence of heart trouble, that angina pectoris can arise from so many and different independent causes (even from undiscoverable ones) that to predicate it of his injury is mere conjecture, furnishing no legal basis for the judgment. Other suggestions along that line are offered, but the foregoing will do for our purposes.

Evidently the fact that Judge MacDonald returned, in a crippled way, to his avocation could not be conclusive. It was a circumstance, but one for the jury. The heroism of facing one's fate in civil life like a soldier does his in war, and performing one's duty as best he can until the end comes, is not inseparable from a prior injury eventually ending one's life. Labor, under such conditions, is referable to grit and courage, or the lack of these, to temperament, duty. If he had done no work at all after his injury, that fact alone would not have made a case for plaintiff, nor did his doing it destroy her case.

Nor do we have to go to physicians to find that medical science has not developed to the point where a doctor, however wise, can tell to a certainty whether a disease exists in the heart for one, two, three, or four months after an injury, or that such insidious diseases not uncommonly quite baffle diagnosis. It must be borne in mind, too, that doctors' theories under oath on the witness stand are merely advisory in character. Juries can take or leave that advice on the condition only that it seems reasonable or not to them; and, because doctors disagree, it is not valid reasoning to say that juries should also disagree, or should take the advice of one set as against that of another, or should throw to the winds their common sense, and, with minds littered up with conflicting medical advice, be unable to come to any agreement whatever, even as sailors, tossed to and fro by contrary winds, reach no harbor.

In Sorenson v. R. R. (C. C.) 36 Fed. 166, plaintiff's intestate in September, 1883, jumped from a train at the instance of the conductor, and thereby suffered severe bruises. He soon began to "droop and fall," and in September, a year later, died. There was in that case, as in this, a suggestion that heart and aortic troubles existed prior to the injury. Physicians testified on both sides, and Mr. Justice Brewer, speaking to the point, said: "Where medical witnesses disagree in opinion and theories, the undisputed history of the case is often the most satisfactory and controlling fact. In this case such history fully justifies the verdict. * * * Soon after this accident he began to droop and fall, and so continued falling, with a short and slight change for the better in the spring of 1884, until his death, in September, 1884. Such a fact is significant, and upholds the verdict. I know that post hoc is not always propter hoc, but, where the propter hoc is uncertain, the post hoc may often be decisive."

So, in a very late case (Sharp v. R. R. [not yet officially reported] 111 S. W. 1154), there is language in point, viz.: "If a man, well to-day, is badly injured, and from that time on sickens (with symptoms referable to his injury), and, languishing, finally dies, a disagreement among doctors as to the name of the disease on him at the moment of dissolution does not create a condition from which it can be said that a verdict one way or the other is merely guesswork; * * * for, if there had been no physicians testifying as experts and the jury had been without medical advice, yet plaintiff's lay evidence showed a cause for Sharp's pain and suffering, and his visible approach to the grave in the steps he took, commencing at the place and time of his injury and ending there, are rational deductions within the right of a jury in applying common sense to facts. The expert medical testimony was merely advisory, and, because the advice given to the jury by the opinions of the doctors differed, that presents no case for our interference."

In the case at bar there was substantial testimony that Judge MacDonald came to old age hale and hearty. On a certain day in October he is thrown against the framework of a stove and struck a tremendous blow. The mere visible sign of his injury at the time was not great, but it would be dealing only with the surface of things to stop with that visible sign. The controlling fact in the case (deducible from its history) is that, traceable to that injury, he was never again a well man, and that, traceable to that same injury, after a rally at the start, he went steadily downhill to his grave. A blow such as he received was shown to be a probable cause of angina pectoris. As we see it, there is no link out in the chain of the evidence upon which the jury could rationally base their conclusion that the injury caused his death. Independent causes were suggested and conflicting theories were developed before the jury. It was for them to say which theory was the most reasonable. See Seckinger v. Mfg. Co., 129 Mo. 590, 31 S. W. 957; Fetter v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 174 Mo. 256, 73 S. W. 592, 61 L. R. A. 459, 97 Am. St. Rep. 560.

In the latter case it was finely said by Valliant, J.: "The genius of our law does not claim for it infallibility; it recognizes that there is an element of uncertainty that enters into every forensic contest, which human wisdom cannot always make certain, and its aim is to come as close to the right as the means at hand will permit. Under our system of jurisprudence the jury is the tribunal to which questions of this kind are submitted for determination, and, with all their human liability to err, we have never yet discovered any better tribunal for the trial of questions of fact, even where highly scientific propositions are involved. Science itself appeals to common sense for its recognition."

That the demurrers were not well taken under the facts here may be deduced from a line of other cases cited by respondent's counsel. Hanlon v. R. R., 104 Mo. 381, 16 S. W. 233; Walsh v. R. R., 102 Mo. 582, 14 S. W. 873, 15 S. W. 757; Beauchamp v. Saginaw, 50 Mich. 163, 15 N. W. 65, 45 Am. Rep. 30; Railroad v. Buck, 96 Ind. 346, 49 Am. Rep. 168; Railroad v. Kemp, 61 Md. 74.

2. Among the instructions given for the plaintiff was the following (No. 4): "The jury are instructed that if they believe from the evidence that the death of John L. MacDonald was directly caused by being thrown against the stove on defendant's car, then your verdict should be for the plaintiff, notwithstanding that you may further believe from the evidence that he had suffered from lumbago or rheumatism, provided that the jury further find that said MacDonald would not have died at the time, under the circumstances and in the manner he did die, had it not been for being thrown against said stove, if you find he was so thrown."

Evidence was admitted, over defendant's objection, laying a foundation for that instruction, and it is contended the evidence was improperly put in, and that the instruction is not good law. In other words, defendant contends that a cause of action cannot be maintained for an injury "hastening" death. The rule is well established that an actionable wrong is committed under our damage act where circumstances exist outlined in the instruction criticised. For instance, Strode v. St. Louis Transit Co., 197 Mo. 616, 621, 95 S. W. 851, 852, was heard in banc. In that case a new trial had been granted because of error in giving an instruction based precisely on defendant's above theory. In reviewing that ruling, our Brother Graves, with the approval of all his brethren, said: "This instruction was clearly wrong, and should not have been given. * * * Citing Fetter v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., supra. In granting a new trial upon this point, the trial court was right, and, were it not for other propositions, its judgment should be affirmed."

Referring to the Fetter Case, it will be seen that the court approved an instruction with the following clause: "Provided, that the jury further find that said Fetter would not have died at the time, under the circumstances, and in the manner he did die, had it not been for the accidental rupture of the kidney." That proviso is the identical one objected to in instruction 4 in the case at bar. The Fetter Case follows the reasoning of Freeman v. Accident Ass'n, 156 Mass. 351, 30 N. E. 1013, 17 L. R. A. 753, and in that case it was well said: "An injury which might naturally produce death in a person of a certain temperament or state of health is a cause of his death if he died by reason of it, even if he would not have died if his temperament or previous health had been different. And this is as well, when death comes through the medium of a disease directly induced by the injury, as when the injury immediately interrupts the vital processes."

We are cited to Jackson v. R. R., 87 Mo. 422, 56 Am. Rep. 460, and Gray v. MacDonald, 28 Mo. App. 477, as holding a contrary doctrine, but those cases must be strictly read in the light of the particular facts there held in judgment. In the Jackson Case a man, mortally wounded by an officer making his arrest, was taken on board defendant's train for transportation to Arkansas. The carrier was sued on the theory that such transportation was wrongful, and that such wrong hastened his impending death. In the case at bar, we are not called upon to either criticise or follow that case in its ruling that "hastening" is not "causing" within the meaning of the damage act. The jury were told there to find against defendant if the act complained of resulted in "causing or hastening his death."

The theory of that holding has its root in the phraseology of the damage act (Rev. St. 1899, § 2865 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 1644]), transmitting a right of action, viz., "Whenever the death of a person shall be caused, by a wrongful act, neglect or default of another," under limitations prescribed. In Gray v. MacDonald, supra, one of the facts dealt with was that, after decedent was wounded by a mortal shot by another, the defendant hit him with his fist. A careful reading of both of those cases shows that the point now up was not the turning one, nor are we called upon in this case to determine whether hastening is causing a death within the reasonable construction of the damage act, because in this case the instruction criticised put it to the jury to find that the injury "directly caused" the death of Judge MacDonald. If it were necessary to follow or reject the ruling in the Jackson Case, I should greatly doubt the soundness of the construction there put upon the statute. It seems to me too narrow. For instance, if A. shoots and mortally wounds B., so that B. would not instantly die but would linger, languish, and finally die, does the damage act mean that C. may thereafter blow out B.'s brains with a pistol bullet and escape civil liability for damage because he merely hastened the death? Did not C. cause the death of B. within the reasonable intentment of that statute? If A. and B. contribute to the death of C., did each one not cause the death within its purview? Bragg v. Met. St. Ry. Co., 192 Mo., loc. cit. 359, 91 S. W. 527. If C. is sick nigh unto death with a mortal disease, and D., while in that condition, wrongfully injures him so that he dies shortly, did D. not cause that particular death within the clear purview of that statute? We ask these questions but leave them unanswered, the case not calling for it.

We rule the point against the defendant.

3. It is argued in a brief, filed after submission, that plaintiff's instructions erroneously enlarged the issues in the pleadings, and permitted recovery without proof of the particular negligence specified in the petition. Plaintiff introduced testimony tending to show that the train while en route, in rounding a curve, came to an instantaneous stop and was derailed, throwing its passengers this way and that. It can hardly be contended that defendant should (or did usually) stop its trains in that fashion. It was not plaintiff's duty to plead, point out, or prove specific acts of negligence resulting in this astonishing stop. We have held that, if plaintiff pleads the specific acts of negligence leading up to the injury of a passenger, such pleading is tantamount to an admission that he knows the causes of the accident, and, knowing and pleading them, he must prove them and limit his right to recovery to such proof. On the other hand, it is well-recognized doctrine that it is good pleading to plead negligence in passenger cases generally and rely upon the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. We are of opinion that the petition in this case does not plead specific negligence, as that term is used in the books. It could not say much less than it did. It is no more specific than the allegations of the petition in Ohlanda v. Transit Co. (not yet officially reported) 112 S. W. 249, and the charge there was held to be general. The gravamen of the charge is the violent stoppage of the car, and that is said to have resulted from the general negligent and careless condition in which the appliances used by defendant were allowed to remain, or in the negligent manner in which the car was managed. Plaintiff averred that she did not know which it was, but that it was one or the other, or both. Taken by or large, it would seem the charge was general, that plaintiff had pleaded no matter showing her knowledge, and that she had the right to assume that the violent stop was negligent, without putting in proof of what caused it. Trains of cars in charge of human agencies do not stop in that way in and of themselves. Such stop is naturally referable to the human agency in charge of train, track, or motive power. Therefore, as a carrier is under a duty to carry its passengers safely, it should explain its conduct in throwing them hither and yon as if shot out of a catapult. If it did not explain that conduct by proof showing its own high diligence and care, or by showing the intervention of some independent cause, it must be conclusively presumed guilty of negligence, for it has failed to rebut the prima facie presumption of negligence arising from the unusual and violent stop. Dougherty v. R. R., 81 Mo., loc. cit. 329, 51 Am. Rep. 239;

Coudy v. R. R., 85 Mo. 85, 86; Lemon v. Chanslor, 68 Mo. 354, 30 Am. Rep. 799 et seq., and cases cited; Clark v. R. R., 127 Mo., loc. cit. 208, 29 S. W. 1013 et seq.

We rule the point against defendant, and put our ruling on the ground that from end to end the case was tried on the theory that defendant, for all practical purposes, conceded its negligence. Its own instructions inferentially assumed it, as did plaintiff's. In a brief of well nigh 100 pages, in which learned counsel present point after point with discriminating vigor and learning, the point now up was not made. As said, it gets into the case in a brief filed after the hearing at our bar, and we must hold that such issue is a new one, and not in accord with the theory on which the case was tried and determined below and briefed in this court. Such shift of position is bad on appeal.

4. Defendant was allowed 13 instructions as prayed, and another in modified form. It was refused 7. We shall not cumber the record with the instructions on either side. Those for the plaintiff were short, plain, and direct. We see no fault in any of them. They proceed on the theory that if his car came to a sudden stop, which sudden stop defendant could have prevented by the exercise of a high degree of skill, diligence, and foresight, and if by said sudden stop Judge MacDonald was thrown forward and received injuries from which he died, then the jury should find for plaintiff. In another instruction, the jury were told that such sudden stop was negligent, unless it was unavoidable and could not have been prevented by the exercise of a defined high degree of care. The fourth we have set out.

In defendant's given instructions, the jury were told that if the exact cause of Judge MacDonald's death was unknown or had not been satisfactorily shown, then their verdict must be for defendant. In another, they were told that the mere fact of decedent's injury gives plaintiff no right to sue; that before they can find for her they must find from the evidence that his death was directly and proximately caused by the negligence of defendant. In another, they were told that even though he was a passenger and was injured by the negligence of defendant, still they could not find for plaintiff "unless his subsequent death was the natural and probable result" of such negligence. In another, the burden was put upon plaintiff to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that defendant was negligent and that such negligence injured decedent, and that his subsequent death was directly and proximately caused and produced by such negligence. In another, they were told that if his death may have resulted from the injuries, and may have resulted from other causes, not produced by the accident, then the verdict should be for defendant, unless the plaintiff has proven with reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the evidence, to the jury's satisfaction, that his death was actually caused and produced by his injuries received in the accident. In another, the term "proximate cause" was elaborately defined, and the jury were told that it meant a cause which "in a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by an intervening cause, produces the injury, and without which the result would not have happened, and it is not enough that the injury is the natural sequence of the negligence, it must be also the probable sequence." In another, they were told that defendant was not the insurer of the safety of deceased, and was not required to exercise a degree of care or foresight not reasonably practicable, etc. In another, they were still further instructed that defendant was not liable for every negligent act, although injury ensued. The negligent act must be the proximate cause of the injury, which, in turn, must also be the natural and probable result of the act. In another, they were instructed that if the injury was merely the result of an accident, no matter how produced, other than by the negligence of defendant's servants in charge of the car, then their verdict should be for defendant. (The last instruction was too favorable to defendant.) They were further instructed on the credibility of witnesses, and that the burden of proof was on plaintiff throughout the entire trial to show that defendant's negligence was the direct and proximate cause of the injury. Further, they were instructed on the meaning of the term "a preponderance of the evidence," and were finally told that the case must be decided the same as if between two persons of equal standing in the community; that it must be determined on the evidence alone and the instructions given by the court; that the instructions read by the attorneys were the court's instructions.

The instructions refused for defendant were in some particulars covered by those given at its instance, but there is a series of refused instructions declaring that the jury must find for the defendant unless there was such connection between the negligent acts of defendant and the death of decedent "as to bring it within the reasonable contemplation of the defendant that such death would naturally and probably result" from the negligence. Changes are rung on this idea in other instructions. One is that the jury must find that MacDonald's death "was such as a reasonable prudent person would anticipate would be the likely and probable result" of such acts of the defendant. The central idea in these refused instructions is that, if the peculiar result (in this case, the death of Judge MacDonald from heart disease) could not have been anticipated by defendant, the finding should be for defendant.

It may be said, generally, that if an unheard-of result is produced by an act of negligence quite outside the experience of mankind, and which could by no possibility have been foreseen, then an action will not lie for that result. But this case did not require instructions based on any such theory. This, because there was no substantial evidence showing it outside of the experience of mankind that heart disease should result from a shock and injury like that happening to decedent, or that such heart disease should result fatally.

Again, waiving that view, a good rule is: "The liability of a person charged with negligence does not depend on the question whether, with the exercise of reasonable prudence, he could or ought to have foreseen the very injury complained of; but he may be held liable for anything which, after the injury is complete, appears to have been a natural and probable consequence of his act or omission." Fishburn v. R. R., 127 Iowa, loc. cit. 492, 103 N. W. 481 et seq., and many cases cited; Dean v. R. R., 199 Mo., loc. cit. 411, 97 S. W. 910; Foley v. McMahon, 114 Mo. App., loc. cit. 448, 90 S. W. 113; Hoepper v. Southern Hotel Co., 142 Mo., loc. cit. 388, 44 S. W. 257; Graney v. R. R., 140 Mo., loc. cit. 98, 41 S. W. 246, 38 L. R. A. 633; Miller v. R. R., 90 Mo., loc. cit. 394, 2 S. W. 439; Harrison v. Electric Light Co., 195 Mo., loc. cit. 629, 93 S. W. 951, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 293; Lawrence v. Ice Co., 119 Mo. App., loc. cit. 331, 332, 93 S. W. 897; Brady v. R. R., 206 Mo., loc. cit. 537, 102 S. W. 978, 105 S. W. 1195; Zeis v. Brewing Ass'n, 205 Mo., loc. cit. 651, 104 S. W. 99.

We find no fault with rulings on instructions.

5. In framing questions on the cross-examination of experts, counsel held in hand medical books and formulated questions from their language. The books were not read to the jury, but the jury could see that the examiner read from them. This method of cross-examination was objected to. The court, over objections, permitted plaintiff's counsel to adopt the scientific terminology of the author and put propositions to the witnesses obviously asserted by him, but repeatedly cautioned the jury that what was read from the book was not evidence and the jury should pay no attention to it; that the only thing they could consider was the evidence that fell from the lips of the witness along the line of verifying the propositions put by the examiner. Samples of these cautionary instructions are as follows: The Court: "The jury will not give any more weight to anything Mr. Karnes reads from the books than they would to any other questions Mr. Karnes asks, unless the witness answers questions in the affirmative, thereby making it evidence in the case. * * * It is the answers of this witness, gentlemen of the jury, that is evidence in this case, and not the questions."

Error is assigned on this phase of the trial, but the point is without soundness. It has been said that it is within the discretion of the court to permit medical books to be read to the jury (State v. Soper, 148 Mo., loc. cit. 235, 236, 49 S. W. 1007), but undoubtedly the better and generally accepted doctrine is that the contents of such books are not admissible as independent evidence (17 Cyc. 421; Union Pac. R. R. Co. v. Yates, 79 Fed., loc. cit. 587, 25 O. C. A. 103, 40 L. R. A. 553 et seq.). Judge Thayer in the last case puts the grounds of exclusion on, first, such evidence is not delivered under oath; second, there is no chance of cross-examining the author; third, medicine is not an exact science; doctors disagree; medical theories are subject to frequent modification and change.

But while not independent evidence—and the question is a vexed one—yet there is a legitimate use of such books, at least, on cross-examination, where the testimony has taken wide range and where skilled witnesses, testifying as experts, base their testimony on their knowledge derived from books as well as experience, as in this case. Here, defendant's counsel had notified some of his witnesses that he was appealing to, and asking his doctors to draw from, their medical knowledge running back, say, 2,000 years, and which could only be preserved, if at all, in book form from the days when Socrates ordered a cock sacrificed to Esculapius, the god of medicine, and Hippocrates and Galen practiced physic in Greece and Italy. Under such circumstances, we see no reason why counsel could not frame a proposition in medical science in the exact language of the author, and ask the witness whether he agreed to it, so long as this was done under the due guard of the cautionary instructions given by the court. Such is the doctrine of a most learned and exhaustive note on section 440, Greenleaf on Ev. (15th Ed.) p. 579, where it is said: "Moreover, it is a proper method of cross-examination, in order to test the learning of a witness who testifies as an expert, to refer to books of approved authority upon the subjects under investigation, and question him in regard to them."

Mr. Justice Scott, in Conn. Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Ellis, 89 Ill., loc. cit. 519, gives that proposition the indorsement of his strong pen, though stating that the rule is liable to abuse, and great care should be taken to prevent such abuse. He there says: "Assuming to be familiar with standard works that treat of delirium tremens, it was not unfair to the witness to call his attention to the definitions given in the books of that particular disease, and asking him whether he concurred in the definitions. How could the knowledge of the witness, of such subjects, be more fully tested? That is, in no just sense, reading books to the jury as evidence, or for the purpose of contradicting the witness." To the same effect is Hess v. Lowery, 122 Ind., loc. cit. 233, 23 N. E. 156, 7 L. R. A. 90, 17 Am. St. Rep. 355 et seq.

In State v. Woods, 53 N. H., loc. cit. 494, 495, Sargent, C. J., speaking to the point, said: "As to Dr. Ferguson's cross-examination, we see no reason for any objection to it. He had stated, as well he might, on direct examination, his knowledge of a particular subject, not from any experience or actual observation, but from what he had derived merely from reading and studying medical authorities. Then he was cross-examined as to that general reading, not by putting in the books, but by inquiries whether, in his general reading, he had not found particular theories laid down conflicting with the theory he had advanced as the result of his reading. Collier v. Simpson, 5 Car. & Payne, 73, goes further than the present case. There Tindal, C. J., in speaking of a medical expert, says: 'I think you may ask the witness whether in the course of his reading he has found this laid down.' And that was upon direct examination. The Chief Justice further says: 'I do not think that the books themselves can be read, but I do not see any objection to your asking Sir Henry Halford (the witness, who was the president of the College of Physicians) his judgment and the grounds of it, which may be in some degree founded on books, as a part of his general knowledge.'"

We rule the point against defendant.

Other assignments of error are made and discussed. For example, it is contended that the court made comments prejudicial to the defendant in the progress of the case. We have considered these assignments one by one, but find no soundness in any of them, and shall not prolong the opinion by discussing them.

Our conclusion is that the case was well tried, and that the judgment should stand. It is, accordingly, so ordered. Let it be affirmed. All concur.

(Supreme Court of Missouri. Feb. 13, 1909.)

1. COURTS (§ 142*)—JURISDICTION.

The circuit court of the city of St. Louis, like all other circuit courts in the state, is, to all intents and purposes, a court of general jurisdiction.

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 52*)—POWER TO PUNISH CONTEMPT—LEGISLATIVE POWERS.

The right of punishment for contempt is inherent in every court having common-law powers, and such courts cannot be shorn of that power by the legislative branch of the state government.

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 52*)—POWER TO PUNISH FOR CONTEMPT—JURISDICTION—LEGISLATIVE POWERS.

The circuit courts being created by Const. art. 6, § 22 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 234), and having inherent power to punish by contempt, which cannot be taken away by the Legislature, Rev. St. 1890, § 1617 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1199), prohibiting courts from punishing contempts by fine exceeding $50 or by imprisonment for more than 10 days, violates Const. 1875, art. 3 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 172), providing that the powers of government shall be divided into three distinct departments, the legislative, executive, and judicial, and that no person or collection of persons charged with the exercise of powers properly belonging to one of these departments shall exercise any power properly belonging to either of the others.

Lamm, Woodson, and Graves, JJ., dissenting.

In Banc. Case Certified from St. Louis Court of Appeals.

Edward J. Gildersleeve was sentenced by the circuit court of the City of St. Louis for contempt in violating a decree of injunction rendered in an action against him by the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway Company, and appealed to the St. Louis Court of Appeals. Cause certified to the Supreme Court. Judgment of circuit court affirmed.

Chester H. Krum, for appellant. Robert & Robert, for respondent.

GANTT, J. This cause has been certified to this court by the St. Louis Court of Appeals for the reason that a constitutional question, to wit, the validity of section 1617 of the Revised Statutes of Missouri of 1890 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1199), is necessarily involved in the judgment rendered by the circuit court of the city of St. Louis. It appears from the abstract of the record that the appellant, Edward J. Gildersleeve, had been enjoined on the 12th day of July, 1903, by the circuit court of the city of St. Louis from buying, selling, dealing in, or soliciting the purchase or sale of any mileage passenger tickets or any part thereof, or the return coupon thereof or any part thereof, or any excursion passenger ticket or any part thereof, at that time or thereafter issued or sold, or which might thereafter be issued or sold, by the plaintiff for passage over its railroad, or issued by any other railroad for use over plaintiff's road, or any part thereof where such ticket was sold, or where it appeared upon such ticket, coupon, or return ticket that the same was issued or sold, below the regular schedule rate under a contract with the original purchaser entered upon the said ticket and signed by such original purchaser that such ticket was non-transferable and void in the hands of any other person than the original purchaser, and also from soliciting, aiding, and encouraging or procuring any person other than the original purchaser of such ticket to use or attempt to use the same for passage on any train or trains of the plaintiff; and that afterwards a citation had issued out of the said circuit court on the 1st day of October, 1904, against the said defendant, Edward J. Gildersleeve, commanding him to appear before said court and show cause why he should not be adjudged guilty of contempt for violating the order of injunction issued as aforesaid. It appears that said citation had been duly served upon the said Gildersleeve on the 1st day of October, 1904, and the said matter coming on for hearing on the 19th of October, 1904, and the court having heard the evidence and duly considered the same, adjudged the said Gildersleeve guilty of contempt, in that he had violated the said injunctive order, and by its judgment adjudged that he be committed to and imprisoned in the common jail in the city of St. Louis for a period of 15 days from the 29th day of October, 1904, to the 13th day of November, 1904, and that he pay the costs of the said proceedings. Within four days the said Gildersleeve filed his motion for a new trial, which was overruled, and he excepted and appealed to the St. Louis Court of Appeals, and that court has certified the same to this court.

Two other cases, to wit, Chicago & Alton Railway Co. v. Gildersleeve, 118 S. W. 96, and Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway Co. v. Gildersleeve, 118 S. W. 97, were submitted along with this case and involve the same question. In the Chicago & Alton Case the fine imposed for the contempt was $300, and in the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway Case the sentence was 30 days in jail.

1. But one question is raised on these appeals by the defendant, to wit, that the circuit court in each of said cases exceeded its lawful powers as defined by section 1617, Rev. St. Mo. 1890, which is in these words: "Punishment for contempt may be by fine or imprisonment in the jail of the county where the court may be sitting or both, in the discretion of the court; but the fine in no case shall exceed the sum of fifty dollars, nor the imprisonment ten days; and where any person shall be committed to prison for the non-payment of any such fine, he shall be discharged at the expiration of thirty days." If this is a valid constitutional enactment, it is obvious that the judgment must be reversed. If, on the other hand, the Legislature exceeded its constitutional powers in abridging and impairing the power of the circuit court to punish contempts of its judgments and decrees, then the judgments must be affirmed.

The learned counsel for the appellant, Gildersleeve, goes to the root of the matter by insisting that the circuit court of this state has not and never had any inherent common-law jurisdiction, but is subject to legislative control, and its powers are such, and such only, as the Legislature shall see fit to prescribe.

Article 3 of the Constitution of Missouri of 1875 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 172) provides:

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

"The powers of the government shall be divided into three distinct departments, the legislative, executive and judicial, each of which shall be confided to a separate magistracy, and no person or collection of persons charged with the exercise of powers properly belonging to one of those departments shall exercise any power properly belonging to either of the others, except in instances in this Constitution expressly directed or permitted."

Article 6, § 22 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 234), creating circuit courts, is as follows: "Circuit Courts, Jurisdiction and Terms. The circuit court shall have jurisdiction over all criminal cases not otherwise provided for by law; exclusive original jurisdiction in all civil cases not otherwise provided for; and such concurrent jurisdiction with and appellate jurisdiction from inferior tribunals and justices of the peace as is or may be provided by law. It shall hold its terms at such times and places in each county as may be by law directed; but at least two terms shall be held every year in each county."

Article 6, § 27 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 236), creating the circuit court of the city of St. Louis, is as follows: "Circuit Court of St. Louis County, Jurisdiction of Court of Appeals. The circuit court of St. Louis county shall be composed of five judges and such additional number as the General Assembly may from time to time provide. Each of such judges shall sit separately for the trial of causes and the transaction of business in special term. The judges of said circuit court may sit in general term for the purpose of making rules of court and for the transaction of such other business as may be provided by law at such time as they may determine, but shall have no power to review any order, decision or proceeding of the court in special term."

The circuit court of the city of St. Louis, like all other circuit courts in the state, is to all intents and purposes a court of general jurisdiction, and has been so often adjudged to be such that it would be a waste of time to cite decisions to that effect. As late as Ex parte Clark, 203 Mo. 121, 106 S. W. 990, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 389, this court in banc said: "In the second place, division 2, is in very fact, as its name indicates, but a division of the circuit court of that city, and hence, to all intents and purposes, a court of general jurisdiction. The mere fact that in matters of detail, in the administration of justice, certain criminal cases are assigned to it, and that such assignment is heavy enough to occupy, peradventure, its whole time, does not lop off or dim its power as a constitutional court—a circuit court proceeding according to the course of the common law."

In view of the articles and sections above quoted from the Constitution itself, it is too plain for argument that the circuit court is created, not by the Legislature, but by the Constitution. We all agree, I take it, that the right of punishment for contempt is inherent in every constitutional court having common-law powers, and that such courts cannot be shorn of that power by the legislative branch of our state government. As was said by McKean, C. J., in Respublica v. Oswald, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 319, 1 L. Ed. 155: "Not only my Brethren and myself, but likewise all the judges of England, think that without this power no court could possibly exist—nay, that no contempt could, indeed, be committed against us, we would be so truly contemptible. The law upon this subject is of immemorial antiquity, and there is not any period when it can be said to have ceased or discontinued."

The Supreme Court of Indiana, in Little v. State, 90 Ind. 338, 46 Am. Rep. 224, most aptly stated the doctrine on this subject in these words: "Courts of justice possess powers which are not given by legislation, and which no legislation can take from them. Judicial powers exist only in the courts; it cannot live elsewhere. Underwood v. McDuffee, 15 Mich. 361, 93 Am. Dec. 194; Chandler v. Nash, 5 Mich. 409; Shoulitz v. McPheeters, 79 Ind. 373. There are inherent powers resident in all courts of superior jurisdiction. These powers spring not from legislation, but from the nature and constitution of the tribunals themselves. U. S. v. Hudson, 7 Cranch, 32, 3 L. Ed. 239; Sanders v. State, 85 Ind. 318, 44 Am. Rep. 29. The judiciary is a coordinate department of the government, and is not a mere subordinate branch, dependent for existence and power upon the legislative will. Purely judicial powers, inherent in courts as of the essence of their existence, are not the creatures of legislation, and these powers are inalienable and indestructible. Among the inherent powers of a court of superior jurisdiction is that of maintaining its dignity, securing obedience to its process and rules, protecting its officers and jurors from indignity and wrong, rebuking interference with the conduct of business, and punishing unseemly behavior. This power is essential to the existence of the court. * * * There is no doubt that the power to punish for contempt is an inherent one, for independent of legislation it exists and has always existed in the courts of England and America. It is in truth impossible to conceive a superior court as existing without such a power."

In Hawkins v. State, 125 Ind. 570, 25 N. E. 818, the court said: "When a court is created by the Legislature, under the Constitution all the powers essential to the existence of the tribunal and the due exercise of its powers at once vest in it from the Constitution. Among the powers which vest in a constitutional court, such as our circuit courts, is that of maintaining its existence and dignity by punishing those who assume to treat it with contempt. This power, as has been often held, is an inherent one, and exists independently of statute. The Legislature cannot take away from a constitutional court the power to punish for contempt, since that would make the judiciary subservient to the legislative department and violate the provision which secures the independence of the different departments of government. The Legislature may, within limits, regulate the procedures, but it cannot by any regulation abridge or fetter the inherent power itself."

In State ex inf. v. Shepherd, 177 Mo., loc. cit. 234, 76 S. W. 88 (99 Am. St. Rep. 624), this court, in discussing section 1616, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1199), said: "If the Legislature had power to abridge or impair the power of this court to punish for contempt, then the defendant in this case could not be held liable; but if the Legislature had no such power, then the section of the statutes quoted is unconstitutional and not binding upon the court. It has already been pointed out in paragraph 2 of this opinion that the power of this court to punish contempts is inherent, and that statutes which attempt to confer such power have always been treated as conferring no new power, but as simply declaratory of the common-law power that already belonged to every court of record. The law is well settled, both in England and America, that the Legislature has no power to take away, abridge, impair, limit, or regulate the power of courts of record to punish contempts. Rapalje on Contempts, § 11; 7 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) p. 83; Arnold v. Commonwealth, 80 Ky. 300, 44 Am. Rep. 480; Middlebrook v. State, 43 Conn. 257, 21 Am. Rep. 650; State v. Morrill, 18 Ark. 384; People v. Wilson, 64 Ill. 195, 18 Am. Rep. 528; Ex parte Robinson, 19 Wall. 505, 22 L. Ed. 205; Worland v. State, 82 Ind. 49; Cheadle v. State, 110 Ind. 301, 11 N. E. 426, 59 Am. Rep. 199; Holman v. State, 105 Ind. 513, 5 N. E. 556; Matter of Shortridge, 99 Cal. 526, 34 Pac. 227, 21 L. R. A. 755, 37 Am. St. Rep. 78; People v. Stapleton, 18 Colo. 568, 33 Pac. 167, 23 L. R. A. 787; In re Chadwick, 109 Mich. 588, 67 N. W. 1071; Hawes v. State, 46 Neb. 149, 64 N. W. 699; Hale v. State, 55 Ohio St. 210, 45 N. E. 199, 36 L. R. A. 254, 60 Am. St. Rep. 691."

In commenting upon the Shepherd Case, among other things, it was said: "This court (in that case) in effect ruled that a constitutional court may go to the common law for its inherent power to punish all contempts recognized as such at the common law. And to the extent that the statute clipped such power it was unconstitutional. That holding was right. But that case did not hold any judgment and hence is no authority for the proposition that those parts of the statute declarative of the common law were invalid as unconstitutional."

As this whole question was so exhaustively discussed and treated in State ex inf. v. Shep- herd, 177 Mo. 205, 76 S. W. 79, 99 Am. St. Rep. 624, we deem it entirely unnecessary to again enter upon the field of argument and authority to maintain the power of a constitutional court, such as the circuit court, to punish contempts. Indeed, as to this general power, we do not understand that there is any difference of opinion among us upon the main proposition. But some of our Brethren, while holding that the right of punishment for contempt is inherent in every constitutional court in the very nature of things, and that such courts cannot be shorn of that right by the legislative branch of the government, are of the opinion that the Legislature may make what they term reasonable rules regulating the discretion of constitutional courts in administering punishment for contempt. This question was also considered by this court in State ex inf. v. Shepherd, and it was there said: "In Wyatt v. People, 17 Colo. 261, 28 Pac. 964, the court said: 'Though the Legislature cannot take away from the courts created by the Constitution the power to punish contempts, reasonable regulations by that body touching the exercise of this power will be regarded,' but this, it must be observed, leaves it to the courts to decide whether or not the regulations that may be prescribed are reasonable, and also proceeds upon lines of comity between the courts and the Legislature, and not upon any recognition of the absolute right of the Legislature to enact such regulations. In addition to this, it is now well-settled law in this as well as in other states that the courts have nothing to do with the policy or reasonableness of a law, those being legislative and not judicial questions. So that, if it be conceded that the Legislature had any power to regulate the exercise of the inherent power of the court to punish contempts, the court could not refuse to obey the law because it deemed the regulations unreasonable. However, it is a contradiction of terms to say the power to punish is inherent, but that the Legislature may regulate the exercise. As the Supreme Court of the United States said in Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 6 L. Ed. 23, the power to 'regulate' includes the power to say in what cases the right shall be exercised. It is worthy of observation that in only the states of Georgia and Louisiana is power given, by the Constitution of the state, to the Legislature to limit the power of the court to punish for contempt. In all the other states the better opinion is that, where the court is a creature of the Constitution, the inherent power to punish contempt cannot be shorn, abridged, limited, or regulated. This is the only logical view to take, because by the Constitution (article 3) the powers of government are distributed between legislative, executive, and judicial departments, and it is expressly provided that 'No person, or collection of persons, charged with the exercise of powers properly belonging to one of these departments, shall exercise any power properly belonging to either of the others, except in the instances in this Constitution expressly directed or permitted.' And nowhere in the Constitution is the Legislature given any power to meddle with the inherent power of the courts."

While our Brethren cite numerous cases in which the courts of last resort in our sister states have announced the rule of comity for which they contend, and in which those courts have recognized a certain amount of legislative control over the subject of contempt of courts, in view of the provision in our own Constitution, which makes the judicial power of this state coördinate with that of the legislative department, and forbids either to encroach upon the powers of the other, it seems to us that the conclusion reached on this subject in State ex inf. v. Shepherd, supra, is not only logical but unanswerable, and it is from no want of respect to the Legislature that this court maintains the power which the people in the organic law have conferred upon it. The Constitution is the supreme law for the Legislature and the court alike, and in declaring any act of the Legislature unconstitutional this court does not proceed upon any theory of superiority over the Legislature, but simply adjudges that it will follow the organic law, which creates both the Legislature and the court, and is alike binding upon each. In regard to the act of Congress restricting the power of the courts of the United States in the punishment of contempts, and intended to deprive them of the authority to treat outdoor publications of any character as such (4 Stat. 487, c. 99, approved March 2, 1831), it was said in U. S. v. Holmes, 1 Wall. Jr. 1, Fed. Cas. No. 15,383 by Mr. Justice Baldwin, that this act of Congress was the limitation upon his powers to punish contempts; but of this decision it must be remembered that the judicial power of the United States is vested in one Supreme Court and such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. Const. U. S. art. 3, § 1. The Supreme Court was created by the Constitution; the district and circuit courts by act of Congress. When the latter were established and vested with certain judicial powers, the authority to punish contempts attached as an incident. 2 Story on Constitution, § 1774. But deriving their existence from Congress, it follows that their power to punish contempts is under its control. The difference between a constitutional court, such as our circuit court, and a purely statutory court, as the Circuit and District Courts of the United States, is at once obvious. Ex parte Robinson, 19 Wall. 505, 22 L. Ed. 205.

Much stress is laid upon the provision that unless this court shall recognize the provision of the statute upon which the defendant relies in this case as constitutional, then the power of the court to punish for contempt is unlimited. A fear is expressed that the courts will exercise that power in an arbitrary and oppressive manner. This contention is not new. In Neel v. State, 9 Ark. 263 (50 Am. Dec. 209), Mr. Justice Scott responded to this proposition as follows: "The right to punish for contempts, in a summary manner, has been long admitted as inherent in all courts of justice and in legislative assemblies, founded upon great principles, which are coeval, and must be coexistent, with the administration of justice in every country—the power of self-protection. And it is only where this right has been claimed to a greater extent than this, and the foundation sought to be laid for extensive classes of contempts, not legitimately and necessarily sustained by these great principles, that it has been contested. It is a branch of the common law brought from the mother country and sanctioned by our Constitution. The discretion involved in the power is necessarily, in a great measure, arbitrary and undefinable, and yet the experience of ages has demonstrated that it is compatible with civil liberty and auxiliary to the purest ends of justice and to the proper exercise of the legislative functions, especially when these functions are exerted by a legislative assembly." Chief Justice Watkins in Cossart v. State, 14 Ark. 541, said: "The power of punishing, summarily and upon its own motion, contempts, offered to its dignity and lawful authority, is one inherent in every court of judicature. The offense is against the court itself; and if the tribunal have no power to punish in such cases, in order to protect itself against insult, it becomes contemptible, and powerless also in fulfillment of its important and responsible duties for the public good. It is no argument that the power is arbitrary, though, indeed, settled by precedents or limited by them as rules for the future guidance of the courts. While experience proves that the discretion, however arbitrary, has never been liable to any serious abuse, it would be a sufficient answer to say that the power is a necessary one, and must be lodged somewhere. And it is properly confided to the tribunal against whose authority or dignity the offense is committed."

And so in U. S. v. Hudson, 7 Cranch, 32, 3 L. Ed. 259, it was held that: "Certain implied powers must necessarily result to our courts of justice from the nature of their constitution. To fine for contempt, imprison for contumacy, enforce the observance of order, etc., are powers which cannot be dispensed with in a court, because they are necessary to the exercise of all others, and so far our courts, no doubt, possesses powers not immediately derived from statute."

Our conclusion is that the Legislature, in prohibiting the courts from imposing a fine in any case which should exceed $50, and in limiting the imprisonment for contempt to 10 days, exceeded its constitutional powers, and therefore such limitations were unconstitutional and void, and that the judgment of the circuit court in this case was not in excess of its jurisdiction, and must be, and is, affirmed.

VALLIANT, C. J., and BURGESS and FOX, JJ., concur. LAMM, WOODSON, and GRAVES, JJ., dissent, and express their views in the opinion by LAMM, J.

LAMM, J. (dissenting). Prepared on assignment as a principal opinion, it failed to receive the concurrence of a majority of my Brethren, and the case was re-assigned to my learned Brother GANTT. Something of substance, I think, is to be said against the conclusion reached by him, which justifies re-submitting this opinion as a dissenting one.

Gildersleeve was sentenced by the circuit court of St. Louis to the common jail for 80 days as the result of a trial in a contempt proceeding. The citation was issued in a civil suit then pending. He was charged with an "out of doors" or constructive contempt in violating a preliminary order of injunction issued by said court, and which injunction forbade the sale of certain kinds of railroad tickets as a ticket broker or "scalper." On appeal to the St. Louis Court of Appeals, the cause was transferred to this court on a constitutional point arising on the whole case, viz.: By Rev. St. 1899, § 1617 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1199), in providing for the punishment of contemnors (found guilty under preceding sections) by fine or imprisonment in the county jail, or both, in the discretion of the court, it is ordained as follows: "But the fine in no case shall exceed the sum of $50 nor the imprisonment 10 days. * * *"

It will be seen at a glance that if that statute be a valid and constitutional limitation on the power of a circuit court in Missouri, then the judgment appealed from, being in excess of the power of the court, is bad. To the contrary, if the statute be unconstitutional in that regard, and if the circuit court could go to the common law for the limitation, if any, on its power in meting out punishment, as it did go, then (the merits not being here for review) the conviction is well enough.

It is not deemed useful to enter upon a general exposition of the reasons underlying the right to punish contemnors. That field is a fruitful and inviting one for judicial exploration and eloquence, and, we may add, dicta. It has been explored more than once by this court, and much has been written, e. g., in Ex parte Crenshaw, 80 Mo. 447, in State ex inf. v. Shepherd, 177 Mo. 206, 76 S. W. 79, 99 Am. St. Rep. 624, in State ex rel. v. Bland et al., 189 Mo. 197, 88 S. W. 28, in Re Clark, 208 Mo. 121, 106 S. W. 990, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 389, and in other cases.

The philosophy lying at the root of the right of a court of justice to punish contempts is well stated by Judge Dade to be (Commonwealth v. Dandridge, 2 Va. Cas.

409) that: "In this country we know no privileges but such as exist for the public good; many such privileges we have; from those which appertain to the Legislature itself even down to such as belong to the lowest executive officer. Those which surround the administration of justice belong to the same order. Courts, their officers and process, are shielded from invasion and insult, not from imaginary sanctity in the institutions themselves, or the persons of those who compose them (as in the political and ecclesiastical establishments of another hemisphere), but solely for the purpose of giving them due weight and authority, and to enable those who administer them to discharge their functions with impartiality, fidelity, and effect. This is the true test of every privilege not granted by statute, and in the spirit of every one (not merely private) which is so secured. The political character of the judiciary, and the tendency of the duties which are devolved upon it, renders it necessary to invest it with a considerable share of these privileges. It is confessedly the weakest branch of all governments, wielding neither wealth, force, nor patronage. Its duties consist in adjusting and settling the contested rights of individuals, in controlling their turbulence, and punishing their crimes. These duties are often of a severe and rigorous character, and they are generally to be discharged in almost immediate contact with those on whom they act; their exercise will frequently elicit the angry passions, or excite unworthy and sinister attempts to bias or avert their operation, and where there is little real power and no patronage a certain degree of external dignity may have been considered necessary to supersede a too frequent resort to the actual powers of the courts."

In Respublica v. Oswald, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 319, 1 L. Ed. 155, Chief Justice McKean, in delivering the judgment of the court, said to Oswald (brought to bar): "Some doubts were suggested whether even a contempt of the court was punishable by attachment; but not only my Brethren and myself, but likewise all the judges of England, think that without this power no court could possibly exist. Nay, that no contempt could indeed be committed against us, we should be so truly contemptible. The law upon the subject is of immemorial antiquity, and there is not any period when it can be said to have ceased or discontinued. On this point, therefore, we entertain no doubt."

Indeed, so manifest is it that the stream of justice must be kept pure from contamination at its source, and that the judge of a court, jurors, witnesses, and officers should be shielded from the humiliation of insult, the terror of violence, or itching desires or sinister attempts to improperly influence the one or the other, that the majesty of the administration of law should find its prototype in the gravity and dignity of a courtroom free from the belittlement of contemptuous indecorum, and that trials should be conducted, and the decrees, orders, and judgments of the courts of a free people should be carried into execution, without molestation or interference, unawed by power, unfrightened by intimidation, unemasculated and unperverted by corruption. We say all these things are so manifest that it has become accepted doctrine everywhere that the right of punishment for contempt is inherent in every constitutional court having common-law powers, in the very nature of things, and that such courts cannot be shorn of that right by the legislative branch of the government. It is an inalienable right in a court, of the very essence of its being, one that it may not ignore or allow to be clipped away if it would. These are hornbook propositions, asserted by all text-writers, laid down by all courts, and worthy of all acceptance by intelligent men as of course, hence need no citation of authority to sustain them at this day.

But the question presented here is different and deeper. It is this: May the lawmaker make a rule reasonably regulating the discretion of constitutional courts in administering punishment for contempt? Attending to that question, it may be said that legislation of that character is believed to exist in every state in the Union, and finds a place in the acts of Congress and in those of the British Parliament. The federal act owes its origin to an early Missouri event of historical significance. Judge Peck, presiding in the District Court of the United States for the District of Missouri, in 1828, decided an important land case. Mr. Lawless, an attorney in the case, published a criticism of the opinion, not impugning the motives or charging corruption upon the judge, but discussing the correctness of his decision and pointing out its errors. This publication was treated by Judge Peck as a libel, and its author was punished for contempt of court. Mr. Lawless, not content, took the matter to the House of Representatives. Judge Peck was impeached, subsequently tried in the Senate, and acquitted by a vote of 21 to 22. The public discussion of the law and nature of contempts, incident to the trial, doubtless led to the passage of the federal act placing a limit on the power to punish for contempt (State v. Morrill, 16 Ark., loc. cit. 405, 406). Whether the same event and the public discussion arising thereon moved the General Assembly of our state to adopt a statutory regulation, we do not know. But, as it was enacted in 1835 (1 Rev. St. 1835, pp. 160, 161), presumably it owed its origin to that source. Doubtless, too, the legislation of the older states may be similarly traced, and that of the newer ones was borrowed from the older.

The idea dominating that character of legislation is (to borrow the quaint and pointed phrase of Coke) that the punishment of a citizen shall not be measured "by the crooked cord of the discretion of the judges," but shall be "measured by the golden metewand of the law"—the obsolete word, "metewand," meaning, we take it, a statutory footrule, yardstick, or measuring rod. In this connection it may not be amiss to recall Lord Camden's oft-quoted, sour, yet keen and graphic characterization of uncontrolled judicial discretion when Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas in the trial of Hindson and Kersey, viz.: "The discretion of a judge is the law of tyrants; it is always unknown; it is different in different men; it is casual, and depends upon constitution, temper, passion. In the best, it is oftentimes caprice; in the worst, it is every vice, folly, and passion to which human nature is liable." See editor's note to Proceedings against R. Thompson, 8 Howell's State Trials, 58. Speaking to a point somewhat kindred, Judge Taft, in City of Detroit v. Detroit City R. Co. (C. C.) 54 Fed. 1, 19, says that, where "influences of a personal nature are present, we must presume a human weakness in all judges to prevent injustice from the frailty of the few."

In determining the question of the unconstitutionality of the statute under review, care should be taken to steadily keep in mind the precept that our Legislature has power to legislate upon any subject not forbidden by express provision of, or by inexorable implication in, the Constitution. Care should be taken to see to it that another cardinal principle is obeyed, viz., that courts, from high regard for legislative wisdom and out of comity to the lawmaker, will not declare a statute unconstitutional unless it be put beyond reasonable doubt that it is so; but will solve all doubts in favor of the law, and never strike it down if it can be sustained by any recognized canon of interpretation.

Some veneration, some efficacy withal, is due the statute in hand because of its age. It has been the law of Missouri for three-fourths of a century. During that time Missouri grew from a pioneer state into a great commonwealth; during that time a civil war was waged, the passions of men were lashed into a crest of fury, but through it all its courts of justice, under that statutory limitation of power, deserved and preserved the respect of the citizen and their own self-respect; during that time it was not thought necessary to the public weal that the judiciary should be free to exercise unlimited and unregulated power to punish by their fiat, summarily, without jury, without change of venue, and (in some cases) without right of appeal, a citizen for contempt by an unlimited fine or an unlimited jail sentence. To the contrary, they accepted the statute as a reasonable limitation, and the joints of the machine of checks and counterchecks, under the three coördinate branches of state government, worked without jar or friction.

Because of a tendency in some courts to comment upon the doubtful propriety and legality of legislative enactments limiting the power of constitutional courts to punish for contempt, at least three states have put in their organic law a provision granting such power to the Legislature, to wit, Georgia, Louisiana, and lately, Virginia. In other states no such constitutional grant of power is given lawmakers and yet despite that fact a reasonable regulation—one showing no legislative intent to deny or cripple the inherent power of the courts, and one not attaining that bad end—has been quite uniformly sustained either out of comity or because of legislative right. See authorities, infra.

No doubt is entertained of the legislative power to regulate where the court in question is the creature of the Legislature and not of the Constitution. This doctrine has been applied to the act of Congress regulating punishment for contempts in federal courts. Ex parte Robinson, 19 Wall. 505, 22 L. Ed. 205. Their powers and duties are held to depend upon the act calling them into existence, or subsequent acts extending or limiting their jurisdiction; but when the court whose acts are in question is itself the creature of the Constitution, then the better doctrine, as said heretofore, is that as such constitutional court it sprang into existence full armed with all the constitutional powers of a court of justice, one of which is the right to punish for contempt, and that this right in its essence cannot be taken away by the lawmaking power. However broad the logic of the ruling in the Shepherd Case, supra, that is what is decided by it.

It is contended, in effect, that the Shepherd Case declared the whole body of statutory enactments regulating contempt in courts of record unconstitutional and void. That is no new contention. It was made once before in this court in Re Clark, supra. In answer to that large and drastic proposition, it was there said: "We may digress far enough to point out that it is insisted by him (the circuit attorney) that the scope, effect and purpose of State ex inf. v. Shepherd, 177 Mo. 205, 76 S. W. 79, 99 Am. St. Rep. 624, was to strike down as unconstitutional the whole body of the written law on the subject of contempts. Rev. St. 1899, § 1616 et seq. But we do not so read that case. The statute (section 1616) enumerates certain forms of contempt, and provides that in their punishment courts have power to punish the acts enumerated, 'and no other.' The contempt charged in the Shepherd Case did not come within those enumerated by that statute. The precise question held in judgment in that case, therefore, was this: Was the statute preclusive, or had this court as a creation of the Constitution the inherent power at common law, of which it may not be shorn by statute, to punish as at common law for contempts known to the common law but on which the statute is silent? The broad language used in the case, measured by recognized canons of construction, must be read in the light of the case and facts held in judgment. This court, in effect, ruled that a constitutional court may go to the common law for its inherent power to punish all contempts, recognized as such at the common law; and to the extent that the statute clipped such power, it was unconstitutional. That holding was right, but that case did not hold in judgment, and hence is no authority for the proposition that those parts of the statute declarative of the common law were invalid as unconstitutional."

In Koerner v. Car Co., 209 Mo. 156, 107 S. W. 481, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 292, it was pointed out by Gantt, C. J., that the rule for determining what is actually decided in a case is laid down in 2 Lewis' Sutherland, Statutory Construction (2d Ed.) § 486, where that author says: "The maxim of stare decisis applies only to decisions on points arising and decided in causes; it has been held not to extend to reasoning, illustrations, and references in opinions. The precedent includes the conclusions only upon questions which the case contained, and which were decided. 'The members of a court,' says Downey, C. J., 'often agree in a decision, but differ decidedly as to the reasons or principles by which their minds have been led to a common conclusion. It is therefore the conclusion only, and not the process by which it has been reached, which is the decision of the court, and which has the force of precedent in other cases.' The reasoning adopted, the analogies and illustrations presented in real or supposed cases, in an opinion, may be used as argument in other cases, but not as authority. In these the whole court may concur, or they may not. So of the principle concurred in, and laid down as governing the point in judgment, so far as it goes or seems to go beyond the case under consideration."

Applying those principles to the Shepherd Case, it will be seen that the proposition held in judgment was not that all the statutes regulating procedure in contempt were unconstitutional, but that the schedule of acts which go to constitute contempt under the statute did not cover the whole ground; that that part of the statute declaring the acts scheduled in the law "and no other" should be deemed contempts was unconstitutional and void, and that the Supreme Court could go to the common law to ascertain other acts constituting contempt, and punish for those acts as at common law. So construed, the Shepherd Case has been approved twice since, and is in line with the great weight of authority elsewhere.

There seems to be an impression abroad that, if we sustain the statute on contempts limiting the quantum of punishment, it will result that courts of equity and law will be shorn of their power to specifically enforce their rules, orders, judgments, and decrees rendered necessary in rounding out justice. To illustrate: A. is ordered to deposit valuable securities in court or turn them over to a receiver, or not to negotiate given negotiable instruments pending a suit affecting them. A. refuses to obey the order, rule, or judgment. In that condition of things, it has been said that A. would willingly pay a small fine of $50 or be subjected to a short term of incarceration of 10 days in the county jail rather than obey the order of the court. But the statutes in hand contemplate no such absurd results. In the original act, after enumerating the different grounds of contempt in one section, after providing for their punishment in another, after providing in another that contempts committed in the immediate view and presence of the court may be punished summarily, and that in other cases the parties charged shall be notified of the accusation and have a reasonable time to make a defense, and after making other provisions, the act sets forth (section 61, p. 161, 1 Rev. St. Mo. 1835) that: "Nothing contained in the preceding sections shall be construed to extend to any proceeding against parties or officers, as for contempt, for the purpose of enforcing any civil right or remedy." That section has been brought forward as live law, and is now section 1620, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1200).

It will thus be seen that the Legislature wisely left an unimpaired and unfettered power in courts to enforce civil remedies and rights where the rules, orders, judgments, and decrees of the court made in that behalf are contumaciously disobeyed, by imprisonment until obeyed. That is the interpretation placed upon the statute by this court in Ex parte Crenshaw, supra. Not only so, but by section 1621, Rev. St. 1899, as by the original act regulating contempts, it is provided that notwithstanding the punishment for contempt by the court, if the act constituting the contempt be indictable, the party charged may be indicted and punished, the court being required to take into consideration, in punishing under the indictment, the punishment before inflicted.

We look in vain, then, into the statute for any legislative intent to impair the dignity of courts of justice or to strip them of their inherent constitutional power to punish for contempt, except on the point rightly decided in the Shepherd Case. Our statutes, therefore, if unconstitutional in other respects, must be held so only because they put limitation on the amount of punishment that may be administered by a court for direct or constructive contempt. Are they unconstitutional in those particulars? We think not. This is so, because:

The general doctrine seems to be that: "A statute which limits the amount of the fine, or term of imprisonment which the courts may impose, does not deprive them of their power to enforce affirmatively their orders or to enforce any decree, whether affirmative or otherwise, which may be passed upon the final hearing of a cause." Rapalje on Contempts, § 11.

State v. Morrill, 16 Ark. 384, is a soundly reasoned case sustaining the inherent common-law right of a constitutional court to punish for contempt for acts outside of those enumerated in the statute, yet (as we see it) graciously conceding the legislative power to put reasonable bounds to the amount of the punishment. Suppose, for instance, says the court, that the General Assembly were to repeal the act regulating contempts, would any lawyer seriously contend that the courts were thereby deprived of their power to punish contempt? That question as put was held to answer itself, and the court proceeded to say that "the Legislature may regulate the exercise of, but cannot abridge, the express or necessarily implied powers granted to this court by the Constitution."

In accord with that pronouncement, the Supreme Court of Indiana held "that the Legislature may regulate the practice in proceedings against persons for an alleged contempt." Cheadle v. State, 110 Ind., loc. cit. 309, 11 N. E. 430 (59 Am. Rep. 199).

The language of that learned court in Hawkins v. State, 125 Ind. 570, 25 N. E. 818, should be construed as in accord with the guarded expression just quoted. That language is: "The Legislature may, within limits, regulate the proceedings (in contempt), but it cannot by any regulation abridge or fetter the inherent power itself."

In Wyatt v. People, 17 Colo., loc. cit. 261, 28 Pac. 964, the law was stated to be that: "Though the Legislature cannot take away from the courts created by the Constitution the power to punish contempts, reasonable regulations by that body touching the exercise of this power will be regarded as binding."

In Mahoney v. State, 33 Ind. App., loc. cit. 658, 659, 72 N. E. 153 (104 Am. St. Rep. 276). It was held that: "While it is not necessary to look after any statute to ascertain whether a particular act does or does not constitute contempt, still the Legislature may, within limits, regulate the procedure in such cases."

In State ex rel. v. Miesen, 98 Minn., loc. cit. 20, 108 N. W. 513, it was held that: "While the Legislature cannot take away from courts created by the Constitution the inherent right to punish contempts, yet it may regulate within reasonable limits the exercise of the power."

In Carter v. Commonwealth, 96 Va. 791, 32 S. E. 780, 45 L. R. A. 310, it was held: "That the power to punish for contempts may be regulated by the Legislature, but cannot be destroyed or so far diminished as to be ineffectual." In that case the Legislature required a jury trial, which provision the court held void. In treating of the phrase "inherent power," it was said: "This language does not mean, and has never meant, that these powers are held superior to legislative control. It did not mean that at common law."

It will be observed that the Virginia court holds that the phrase "inherent power" did not mean at common law a power entirely beyond legislative control. This is of significance, because the principal opinion in this case treats the power (because inherent) as entirely beyond, and independent of, such control. In this connection it is suggestive to note that in the mother country, the ancient seat of the common law, it has been assumed that the power is not an arbitrary and unregulated one. Statutes have been passed by the British Parliament from time to time regulating the subject-matter of contempts, and (within bounds) these statutes seem to be enforced by the English judiciary (In re Maria Annie Davies, 21 L. R. Q. B. Div. 236).

It must not be overlooked either that if it be conceded, by way of hypothesis, that the power to punish was unbridled at common law and that the lawmaking power could not regulate it a whit, then we come face to face with the proposition that it is not the whole body of the common law that was adopted in this state, but only that portion of it not repugnant or inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States or of this state, "or the statute law in force for the time being." Rev. St. 1899, § 4151 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2250).

On the last head, I do not hesitate to say that the unregulated, arbitrary, whimsical power to fine or imprison for contempt, a power that will not brook a mere temperate and reasonable control, is contrary to the genius of our institutions and the policy of our Constitution and statutes.

In Arnold v. Commonwealth, 80 Ky., loc. cit. 302 (44 Am. Rep. 490), it was said: "While the right to punish is with the court, we are not prepared to say that it is not subject in some degree to legislative control, but, on the contrary, we are inclined to adjudge that a mere arbitrary discretion on the part of the judge may be limited; but an attempt by legislation to deprive the courts of the inherent power of protection against assaults and indignities would be disregarded."

In State v. Frew, 24 W. Va., loc. cit. 458 (49 Am. Rep. 257), it is said, after a most exhaustive review of the authorities: "Therefore courts will tolerate the regulation of the power, so that the Legislature does not by such regulation substantially destroy the efficiency of the court. The courts must have just enough power, and will exercise it for their own protection, and they want and demand no more. Whether or not the Legislature in its regulation has left sufficient power for the purpose, the court, which is called to exercise it, must be the sole judge, unless its judgment may be reviewed, and in that case the court of last resort would be the exclusive judge."

In other cases it has been cautiously held that the power to regulate within reasonable bounds to the extent that the regulation does not touch to the quick the dignity of courts and cripple the exercise of judicial functions was well enough. In other cases regulating statutes have been enforced, as of course, under the doctrine of comity, and to beat down all apparent judicial antagonism to the fair and reasonable exercise of legislative power. For example, In re Ida Louisa Pierce, 44 Wis. 411; Batchelder v. Moore, 42 Cal. 412; Ex parte Edwards, 11 Fla. 174; In the Matter of Millington, 24 Kan. 214; People ex rel. v. Grant et al., 47 Hun, 604; People ex rel. v. Jacobs, 66 N. Y. 8; Latimer v. Barmore, 81 Mich. 592, 46 N. W. 1; Sloman v. Reilly, 95 Mich. 264, 54 N. W. 869; Ex parte David Schenck, 65 N. C. 353; Cole v. Egan, 52 Conn. 219; State v. Rust, 2 Tenn. Ch. 181; Ex parte Kearby, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 581, 34 S. W. 635. See, also, Ex parte Crenshaw, supra.

So delicate is the subject of contempt that courts have been unable to hold an even and uniform voice in dealing with it. Cases may be found that apparently repudiate any legislative approach toward the control of the exercise of the power of punishment, however reasonable it be.

But the doctrine of Chief Justice John Marshall in the great case of Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 6 L. Ed. 23, is invoked to sustain the dogma that the power to regulate includes and concedes the power to destroy. It is argued, as I grasp it, that if the Legislature of Missouri be once conceded the power to regulate the punishment of contempt, thereby the power is conceded to destroy every vestige of such punishment and to strip courts bare of a right inherent to their office. I trust to never be found wanting in unstinted admiration and exalted respect for that illustrious Chief Justice whose governmental doctrines, as expounded in his opinions, I was taught to accept with reverence even from my youth up. But it seems plain that what was said by him in the Gibbons Case must be read in the light of the case held in judgment. It dealt with federal power and sovereignty as over against state power and state sovereignty, and it held the preclusive power to be in Congress to regulate the coasting trade and commerce generally. It must be remembered that the sole right "to regulate" in those particulars was conferred by the federal Constitution on the Congress, and it was ruled that it was taken out of the domain of state legislation. In the evolution of his great argument against a conflict of state and federal power, even then threatening civil war, he ruled that the federal power was preclusive, and that the hand of state regulation through state laws must be lifted. I take it that it was to the glory of that august tribunal to assert the right to be in Congress in those particulars. But what has that doctrine to do with the power dealt with here? Our Constitution does not grant to courts the preclusive power to regulate themselves as they see fit, including the right to fine and imprison in any sum or for any term for contempt. On the other hand, the public policy of this state in the legislative interpretation put upon our Constitution has been to regulate courts in many ways, and those regulations have been uniformly obeyed when reasonable. For example, in sections 863 and 1569, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 807, 1185), this court is told what kind of briefs we may require in cases appealed here. In section 806 (page 709) our conduct, or, more strictly, our discretion, is regulated, and we are told that we "shall summarily hear and determine all appeals from orders refusing to revoke, modify or change an interlocutory order appointing a receiver," and we are ordered to advance such case on our docket. So in the Laws of 1907, p. 120, § 1a, we are told that when a municipality has undertaken to regulate the charges of public service corporations, and when the reasonableness of those charges are brought in question in an injunction suit and the judgment is appealed, we must speedily hear and determine such cause and must give it precedence over other civil cases. In section 855 (page 805) our docket is arranged for us by law, and we are required to advance certain cases for hearing. Sections 865, 866 (pages 812, 815), regulate our discretion in rendering judgments. In section 871 (page 821) the kind of opinions we shall hand down is regulated. They must be in writing, and must show which of the judges delivers them, who concurs, and who dissents. By section 872 we are obliged to make a "statement of the case," and (observe) it is to be a statement "that may be understood." By section 874, we are stripped of the power to require bonds for costs. Are all these statutes, and many others that might be named, unconstitutional because they impinge on the ancient common-law discretion of a full-fledged common-law court?

To sum up: From an examination of many cases, well reasoned and well bedded in principle, the following propositions lying between two extremes may be deduced as sound doctrine:

(a) First. A constitutional court of common-law power may not be shorn of the right to punish for contempt by a statutory enactment. That power, in its essence, is ingrained in such a court, and becomes a part of its very being.

(b) Second. Either as a matter of comity, or of right, the lawmaker may (within reason) somewhat regulate that power so that an arbitrary judicial discretion may not run riot, rampant, and wanton. And herein it must be kept in mind that a judge on the bench is, after all, but a human being, and has frailties inseparable from humanity. Therefore, when called to punish for contempt, it not infrequently happens that he is smarting under such sense of personal humiliation, indignation, or other master emotion that at least a mote of prejudice may be assumed as in his eye.

(c) Third. The statute under review is a reasonable regulation, in nowise hostile to the inherent power to punish for contempt.

(d) That the power to regulate does not in all cases nor in this case mean the power to destroy. To regulate a court is not to destroy it.

Finally, let us look at the effect of holding that the arbitrary power of punishment cannot be gently limited (or, if the phrase be preferred, gently tempered) by legislative enactment in a constitutional court. The Constitution does not limit it. Among other things, it provides (article 3, § 1 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 212]): "That the judicial power of the state as to matters of law and equity * * * shall be vested in a Supreme Court, * * * circuit courts, criminal courts, probate courts, county courts and municipal corporation courts." All the aforesaid courts are constitutional courts, and, therefore, not the creature of mere statute. In some of such constitutional courts there is no requirement of law that the individuals acting as judges should be learned in the law. They are taken from unprofessional ranks. Their legal judgment is not rendered sure, steady, and staid by a study and comprehension of the principles of jurisprudence. Is it not a startling proposition to announce that the citizens of this state are subject to an unbridled power in all such tribunals to summarily fine them in any sum, however large, and imprison them for any term, however long, for contempt? And yet to that complexion we must come if we go to the extreme of holding that a constitutional court may not be controlled by some known, fixed, and reasonable rule of written law on the matter.

It is my opinion that the courts of Missouri need no such show of autocratic power; that they, in the future as in the past, may more surely build their dignity and usefulness solidly on the intelligent respect of the good citizen, the wise lawmaker, and a serene and even administration of justice, seeking (in Lord Mansfield's phrase) "noble ends by noble means," than build it on a show of wielding an uncontrollable power to fine and imprison.

The judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings below.

STATE ex rel. ASHTON v. IMEL, Probate Judge.

(Kansas City Court of Appeals. Missouri. March 29, 1909.)

COURTS (§ 231*)—COURT OF APPEALS—JURISDICTION—AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY.

The Court of Appeals has no jurisdiction of an appeal from an order sustaining a demurrer to the alternative writ of mandamus, issued on the relation of an executrix having in her hands as such an estate largely in excess of $4,500, and directing the probate court to allow an appeal from its order appointing an administrator pendente lite; the amount involved being in excess of its jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Dec. Dig. § 231.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Buchanan County; C. A. Mosman, Judge.

Mandamus by the State, on the relation of Lucinda B. Ashton, against John F. Imel, Probate Judge, to compel respondent to allow an appeal from an order. From an order sustaining a demurrer to the writ, relator appeals. Cause certified to the Supreme Court.

Fulkerson, Graham & Smith, for appellant. Rusk & Stringfellow and Chas. C. Crow, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The circuit court of Buchanan county issued an alternative writ of mandamus against the probate court of that county, directing that court to allow an appeal from its order appointing an administrator pendente lite. Respondent demurred to the writ, which demurrer was sustained, and relator appealed to this court.

It appears that Thomas Ashton died in Buchanan county, leaving a will which was duly filed and admitted to probate. Lucinda B. Ashton, widow of the deceased, was named as executrix in the will and duly qualified. Afterwards Annie E. Penfield, who is child and heir of deceased, instituted an action in the circuit court of Buchanan county contesting such will, in which Lucinda B. Ashton was made a party. Annie E. Penfield filed a motion in the probate court setting forth these facts and asked for the appointment of an administrator pendente lite. On hearing such motion it was sustained, and John L. Zeidler was duly appointed administrator pendente lite. Mrs. Ashton thereupon made application for an appeal from the order of appointment, which application was refused. Whereupon Mrs. Ashton, as relator herein, applied for a writ of mandamus against the probate court, and the alternative writ was issued and demurred to as above stated.

It appears that the estate in the hands of Mrs. Ashton as executrix of the will is largely in excess of $4,500, the limit of the jurisdiction of this court. The effect of the order appointing an administrator pendente lite is to take from the possession of Mrs. Ashton the effects of the estate and turn them over to such administrator. It is, in effect, a contest for the possession of property of value largely in excess of our jurisdiction. There were two writs of prohibition issued by this court against the judge of the circuit court of Buchanan county involving a controversy over the same estate and practically between the same parties (State ex rel. Annie E. Penfield v. C. A. Mosman, Judge, 115 S. W. 1041, and State ex rel. John L. Zeidler v. C. A. Mosman, Judge, and Lucinda B. Ashton, 115 S. W. 1042 decided February 1, 1909), in which we held we had no jurisdiction and certified the cases to the Supreme Court.

It seems that the same reason exists to certify this case, and it is accordingly ordered.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 330*)—STREET PAVING—SELECTION OF MATERIALS.

Where there are several kinds of vitrified bricks equally well suited to use for paving, the selection by the board of public works of the bricks of a particular manufacturer, thereby cutting off all opportunities for the manufacturer of other kinds of vitrified bricks to submit bids, as provided by the city charter, is illegal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 854, 855; Dec. Dig. § 330.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jackson County; T. J. Seehorn, Judge.

Action by James G. Glennon against Jemuel C. Gates. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Johnson & Lucas, for appellant. Henry N. Ess, for respondent.

ELLISON, J. This is an action to enforce a special tax bill as a lien against defendant's property. The result of the trial was to declare the bill to be void, and plaintiff has brought the case here.

The bill was issued for street paving in Kansas City, Mo. The charter of that city makes provision for the recommendation by the board of public works of several kinds of pavement to be used in paving, which may be ordered by the proper authority of the city. It further provides that the majority of property owners may select from this recommendation the particular kind of paving they desire; but, if the property owners fail to make the selection, then the board of public works shall select and designate the kind. In this case the board recommended the following: "Vitrified brick as manufactured by the Kansas City Vitrified Brick Company, the Diamond Brick Company, the Pittsburg (Kan.) Vitrified Brick Company, or any other vitrified brick equally as good as those named." But the property owners failed to exercise their choice, and the board thereupon made this order: "The board of public works selects Pittsburg (Kan.) vitrified paving brick as the material with which to pave the within-named alley, and fixes the price not to exceed $1.70 per square yard."

The case was tried on an agreed statement of facts, wherein it was stated that: "At the time the written recommendation made by the board of public works to the common council of Kansas City to have this alley paved as a business alley, and at the time of the passage and approval of the ordinance for paving this alley copied herein, and at the time of the making of the contract pursuant to which the tax bill sued on was issued, vitrified brick as manufactured by the Diamond Brick & Tile Company, the Kansas City Vitrified Brick Company, and Pittsburg (Kan.) Vitrified Brick Company were in use in Kansas City as paving brick, and they all complied substantially in every respect with the details in brick pavements as copied in this statement, and there were other vitrified brick which complied with substantially and were in substantial accordance with all the specifications and details set out in this statement." And it was further stated on part of plaintiff that: "No person, firm, or corporation, during the year 1901, in Pittsburg, Kan., manufactured and sold vitrified brick as described in the recommendation of the board of public works and in the ordinance in evidence except the Pittsburg (Kan.) Vitrified Brick Company, manufacturer of the brick selected and used in paving the alley under the contract in evidence." The instruction asked by plaintiff and refused was as follows: "The court declares the law to be that if there was but one plant for the manufacture of Pittsburg vitrified brick at Pittsburg, Kan., and that was the plant from which the brick designated by the board of public works came, then the board had the right under the testimony to designate such brick for the paving of said street, and the finding will be for the plaintiff."

It appears by the foregoing that, while there were several kinds of vitrified brick of equal durability and equally well suited in every way for paving, yet the board of public works selected one of these absolutely, and thereby cut off all opportunity for the owners of the other kinds to submit bids, and destroyed the competition which the charter vouchsafes to the property owner by requiring a public letting to the best bidder. Vitrified paving brick of equal quality and suitability is conceded by the agreed statement to be a material manufactured by a number of different persons or corporations; and to allow a public body which, in effect, is exercising the right to take private property for public use, to select a favorite from among these would be an inexcusable and gross injustice, and would be in the face of the decisions of the Supreme Court in the cases of Curtice v. Schmidt, 202 Mo. 703, 721-725, 101 S. W. 61, of Swift v. St. Louis, 180 Mo. 80, 95, 79 S. W. 172, and of Shoenberg v. Field, 95 Mo. App. 241, 68 S. W. 945, as well as of the Supreme Courts of other states. Where some desirable article for public use is patented, or held in monopoly by one person, it has been decided that, in order to avoid deprising a municipality of the benefit of such article, it may be prescribed as the article to be used; but that is a monopoly made either by the patent or by reason of there being but the one kind of material, while in the case before us there are several equal kinds in the hands of as many independent owners and the monopoly of the one kind is made, not by patent or single ownership, but by the order of the board of public works. We decided the exact question which is presented here in Shoenberg v. Field, supra, and so did the Supreme Court of Kansas in National Surety Co. v. Hydraulic Pressed Brick Co., 73 Kan. 196, 84 Pac. 1030.

We are cited by plaintiff to the decision in Construction Co. v. Coal Co., 205 Mo. 49, 103 S. W. 93, which we think has no bearing on the question, and in which it is expressly stated that the rule in the foregoing cases is not touched upon. The expression cited in that case, at page 69 of 205 Mo., and page 98 of 103 S. W., is that: "The board of public works selected American bituminous rock, and neither of the vitrified brick mentioned. In adopting American bituminous rock, it merely designated a material." That is to say, if in the case at bar the board of public works had selected vitrified brick of standard quality, it would merely have selected the kind of material for the paving; but when it selected the material, and in addition named the particular party who should furnish it, it violated the law. The argument advanced in plaintiff's behalf, as applied to this case, has not impressed us with its soundness.

The judgment is affirmed. All concur.

KELLERMAN CONTRACTING CO. v. CHICAGO HOUSE WRECKING CO.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals. Missouri. April 6, 1909. Rehearing Denied April 20, 1909.)

1. CONTRACTS (§ 169*)—CONSTRUCTION—EXPLAINING AMBIGUITY.

The circumstances under which a contract is made, the situation of the parties, and the facts of which they were cognizant at the time may be resorted to if the writing is ambiguous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 752; Dec. Dig. § 169.*]

2. SALES (§ 150*)—REMOVAL OF PROPERTY—IMPLIED CONTRACT.

A bare contract of sale does not imply a promise by the buyer to remove the property from the seller's premises or other locality where it happens to be.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 350; Dec. Dig. § 150.*]

3. SALES (§ 150*)—DELIVERY AND ACCEPTANCE—REMOVAL OF PROPERTY.

A sale binds the buyer to accept the property when tendered under the contract; and delivery and acceptance pass the title with the burden of ownership, which will include, under some circumstances, the removal of the property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 350; Dec. Dig. § 150.*]

4. SALES (§ 85*)—CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACTS—REMOVAL OF PROPERTY.

By its concession the German government was bound to remove its buildings and constructions from the site and grounds of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, and clean the place and restore it to its original condition as far as practicable. Pursuant to its contract with plaintiff contracting company, the latter was to have the buildings which it built, and was to wreck and remove them. Plaintiff sold the buildings to defendant wrecking company by a written contract, whereby the latter merely accepted a proposition of sale for a certain price, payment to be made when the property was delivered. Held, that defendant did not thereby agree to clear the site of all material as plaintiff was bound to do.

5. EVIDENCE (§ 441*)—CONSTRUCTION—PRELIMINARY AGREEMENTS—MERGER.

Such a provision could not be imported into the written contract by virtue of a prior oral promise.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2030-2047; Dec. Dig. § 441.*]

6. SALES (§ 85*)—CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION OF CONTRACTS—DUTY TO REMOVE PROPERTY.

The buildings and material composing them being turned over to defendant and accepted, it was incumbent on it to take the property away, but this duty was a consequence of the contract, and not a term of or undertaking in it, and was imposed by law as an incident of ownership, and not as a part of the agreement, which related solely to a sale.

7. SALES (§ 369*)—FAILURE TO REMOVE PROPERTY—REMEDY OF SELLER.

The remedy for a buyer's failure to perform his duty imposed by law to remove the property sold sounds in tort in the nature of the common-law remedy of trespass on the case, though this does not mean that the tort may not be waived, and action maintained on an implied assumpsit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 1063; Dec. Dig. § 369.*]

8. PLEADING (§ 49*)—PETITION—CHARACTER OF ACTION—HOW DETERMINED.

The character of an action is determined from the express averments of the petition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 108; Dec. Dig. § 49.*]

9. JUDGMENT (§ 249*)—CONFORMITY TO PLEADINGS.

If redress ex delicto is desired, there must be no averment of an express promise.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 435; Dec. Dig. § 249.*]

10. PLEADING (§ 49*)—PETITION—THEORY OF ACTION.

A petition in two counts against a wrecking company on a written contract of sale of buildings for failure to remove rubbish alleged as a matter of inducement an ordinance of the city of St. Louis granting the right to use Forest Park to the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company, and providing for clearing the park after the exposition closed. It then alleged a contract between the exposition company and the German government and between such government and plaintiff to remove structures and material according to the contract between the city and exposition company and between the German government and plaintiff, and a breach thereof. The second count was like the first, except in alleging that defendant agreed to remove the structures, rubbish, and debris within a reasonable time. Held, that the petition declared on the written agreement, and adopted the theory that defendant thereby undertook to clear away the buildings and bring the site back into a state of nature as the German government and plaintiff had agreed to do.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 108; Dec. Dig. § 49.*]

11. JUDGMENT (§ 250*) — CONFORMITY TO PLEADINGS.

Plaintiff must recover, if at all, on the contract alleged.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 436; Dec. Dig. § 250.*]

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Jesse A. McDonald, Judge.

Action by the Kellerman Contracting Company against the Chicago House Wrecking Company for failure to remove buildings sold to defendant. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Nagle & Kirby, for appellant. A. B. Chandler and Rowell & Ferriss, for respondent.

GOODE, J. The parties entered into the following contract: "St. Louis, 2-7-05. Kellerman Contracting Company, 418 Roe Building, City. Gentleman: We accept your proposition of $600 for the German House, also the Restaurant and all material therein, excepting such as belongs to the German Commission, and certain plumbing. This is free of all incumbrances, liens, etc. Payment to be made for the above property when same is delivered to us. Yours truly, Chicago House Wrecking Company. A. Harris, Pres. Accepted: Kellerman Contracting Company. Wm. Lehr, Secr." The buildings mentioned in the contract were constructed by the German government in that portion of Forest Park in the city of St. Louis which was the site of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition. The municipal government of St. Louis had granted to the exposition company the privilege of using Forest Park for an exposition on condition that all structures erected in the park and property used in connection with the exposition should be removed from the park within six months after the close of the Fair. The contract between the exposition company and the state of Germany granting the latter a concession to erect the buildings mentioned bound the German government to remove the buildings and all constructions from the site and grounds of the exposition in 60 days after the Fair closed, clear and clean the place, and restore the same to its original condition as far as practicable. The German government let the contract for the construction of the buildings to plaintiff, and provided in the contract the buildings should be wrecked and removed from the premises on or before January 31, 1905; further agreeing all the wrecked property should belong to plaintiff.

It will be seen by the agreement quoted, supra, plaintiff sold the two buildings and all the materials therein, except parts belonging to the German commission and plumbing material, to defendant on February 7, 1905. The buildings were delivered to defendant March 28, 1905, and the evidence showed two months would be a reasonable time in which to wreck them and remove the material. Defendant commenced wrecking work in July, and continued it until September or October. The buildings were composed of wood, plaster, and staff, and, after they were demolished, defendant took out such material as it deemed valuable, but left the ground littered with staff, lath, broken lumber, and other rubbish. The exposition company notified plaintiff to restore the site to its original condition, and on November 2, 1905, plaintiff made written demand of defendant to do this work, saying the buildings had been sold with the understanding defendant was to wreck them and put the place in the shape it was in before the buildings were erected. Defendant did not remove the rubbish, and, in consequence of its alleged default in this regard, plaintiff removed it at an expense of over $800, as the court found. This action was instituted to recover reimbursement for that outlay, the petition declaring in two counts on the contract between plaintiff and defendant, which we have copied. As matter of inducement an ordinance of the city of St. Louis granting the right to use the park to the exposition company and providing the company should clear the park of all structures, rubbish, and debris after the exposition closed, and the contracts between the exposition company and the German government and between said government and the plaintiffs to the same effect, were all pleaded in the petition, which then avers in the first count defendant agreed in its contract with plaintiff to tear down and remove all said structures and all material of any kind and nature in a good and workmanlike manner from and out of said park and within the time the buildings were to be removed according to the contract between the city and the exposition company and between the German government and this plaintiff, further alleging a breach of the agreement. The second count of the petition is like the first, except in alleging defendant agreed to remove the structures, rubbish, and debris within a reasonable time. Oral evidence was admitted, over the objection of defendant, of a conversation between plaintiff's secretary and the defendant's president at the time the written contract of February 7th was made, in which the former told the latter the buildings must be wrecked by January 31, or February 1, 1905, but plaintiff could not get possession of them then.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The secretary testified nothing was said between the two about the removal of the rubbish. It should be stated that defendant objected to the introduction in evidence of any of the contracts except the one in suit. Judgment having been entered in favor of plaintiff for the amount it had paid out for clearing away the rubbish left by defendant, this appeal was taken.

Plaintiff's theory is, in legal effect, that defendant stepped into its shoes as regards the obligation of plaintiff's agreement with the German government to remove the material from the site of the buildings, and restore the same to the condition it was in before they were erected. But, so far as its express terms go, the contract between these parties is simply one for the sale of the two buildings and the material composing them, with certain exceptions. An agreement of the effect plaintiff insists on cannot be introduced into the contract by virtue of an oral promise made anterior to it; for this would be to ingraft a verbal stipulation on an obligation in writing. Tracy v. Iron Works, 104 Mo. 183, 16 S. W. 203. The circumstances under which the contract was made, the situation of the parties, and the facts of which they were cognizant at the time might be resorted to in interpreting the writing if it was ambiguous. But in our opinion it is not; and, moreover, reference to those matters dehors the instrument could not possibly import into it the promise or agreement defendant alleged in the petition, namely, to clear the site of the buildings so it would look like it did before they were erected. Greaves v. Ashlin, 3 Camp. *426.

Plaintiff's counsel say, if the instrument must be construed from its four corners, such a construction of it involves an agreement to remove all the material from the site, because the law carries such an agreement into every contract for the sale of a chattel as part of the buyer's obligation, and the buildings were treated as chattels. Davis v. Emery, 61 Me. 140, 14 Am. Rep. 553. We know of no legal principle or authority nor have we been referred to any which reads into and makes part of a bare contract for the sale of personal property a promise by the vendee to remove it from the premises of the seller or other locality where it happens to be. The sale of a chattel binds the buyer to accept it when tendered to him under the terms of the contract, and delivery and acceptance pass the title to him with the burdens of ownership, which will include, under some circumstances, the removal of the property. When the buildings and material composing them were turned over to defendant and accepted, we think it was incumbent on defendant to take the property away, but this duty was a consequence of the contract of sale, and not a term of or undertaking in it. The duty was imposed by law as an incident of ownership, and not as a part of the agreement the parties made, which related solely to a sale. The remedy for failure to perform said duty sounds in tort in the nature of the common-law remedy of trespass on the case, but we do not say the tort might not be waived and an action maintained on an implied assumpsit. Bliss, Code Pleadings (4th Ed.) § 153 et seq.; Pomerooy, Code Remedies (4th Ed.) § 458 et seq.; Crane v. Murray, 106 Mo. App. 697, 80 S. W. 280. In either form of action the question would arise whether the duty was to plaintiff or to the city as owner of the site, and which could seek redress against defendant. We think the authorities cited by plaintiff, as far as they are pertinent, dealt with instances where there was either an express agreement to remove the thing sold, as in Davis v. Emery, supra, or with actions in tort, or perchance on a fictitious assumpsit implied by law in consequence of the tort. Diblee v. Corbett, 9 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 200; Dayton v. Roland, 1 Daly (N. Y.) 446; Furstenburg v. Fawcett, 61 Md. 184; Story, Sales, 835; Benjamin, Sales, § 700. We have not found any discussion of the question of procedure in such cases in opinions or text-writers. The character of an action is determined from the averments of the petition, and it is sometimes difficult to say whether the pleader has declared on an express contract or has merely pleaded one as matter of inducement and sought relief for a tort. The rule is that, if redress ex delicto is desired, there must be no averment of a direct promise. 21 Ency. Pl. & Pr. 913. Beyond doubt the present petition declares on the written agreement entered into by the parties, and adopts the theory that defendant undertook thereby to clear away the buildings, and bring the site back to a state of nature.

As plaintiff must recover, if at all, on the contract alleged, and as none such was proved, the judgment will be reversed and the cause remanded. Clements v. Yeates, 69 Mo. 623; Cole v. Armour, 154 Mo. 333, 55 S. W. 476; Laclede Const. Co. v. Iron Works, 169 Mo. 137, 154, 69 S. W. 384. All concur.

PARSONS et al. v. LOUISVILLE & N. R. CO.
(Kansas City Court of Appeals. Missouri.
March 29, 1909.)

1. TRIAL (§ 156*)—DEMURRER TO EVIDENCE—EFFECT.

The court, in ruling on a demurrer to plaintiff's evidence, must consider the evidence in a light most favorable to him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 355; Dec. Dig. § 156.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 104*)—DELAY IN TRANSPORTATION—EVIDENCE.

Where, in an action against a carrier for negligent delay in transporting perishable freight, it was agreed that the freight should have arrived on April 28th, and the evidence of plaintiff showed that it did not arrive until five days later, while the evidence of the carrier fixed the arrival of the freight at April 28th, the verdict for plaintiff established an unreasonable delay authorizing a recovery, provided such delay was the result of the negligence pleaded in the petition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 444-447; Dec. Dig. § 104.*]

3. CARRIERS (§ 136*)—CHANGING ROUTE OF SHIPMENT—NEGLIGENCE.

The act of a carrier in changing the route of shipment from that stated in the contract is not negligence per se; but proof of the change, without good cause, coupled with proof of unusual delay causing damage to the freight, is evidence of negligence sufficient to raise an issue of fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 596; Dec. Dig. § 136.*]

4. CARRIERS (§ 105*)—NEGLIGENT DELAY IN TRANSPORTATION—MEASURE OF DAMAGE.

The measure of damages for the negligent delay in the transportation of perishable freight is the difference between the market value of the freight when delivered and the market value of the same when it should have been delivered had no unreasonable delay occurred, provided the petition in an action therefor warrants it, and does not specifically plead elements of damage, in which case the recovery is restricted to the elements alleged.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 451; Dec. Dig. § 105.*]

5. CARRIERS (§ 106*)—NEGLIGENT DELAY OF PERISHABLE FREIGHT—DAMAGES—PETITION INSTRUCTIONS.

Where the petition, in an action against a carrier for negligent delay in the transportation of tomatoes, alleged that good tomatoes were depreciated in value a specified sum per crate by the decline in the market, that a specified number of crates were spoiled, and that plaintiff incurred expense in sorting the same, and the evidence showed a greater damage to a specified number of crates than that pleaded, an instruction directing the jury to assess the damages at the difference between the market value of the tomatoes when delivered and the market value of the same when they would have been delivered had no unreasonable delay occurred was erroneous because it enlarged the cause of action pleaded.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jackson County; Walter A. Powell, Judge.

Action by M. J. Parsons and another, partners doing business under the firm name of the Parsons-Applegate Company, against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Wash Adams and Chas. B. Adams, for appellant. Joseph Johnson and Paxton & Rose, for respondents.

JOHNSON, J. Action against a common carrier, brought by the consignee and owner of a car load of tomatoes to recover damages for an unreasonable delay in the transportation, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant. The cause is here on the appeal of defendant from a judgment against it of $600.

Material facts disclosed by the evidence of plaintiffs are as follows: Plaintiffs are partners engaged in dealing in fruits and vegetables in Kansas City, under the firm name of Parsons-Applegate Company. They bought a car load of tomatoes in Jacksonville, Fla., which was received by the Seaboard Air Line Railroad Company on April 21, 1906, for transportation from Jacksonville to Kansas City. A through bill of lading was issued on that date, in which plaintiffs were named as consignees, and the route of the shipment was specified as "via L. & N. and Frisco," which meant that the initial carrier, the Seaboard Air Line, would haul the car to Montgomery, and there deliver it to defendant, the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, for transportation to Birmingham, Ala., and delivery at that place to the St. Louis & San Francisco Railway Company (commonly called "the Frisco"). The latter company was to transport the car to Kansas City. The property was to be carried as perishable freight, and the evidence shows that the Frisco has the shortest line of railroad between Birmingham and Kansas City, and operates fast trains for the carriage of such freight. Further, it appears from the evidence of plaintiffs that had the car in question been transported within a reasonable time over the route specified, it would have arrived in Kansas City on April 28th, and the tomatoes would have come into the possession of the consignees in first-class condition for the market. On and after April 28th, the day the car should have reached its destination, plaintiffs made daily inquiries at the Frisco station in Kansas City to ascertain if the car had arrived. They also telephoned to the stations of other railroads that handled freight from the southeast, but did not think to telephone to the Rock Island station, as they did not know that freight from Florida might be brought in over the St. Louis line of that company. About noon of May 3d plaintiffs received a telephone message from the Rock Island that the car was on its unloading track. They immediately unloaded the car, and found the tomatoes overripe and damaged. The car contained 472 crates, which could have been sold on the market April 28th at $4 per crate. Between that date and May 3d, the market for tomatoes of that class, in good condition, declined 75 cents per crate. It was found that all the crates contained spoiled tomatoes, and it was necessary to sort over the whole shipment. The expense of sorting them was $50. The spoiled tomatoes, amounting to 50 crates, were a total loss, and the remainder of the shipment suffered a depreciation of 75 cents per crate from the decline in the market.

It is conceded that, instead of delivering the car to the Frisco at Birmingham, de-defendant hauled it over its own line to East St. Louis, and there delivered it to a terminal railroad, which hauled it to St. Louis and delivered it to the Rock Island. This was a longer route by 93 miles than the Frisco, and involved a change of roads at St. Louis, which the evidence, in the light most favorable to plaintiffs, shows is likely to consume much time, especially when the yards at this important center are in a congested condition. The evidence of defendant is to the effect that the car arrived in Kansas City at about 6 o'clock p. m. April 28th; that it was sent to the unloading track at 7 o'clock the next morning; that plaintiffs were notified by telephone between 2 and 4 o'clock in the afternoon that the car was ready to be unloaded, the slight delay in giving notice being caused by an error in the billing in the name of one of the plaintiffs. Further, the witnesses for defendant state that the transportation was accomplished in a reasonable time, and in 9 hours less than would have been consumed had the shipment been sent over the Frisco. In explanation of this statement it is asserted that a delay of 13 hours would have been encountered at Birmingham on account of the fact that the fast train on the Frisco was not scheduled to leave until 13 hours after the arrival of the car at Birmingham. The allegations of the petition of particular concern to us in the present inquiry are as follows: "That said defendant, in violation of said instructions, did not carry said tomatoes to Birmingham, and there deliver the same to the Frisco Railroad Company, as directed, but on the contrary, in violation of said shipping instructions, and without the knowledge or consent of the plaintiffs, the defendant diverted said car from the route aforesaid, and carried same around by Nashville, Tenn., Evansville, Ind., and St. Louis, Mo., and at St. Louis said car was delivered to the Rock Island Railroad Company, and hauled by it to Kansas City. That it required 5 days longer to carry said car over said last-named route than it would have required to carry the same over the route directed by plaintiffs, so that said car, instead of arriving in Kansas City on the 28th day of April, 1905, did not, in fact, arrive until May 3, 1905. That said delay was caused by the wrongful and neglectful act of the defendant in failing and refusing to follow the shipping instructions of plaintiffs aforesaid, and in diverting said car as aforesaid. That said load of tomatoes consisted of 486 crates. That tomatoes in Kansas City on the 25th day of April, 1905, were worth in the market the sum of $4 per crate. That on May 3, 1905, the market had declined, so that the market value of tomatoes on said day was $3.25. That on account of the delay in the transportation of said tomatoes, caused by the diversion aforesaid, said tomatoes had, many of them, rotted and spoiled, so that over 50 crates of said tomatoes, of the value of $200, were wholly lost to plaintiffs, and plaintiffs were put to great trouble and expense in sorting the spoiled from the good tomatoes, which said trouble and expense amounts to $50, so that plaintiffs allege that by reason of the premises they have sustained damage in the sum of $614.50." The answer is a general denial.

At the request of plaintiffs the court instructed the jury "that, if you find from the evidence that the defendant changed the routing of the car of tomatoes consigned to plaintiffs without the consent or knowledge of plaintiffs, and, instead of transferring said car to the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Company at Birmingham, transported said car by its own line to St. Louis, and there transferred it to the Rock Island, which carried said car to Kansas City, Mo., and because of said change in the routing there was an unreasonable delay in the delivery of said car load of tomatoes to plaintiffs, and because of said delay said tomatoes were damaged in quality, and the market price of the same declined, then you will find for the plaintiffs, and assess their damages at the difference between the market value of said car load of tomatoes when delivered to plaintiffs and the market value of the same when they would have been delivered to plaintiffs had no such unreasonable delay occurred, not exceeding the sum of $614.50, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum upon the total amount of said damages from the date of the demand upon defendant for the same."

It is argued by defendant that a verdict in its favor should have been directed peremptorily. We do not think the question of whether the relation of defendant to the shipment, at the time of its delivery to plaintiffs, was that of carrier or warehouseman is of any importance in the solution of the questions raised by the demurrer to the evidence. The evidence of plaintiffs tends to show an unreasonable delay in the transportation, not in the giving of notice after the car arrived. The evidence of defendant tends to show no delay in the transportation, and the giving of notice within a reasonable time. In this position of the parties the subjects of the giving of notice and of the reasonableness of the time in which the notice was given were not treated or submitted to the jury as issues of fact, but the primary and dominant issues presented by the pleadings and evidence were whether or not an unreasonable time had been consumed in the transportation from Birmingham, and if it had, was the delay due to negligence of defendant in diverting the car from the route specified in the contract? Considering the evidence in the light most favorable to plaintiffs, a position we must occupy in ruling on the demurrer to the evidence, a strong inference arises that there was an unreasonable delay in the transportation. Indeed, the witnesses for both parties agree that the car should have arrived in Kansas City on April 28th. The controverted fact is the date of its arrival. The evidence of plaintiffs supports the conclusion that the date in question was May 3d. That of defendant fixes it at April 28th. The evidence of each party being substantial, an issue of fact was raised for the jury to solve, which, if decided in favor of plaintiffs—as it was—would demonstrate beyond peradventure that an unreasonable delay of 5 days had occurred in the transportation. We must assume this to be the fact, and our next inquiry is to ascertain if the evidence of plaintiffs will authorize a reasonable inference that the unreasonable delay was the direct result of the negligence pleaded in the petition. The gravamen of the action is negligence of defendant involved in the act of diverting the car at Birmingham. The act of changing the route of a shipment from that stated in the contract is not negligence per se. Things may happen in the course of transportation that make a diversion necessary.

But it is not even suggested by defendant that after the car left Jacksonville anything occurred to call for a change in its route, and the evidence of plaintiffs leads reasonably to the conclusion that defendant diverted the car to a longer and slower line for no better reason than to obtain for itself the benefit of a longer haul. Further, it appears that the unusual delay was the result of the diversion, and was the proximate cause of the injury to the property. These facts made out a case to go to the jury. While it is true that proof alone of an unreasonable delay will not support an inference of negligence, it is well settled that such proof, when buttressed by evidence of circumstances which even slightly tend to show a negligent origin of the delay, will warrant such inference. Gilbert v. Railway, 132 Mo. App. 697, 112 S. W. 1002, and cases cited. The act of changing, without good cause, the route of the car to a longer and slower line, when coupled with proof of unreasonable delay, is evidence of negligence sufficient to raise an issue of fact. We are not overlooking the testimony of defendant's witnesses to the effect that the line it selected, though longer, maintained a service that would bring the car to its destination in a shorter time than the route prescribed in the contract. But that evidence is not conclusive, and could serve only as an evidentiary defense to the proof of plaintiffs. No error was committed in the refusal to sustain the demurrer to the evidence.

The instruction given at the request of plaintiffs is erroneous in the measure of damages submitted. Three elements of damage are specifically alleged in the petition, viz., first, that the good tomatoes were depreciated in value 75 cents per crate, by a decline in the market; second, that 50 crates were spoiled; and, third, that expense of $50 was incurred in sorting. The instruction does not mention these elements, but directs the jury to assess the damages "at the difference between the market value of said car load of tomatoes when delivered to plaintiffs and the market value of the same when they would have been delivered to plaintiffs had no such unreasonable delay occurred." This is the correct rule for the assessment of damages to personal property negligently injured by a carrier in the course of transportation, where the allegations of the petition will warrant its application. But in cases such as the one in hand, where the elements of damage are specifically pleaded, the recovery must be restricted in the instructions to the elements alleged. The rule stated in the instruction does not include the item of the expense of sorting and, therefore, the verdict cannot be said to include that item. The remaining two items alleged in the petition aggregate $527, viz.:

50 crates spoiled at $4 per crate.....	$200 00
436 " depreciated 75¢ by decline in market.....	327 00
	<hr/> $527 00

There is evidence tending to show greater damage to the 436 crates than that pleaded, and the conclusion cannot be escaped that the jury assessed more damages on that score than were claimed. It is clear the instruction enlarged the scope of the cause of action pleaded, and that the error was prejudicial. In other respects the case was fairly tried, but for the error noted, the judgment must be reversed and the cause remanded. All concur.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 4110 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2234), declaring an agreement for the occupation of a house or other building in a city not made in writing to be a "tenancy from month to month," and providing that either party may terminate the same on one month's notice of intention to do so, a tenant from month to month who vacates without giving one month's notice is liable for the rent for the succeeding month.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1066*) — REVIEW — HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

As under Rev. St. 1899, § 4123 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2239), it is essential in attachment proceedings for rent that the jury find defendant liable for the rent, the mere fact that the court referred in its instruction to the rent for the month following the vacation of the premises was not prejudicial error as submitting a question touching the merits of the cause of action, and not simply the grounds of attachment, where it conclusively appears that the only rent owed by defendant was for that month, and that it accrued because of defendant's failure to terminate the tenancy by giving the statutory notice, though generally speaking it would be well for the court to instruct the jury to find whether the rent was due within one year after the institution of the suit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1066.*]

4. JUDGMENT (§ 655*) — CONCLUSIVENESS — JUDGMENT ON PLEA IN ABATEMENT.

An investigation of the matter of rent and the tenant's liability therefor on a plea in abatement to an attachment for rent is not res judicata of such matters on the subsequent trial of the principal cause on the merits.

5. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 229*)—ATTACHMENT FOR RENT—DEMAND—NECESSITY FOR.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 4123 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2239), authorizing an attachment for rent when due and unpaid after demand, and providing that, if the tenant is absent from the premises, demand may be made on the person occupying the same, the fact that the landlord called at the premises with the intention of demanding the rent and found them wholly unoccupied, is not equivalent to a demand on the tenant, or, in his absence, on the person occupying the premises, and is insufficient to render the mere default in payment a ground for attachment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Dec. Dig. § 229.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 854*) — REVIEW — HARMLESS ERROR—ATTACHMENT PROCEEDINGS.

A verdict sustaining an attachment on each ground alleged should be upheld, though error interposed as to one ground, where the other grounds are sustained by the evidence, and were properly submitted.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Geo. H. Shields, Judge.

Attachment proceedings for rent by Bertha C. Sessinghaus against Theodore O. Knoche. There was a verdict for plaintiff, and, from an order setting the same aside and granting a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

See, also, 127 Mo. App. 300, 105 S. W. 283.

H. H. Oberschelp, for appellant. B. B. Brewer, for respondent.

NORTONI, J. This is a suit in attachment for rent. The case comes here on plaintiff's appeal. It appears the plaintiff recovered in the circuit court; that is, the jury found a verdict affirming all of the grounds for attachment alleged in the affidavit. Upon hearing the motion for new trial, however, the court set this verdict aside for the reason it was of the opinion there was error in the instructions given at the instance of the plaintiff. From this order setting aside the verdict of the jury, plaintiff prosecutes the appeal.

It appears that by an oral agreement plaintiff let a hotel building in the city of St. Louis to the defendant at the agreed rental of $100 per month, to be paid on the 1st day of each month. The defendant occupied the same and paid rent for a time, and finally, on the 20th day of December, vacated the premises, and removed his property therefrom without having terminated his tenancy by giving 30 days' notice as required by the statute. The installment of rent due on the 1st day of January thereafter not having been paid, plaintiff instituted this attachment suit on January 5th for the $100 rent due January 1st for that month. It conclusively appears that the rent for January was due and unpaid at the time of the institution of the suit, and that the plaintiff, having called at the premises to make demand therefor, was unable to do so for the reason the premises were vacant and unoccupied.

There are several grounds of attachment set forth in the affidavit, only two of which are material, however, at the present time. These are the fourth and fifth. The fourth ground for attachment alleges that the defendant was liable to plaintiff for the rent for the month of January for the premises mentioned, whether then due or not, and that defendant had removed his property from said rented premises within 30 days previous to January 5th. The fifth ground alleged is that the said rent was due and unpaid; that said defendant at the time, January 5th, was absent from said premises; that plaintiff's agent had visited the said premises to demand the rent due, and found said premises vacant and no one occupying the same. The court instructed the jury on all of the grounds for the attachment alleged in the affidavit. What directions were therein given touching the grounds of attachment other than the fourth and fifth are immaterial here. The instructions in that respect were entirely proper. The court set the verdict aside, however, for the reason that in its opinion it had trespassed upon the merits of the controversy in the instruction submitting the fourth and fifth grounds of attachment. Touching these grounds, the court instructed that if the jury found from the evidence, fourth, that the defendant was liable to plaintiff for the rent for the month of January for the premises mentioned in the evidence, whether then due or not, and that defendant had removed his property from said rented premises within 30 days previous to said January 5th, then their verdict should be for the plaintiff; and, fifth, that if the jury found from the evidence said rent was due and unpaid, that said defendant, at the time the suit was brought, January 5th, was absent from said premises, that plaintiff's agent had visited said premises to demand said rent then due, and found the premises vacant and no one occupying the same, the jury should find for the plaintiff on that ground. In its instruction No. 2 the court directed that the jury were not to determine, and that its decision should in no wise affect, the question whether or not plaintiff is entitled to recover from defendant the rent for the month of January, but that the matter submitted to the jury was solely whether any one or more of the reasons alleged by plaintiff as grounds for bringing suit by attachment were true. By plaintiff's instruction No. 5, the court directed the jury that the evidence showed the tenancy was from month to month, and that the only way defendant could terminate the tenancy and end his liability for rent was to give the plaintiff or her agent written notice of his intention to terminate the tenancy 30 days previous to the time the month expired.

The court assigned the following reasons for setting aside the verdict: First, that the first instruction, defining the grounds of attachment, submitted to the jury the question of whether the defendant was liable to the plaintiff for rent for the month of January, whether then due or not; and, second, whether said rent was due and unpaid, and plaintiff's agent had visited the premises to demand the rent and found them vacant and unoccupied. So much of the instruction referred to was declared to be error for the reason it submitted questions touching the merits of the plaintiff's cause of action, and not simply on the grounds of attachment. The court said the instruction in that respect was also inconsistent with instruction No. 2, which directed the jury that its verdict should in no wise affect the question whether or not the plaintiff is entitled to recover from the defendant the rent for the month of January, but that the matter submitted related solely to whether one or more of the grounds alleged by the plaintiff for attachment were valid. The court also declared that it erred in the fifth instruction given on behalf of the plaintiff, for the reason that it submitted the question of defendant's liability for rent to the jury, and was also inconsistent with instruction No. 2. In so far as instruction No. 5 is concerned, it certainly declared the law, for the evidence of defendant himself is to the effect that he rented the premises by a verbal agreement for no definite period, and agreed to pay the rent of $100 on the 1st of each month in advance. It appears, too, he quit the possession and vacated the premises December 20th without having given plaintiff notice to that effect and without her knowledge or consent. Our statute (section 4110, Rev. St. 1899 [section 4110, Mo. Ann. St. 1906]) declares all agreements for the occupation of houses, tenements, or other buildings in cities not made in writing, to be tenancies from month to month, and that either party may terminate such tenancy by giving the other party one month's notice in writing of his intention to terminate the same. It is abundantly settled under this statute that a tenant from month to month, who, without the consent of the landlord, vacates the premises without giving one month's notice to the landlord of his intention to terminate the tenancy, will remain liable for the rent of such premises for the month succeeding. Buck v. Lewis, 46 Mo. App. 227. Where it conclusively appears, as in this case, and, in fact, is conceded by all concerned, that the tenancy was from month to month, and without the consent of or notice to the landlord the premises are vacated by the tenant, there is certainly no error in the court declaring the legal effect of such uncontroverted facts as a matter of law. It is true this matter touched upon the merits of the controversy which was to be thereafter determined in the principal suit on the merits.

However, our statute under the landlord and tenant act (section 4123, Rev. St. 1899 [section 4123, Mo. Ann. St. 1906]), concerning attachments for rent, seems to commingle the matter pertaining to the defendant's liability on the merits of the case with the grounds of attachment specified therein. It is difficult, indeed, to discern how the court could submit the two grounds of attachment referred to without treating to some extent with the merits of the controversy to be determined in the principal suit on the merits. That statute, in so far as pertinent here, is as follows: "Any person who shall be liable to pay rent, whether the same be due or not * * * If the rent be due within one year thereafter, shall be liable to attachment for such rent, in the following instances: * * * third, when he has, within thirty days, removed his property from the leased or rented premises; * * * sixth, when the rent is due and unpaid after demand thereof: provided if such tenant be absent from such leased premises, demand may be made on the person occupying the same." Now, it appears from this section, first, that no attachment is authorized unless it be in a case where the party attached is liable to pay the rent. It is immaterial whether the rent is due or not, if it appears the defendant is liable therefor. It is certainly essential, however, for the jury to find a liability on the part of the defendant to pay the rent before it can sustain the allegations in attachment, for the whole matter depends in the first instance upon the liability of the defendant to pay the rent. If defendant is liable to pay the rent, and it will become due within one year thereafter, it is sufficient on this score, whether the same is then due or not. In view of the fact that it is essential for the jury to find the defendant liable for the rent, we are persuaded that the mere fact the court referred to the rent for January in the instruction was not prejudicial error. It conclusively appears that the only rent owing by defendant to the plaintiff was that for the month of January following the vacation of the premises, and this accrued because of the defendant's failure to terminate the tenancy in the manner required by giving statutory notice.

Generally speaking, it would be well for the court to instruct the jury to find whether the rent was due within one year after the institution of the suit. The omission of this matter in the present instance is certainly immaterial, for it conclusively appears the rent was due January 1st, or five days before the attachment was sued out. It will be observed the instruction referred to did not submit to the jury the question as to whether the rent for January was due. It, in fact, referred the question of defendant's liability therefor, whether due or not, to the jury, and directed them to determine the question of liability whether the rent was then due or not. It appears from this that the question of liability, and not the question of the amount thereof, was referred for the consideration of the jury. So much of the instruction as related to this question directed that if the defendant was found to be liable for the rent in January, and had removed his property from the rented premises within 30 days previous to the institution of the suit, then the attachment should be sustained. As stated, the matter of liability referred to in a measure touches upon the merits of the controversy which should be determined thereafter in the principal suit. However this may be, the statute giving the remedy by attachment is responsible for this commingling of issues, if they be so commingled. Aside from this, instruction No. 2 told the jury the question as to whether the plaintiff was entitled to recover the rent for January was not then submitted for consideration, and that the jury was to deal with the matter of liability only to the extent of determining the grounds of attachment. The mere fact that the jury may find on the plea in abatement that the defendant is liable to respond on the merits of the cause does not operate a substantial impairment of the defendant's rights thereafter, for the law is well established to the effect that a judgment on matters in issue on the plea in abatement in an attachment suit does not become res adjudicata as to such matters on the trial of the principal cause on the merits. Garrett v. Greenwell, 92 Mo. 120, 4 S. W. 441. An investigation of the matter of rent and of the defendant's liability therefor on a plea in abatement will not be treated as res adjudicata on the subsequent trial on the merits, for the reason the statute itself introduces the matter of liability for the rent as a constituent element of the right to an attachment. Dawson v. Quillen, 48 Mo. App. 118, 121.

Under the sixth ground mentioned in section 4123, Rev. St. 1899 (section 4123, Mo. Ann. St. 1906), plaintiff is authorized to attach a defendant who is liable for the rent within one year thereafter when the rent is due and unpaid after demand thereof. In connection with this ground, the statute further provides that, if such tenant be absent from such leased premises, demand may be made on the person occupying the same. Now, the affidavit in attachment, proceeding on this ground of attachment, recites that the rent was due and unpaid on January 5th; that the defendant was absent from the premises; that plaintiff's agent had visited the premises, seeking to demand such rent then due, and found the premises vacant and unoccupied. In the instruction given the court directed the jury that it might sustain the attachment on this ground if it found the rent was due and unpaid at the time the suit was brought, on January 5th, and that the defendant was absent from the premises, and the plaintiff's agent, upon visiting the premises to demand the rent from him, found the premises vacant and unoccupied. That is to say, both the affidavit for attachment and the instruction pertaining to the sixth ground mentioned proceeded upon the theory that, if plaintiff visited the premises and found no one there upon whom to make the demand, this fact was equivalent to a demand for the rent. We believe this to be error. The sixth specification of the statute authorized the attachment for the rent due and unpaid after demand, and then points out that the demand may be made on another person occupying the same, provided the attachment debtor is absent therefrom. The statute contemplates a demand upon some one, the attachment debtor if he is present, and, if he is absent from the premises, it may be made upon another person who occupies the same. Raney v. Thomas, 94 Mo. App. 315, 68 S. W. 103. This no doubt proceeds upon the theory that the person occupying in the absence of the attachment debtor would probably be some member of his family or one in his employ, or some one in privity with him in some manner, probably a subtenant. However, it is unnecessary to speculate on the intention of the Legislature in this behalf. It is sufficient here to say that the statute does not make a visit by the plaintiff to the premises with the intention to make a demand when they are wholly unoccupied by any person equivalent to a demand upon the defendant, or, in his absence, upon some other person occupying the same. We are of the opinion had the attachment been sustained on this ground only, without demand upon the defendant or another person occupying the premises, the verdict should have been set aside for the reason the visit of plaintiff's agent to the unoccupied premises for the purpose of making a demand on defendant for the rent was insufficient to render the mere default in payment a ground for attachment.

Be this as it may, we are of opinion that the court erred in setting aside the verdict for the reason it expressly sustained the attachment on each and every other ground therefor assigned in the affidavit. In all the affidavit for attachment alleged five grounds therefor. The verdict of the jury sustained the attachment on each and every ground alleged. The evidence is ample to support all of those other than the last mentioned. All of the grounds for attachment, other than that the rent was due and unpaid after demand, were properly submitted by the instructions. Under these circumstances the verdict should be sustained on the grounds which are valid, even though error interposed with respect to the one ground last referred to. Eisenhart v. Cabanne, 16 Mo. App. 531; Tucker v. Frederick, 28 Mo. 574, 75 Am. Dec. 189; Garrouette v. White, 92 Mo. 237, 241, 4 S. W. 681. The court should have disregarded the error referred to and entered judgment on the verdict sustaining such grounds only as were properly submitted by instruction and sustained by the evidence.

The order granting a new trial will be reversed, and the cause remanded to the trial court, with directions to reinstate the verdict sustaining the attachment on such grounds as are valid and proceed accordingly. It is so ordered.

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 959*) — REVIEW — TRIAL AMENDMENT—DISCRETION OF COURT.

An amendment to pleadings after a referee's report had been filed, and when the argument of exceptions thereto was to occur was in the discretion of the court, and its refusal to permit it cannot be reversed unless it allowed the adverse parties to succeed on a technical point which might have been determined against them without prejudice to their substantial rights.

2. PLEADING (§ 258*) — ANSWER — TRIAL AMENDMENT.

In an action on a building contractor's bond, where the answer alleged that certain installments of the price were not paid until after they were due, and that the final one never was paid, the court properly denied a trial amendment alleging that each payment was made after due, the effect of which was to state no other defense than the one first pleaded.

Appeal from St. Louis Circuit Court; Robt. M. Foster and Virgil Rule, Judges.

Action by Joseph L. Freasier and others against Frank Harrison, E. R. Darlington, and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and Darlington and others appeal. Affirmed.

Wm. L. Bohnenkamp, for appellants. Thos. H. Sprinkle, for respondents.

GOODE, J. Defendants Darlington and Hoffman were sureties for Harrison on a bond executed by the latter to secure the performance of a contract to erect for plaintiffs a double two-story flat building in the city of St. Louis, complete the job by January 15, 1903, and protect plaintiffs from demands and liens of laborers and materialmen. Plaintiffs allege they were damaged by Harrison's failure to erect the building in a skillful and workmanlike manner in some particulars, complete it in the agreed time, and turn it over to them free from liens. Harrison was a codefendant; but as he is no party to the appeal, which was taken only by the sureties, we are not concerned with his answer. The sureties admitted the execution of the bond, but alleged plaintiffs failed to comply on their part, setting out certain breaches, none of which are important, except supposed deviations from the contract in paying installments of the purchase price.

As a point of practice is raised in respect of the refusal of the court to permit an amendment of the portion of the answer which related to the payments, we will copy that part, introducing into it the proposed interlineations and indicating them by italics: "Defendants state that plaintiffs failed to make the payments according to the terms of said contract, in that plaintiffs failed on each house to make the payments at the period and in the amounts specified in said contract; that when the first floor joists were laid a payment of eight hundred dollars ($800.00) was due, but that payment was not made until long after it was due; that when the second floor joists were laid $1,100 was due, but was not paid until long after due; that the payment of $1,100 which was due when the gravel roof was on was not paid when due, but withheld for a long time thereafter; that $300 was due when the building was ready for plastering, and that this amount was not paid until long after due; that $1,250 was due when the plastering was finished, and that plaintiffs delayed payment of this amount on each building; that all the payments made by plaintiffs were in different amounts and made at a different period from that specified in the contract; that when each building was completed a payment of $2,800 was due, which plaintiffs refused to pay and have never made payment to defendant Harrison; that defendants Darlington and Hoffman were not notified of these changes of the time of payment, and did not consent or agree to the delay upon the part of plaintiffs in making payment according to the contract, as the work progressed." The case was referred to a referee to report on all the issues of law and fact, and, after his report had been filed, exceptions taken, and when the argument of the exceptions was to occur, defendants requested leave to amend their answer by interlining the italicized words, and the court refused the request. The amendment was asked for, because, as originally filed, the answer made defense as to this matter solely on the ground that the intermediate installments of the purchase price were not paid until after they were due, and the final one never was paid. The evidence regarding when the several payments occurred was contradictory, plaintiff Joseph Freasier testifying they were made slightly in advance of their maturity, and Harrison that they were delayed in every instance. The finding of the referee was as follows on this issue: "The plaintiffs made the payments to the defendant Harrison as the work progressed substantially at the times and in the manner called for in the contract, except the last payment, which was withheld. The first and second payments on the west building were made under peculiar circumstances. The first payment was to be made under the contract, when the first floor joists were laid, and the second payment was to be made when the second floor joists were laid. The stone masons on the buildings failed to put in the center row of posts or pillars, upon which the first floor joists were to be supported, and the joists, for this reason, were put in without any supports. The plaintiffs claim, for this reason, that the first payment was made before it was due—that the joists were not properly laid until the girder was under them. For the same reason plaintiffs contend that the second payment was made ahead of time. The payments by plaintiffs were usually a little more than the contract called for at the time they were made. At times these payments would amount to a few hundred dollars more than was due according to plaintiffs' contention; but, according to the contentions of the defendants, plaintiffs were always behind in their payments. Defendants in their brief, especially the defendants Darlington and Hoffman, contend these advance payments by plaintiffs avoided the bond, but there is no issue of that character made by the pleadings. Said defendants in their answer make complaint that the plaintiffs failed to make the payments as they became due. No charge is made in the pleadings that they made the payments in advance without the consent of the sureties on the bond. No disadvantage arose from the act of plaintiffs in making these payments in the manner they were made, nor were the defendants Harrison, Darlington, and Hoffman injured or prejudiced in any manner thereby."

The referee having found the payments were usually a little more than the contract called for at the time they were made, and having ruled defendants had averred nothing in their answer about plaintiffs having paid before the installments were due, and without the consent of the sureties, but, on the contrary, had averred plaintiffs failed to pay as the installments became due, defendants sought to amend so as to adapt the answer to the referee's finding that the payments were made in advance instead of in arrear, and yet retain the original defense of default by plaintiffs, contending either deviation from the contract would exonerate them from liability as sureties. The only question it is necessary to determine is whether the refusal to allow the amendment is reversible error. At this stage of the case the court in its discretion might or might not permit the answer to be amended, and its decision cannot be reversed unless, under all the circumstances, it allowed plaintiffs to succeed on a technical point which might have been determined against them without prejudice to their substantial rights and in aid of the justice of the cause. Henderson v. Henderson, 55 Mo. 534; Ensworth v. Barton, 87 Mo. 622; Joyce v. Growney, 154 Mo. 253, 55 S. W. 466. It is manifest there was no abuse of discretion in the present instance for this reason if for no other: As the answer would read if amended, it set up no other defense regarding the payments except that they were made after due. It is true the italicized language says they were made in different amounts and at different periods from those specified in the contract; but, as this language was interlined among specific averments that each payment was made after due, the effect is to state a defense based on plaintiffs' failure to pay the successive installments when they were due—the defense first pleaded.

The judgment in favor of plaintiffs was according to the report of the referee in every respect except a trifling item, and, as it cannot be assailed unless the amendment should have been permitted, we order it affirmed.

JONES et al. v. PLUMMER.

(St. Louis Court of Appeals, Missouri. April 6, 1909.)

1. WORDS AND PHRASES—"MACADAMIZING."

According to the Standard Dictionary, to "macadamize" is "to cover or pave, as a path or roadway, with small broken stone, on either a soft or a hard substratum." Judicially speaking, the word "macadamizing" has a fixed and definite meaning, and refers not only to the kind of material to be used in covering the street or road, but also to the manner in which it is to be laid. It means to cover a street or road by a process introduced by Macadam, which consists of the use of small stones of a uniform size, consolidated and levelled by heavy rollers.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, p. 4264.]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 414*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS.

Rev. St. § 5858, as amended (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2963), provides that on repairs of macadamizing the street shall be divided into sections, the cost in each section to be assessed on the lots fronting on either side of the section. Held that, the mere employment of the word "macadamizing" not essentially involving the idea of constructing a new stone foundation therefor, where the macadamizing on a stone foundation, permitted to remain intact, was completely removed and relaid, it was reconstructed within the statute, and not merely repaired, and hence a division of the street into sections was not necessary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1017; Dec. Dig. § 414.*]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 444*) — STREET IMPROVEMENTS.

Under Ann. St. 1906, § 5859, providing that contracts for street paving, etc., shall be let to the lowest bidder on plans and specifications filed therefor with the city clerk by the city engineer, it is an essential prerequisite to a valid assessment that the plans and specifications be on file when the contract is let.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1064; Dec. Dig. § 444.*]

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 538*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS.

In the absence of evidence to the contrary, the presumption obtains that plans and specifications for street paving, etc., were on file with the city clerk when the contract was let, as required by Ann. St. 1906, § 5859, and the burden is on one seeking to restrain the enforcement of tax bills issued in payment for the work to remove the presumption.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 538.*]

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 538*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS.

In an action to restrain the enforcement of tax bills issued for street paving, testimony of plaintiff's attorney that he asked the city clerk for the plans and specifications of the work, and was told that none were on file, was insufficient to show that they were not on file at the time of letting the contract, as required by Ann. St. 1906, § 5859, the resolution declaring the improvement proper referring to them as though then on file, and it not appearing when witness asked for them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 538.*]

6. TRIAL (§ 105*)—EQUITY CASE—HEARSAY EVIDENCE.

In an equity case, the court may disregard hearsay evidence, though it was admitted without objection.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1011*)—FINDINGS—CONCLUSIVENESS.

A finding of the trial court on conflicting evidence will be sustained on appeal.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Greene County. Bill by George H. Jones and others against E. Plummer. From a judgment dismissing the bill, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

J. P. McCammon and L. M. Haydon, for appellants. W. D. Tatlow and Barbour & McDavid, for respondent.

NORTONI, J. This is a suit in equity seeking to enjoin the enforcement of certain special tax bills issued against the property of the various plaintiffs by the council of the city of Springfield. Upon a hearing the court denied the relief and dismissed the bill. Plaintiffs prosecute the appeal. The special tax bills were issued in payment for the reconstruction of the macadamizing on Jefferson street. Plaintiffs seek to enjoin their enforcement, first, on the ground that the taxes therein evidenced are invalid, for the reason the levy was made for reconstructing the macadamizing mentioned, when, in truth and in fact, the street was only repaired. All of the proceedings had in the city council pertain to reconstructing the macadamizing on Jefferson street; that is to say, the resolution declaring the same necessary and the ordinances pertaining to the matter treat the improvement as reconstruction, and the taxes are assessed in accordance with the statute for such reconstruction. The same statute (section 5858, Rev. St. 1899 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 2962]), however, provides that the city council shall have power to repair the macadamizing on any street and assess the same against the adjoining properties as therein indicated. In cases of repair to macadamizing on a street, however, the same statute requires the street to be divided into sections, a section being the distance from the center of one cross or intersecting street to the center of the next cross or intersecting street, and the cost in each section shall be assessed on the lots or tracts of land fronting on either side of that section. It appears the street was not so divided into sections, and it is therefore argued that, as the improvement was a repair rather than a reconstruction, the tax bills should be enjoined for the reason in proceedings in invitum the statutory requirements in respect to all precedent matters must be strictly complied with. It appears from the evidence that Jefferson street was constructed in 1902. At this time a stone foundation of about eight or ten inches in depth was securely laid. On top of this there were several inches of macadam. That is to say, several inches of gravel, wetted and smoothly rolled, was placed on this foundation, bringing the same to a level of the grade of the street. By user the gravel or macadamizing had been worn out. The gravel had nearly all disappeared. The street was in this condition at the time the city council passed the resolution declaring it necessary to reconstruct the macadamizing thereof. This resolution, after so declaring, proceeds to direct that the street should first be cleared of all dirt, vegetable, and perishable matter, after which the same should be thoroughly spiked up and loosened, the surface of the street to be thoroughly harrowed and raked, lumps thereon to be taken out and depressions filled, so that the surface should be practically smooth and parallel with the grade of the street. It then provides that, after this is done, a layer of the best quality of river gravel shall be laid thereon, thoroughly wetted and rolled smooth, which shall be of sufficient depth on top of the foundation to bring the street to a level with the true grade thereof. It is required that no gravel shall be employed the diameter of which exceeds $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches. It appears the street was thus remacadamized in accordance with this resolution.

The argument that the improvement was a repair rather than a reconstruction of the macadamizing proceeds from the fact that the stone foundation which was laid in the street in the improvement of 1902 was left intact, and not disturbed in the present improvement. That is to say, the coat of macadam provided for and placed upon the street in the present improvement was placed on the old foundation after removing all of the former coat thereof without rebuilding the foundation. It does appear that in a few places where the stone foundation was slightly sunken the same was brought to a level by filling in with such gravel as exceeded the dimensions to be used in macadamizing. Now this argument, when interpreted in the light of our statute on the subject, involves the idea that there must be a stone foundation under the macadamizing in order to render the work done macadamizing. Such is a false premise. The Standard Dictionary says to "macadamize" is "to cover or pave, as a path or roadway, with small broken stone, on either a soft or a hard substratum." It appears from this the layer of small stones may be either on a hard or soft foundation. Certainly the mere employment of the word "macadamizing" does not essentially involve the idea of constructing a new stone foundation therefor. Judicially speaking, "the word 'macadamizing' has a fixed and definite meaning and refers not only to the kind of material to be used in covering the street or road, but also the manner in which it is to be laid. It means to cover a street or road by a process introduced by Macadam which consists of the use of small stones of a uniform size, consolidated and levelled by heavy rollers." Partridge v. Lucas, 99 Cal. 519, 33 Pac. 1082, 1083. (The italics are ours.) It appears, then, that, even though the old foundation in the street was not reconstructed, the macadamizing thereon, being completely removed and relaid, was reconstructed within the meaning of the law. The city of Springfield is a city of the third class. Section 5858, Rev.

St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2962), is parcel of its charter. This section empowers such cities, among other things, to pass ordinances to "reconstruct any macadamizing" on any of its streets, etc., and to pay the cost of macadamizing such streets by levying special assessments on all lots or tracts of land fronting or abutting on either side of such streets. This section confers complete authority upon the city to reconstruct the macadamizing on any of its streets and to assess the adjoining property for the improvement identically as was done in this case. The ordinances and all of the proceedings in respect of the improvement proceeded upon the theory that the work was that of reconstruction of the macadamizing on Jefferson street. Now, if the macadamizing involved the building of a substratum or foundation to sustain the macadam, then, of course, the work in the present instance would be a repair rather than a reconstruction of the macadamizing. But it appearing that to macadamize is to lay and roll a stratum of small stones on any substratum or foundation, whether soft or hard, the macadamizing alone is completely reconstructed by wholly renewing the same upon a former foundation which was permitted to remain intact.

It is argued the court erred in not sustaining the injunction for the reason it appears the city engineer had omitted to file plans and specifications for the reconstruction work with the city clerk prior to the time of letting the contract to the defendant Plummer. If such fact conclusively appeared in the case, the argument would indeed be persuasive, for the statute (section 5859, p. 2967) provides that the work shall be let to the lowest and best bidder on plans and specifications filed therefor with the city clerk by the city engineer, etc. Now, it is important indeed and essential for such plans and specifications to be on file with the clerk, as directed by the statute. This to the end that bidders may have an opportunity to examine this data for the purpose of intelligent, competitive bidding, all of which is presumed to inure to the benefit of the adjacent owner whose property is to be taxed on account of the improvement. It is an essential prerequisite to the power to make a valid assessment that the plans and specifications referred to should be on file with the city clerk at the time of letting the contract. If they are not thus on file, the tax bills thereafter issued in payment of the work will be invalid. City of De Soto ex rel. v. Showman, 100 Mo. App. 323, 73 S. W. 257; Barber Asphalt, etc., Co. v. O'Brien, 128 Mo. App. 267, 107 S. W. 25. In the absence of anything appearing to the contrary, the presumption which attends the regularity of official conduct generally obtains to the extent of supplying the fact that such plans and specifications were properly on file with the city clerk. Indeed, it is provided by the statute (section 5859) that the tax bills themselves shall in any action thereon be prima facie evidence of the regularity of the proceedings for such special assessment, of the validity of the bills, of the doing of the work, and of the furnishing of materials charged therefor, and of the liability of the property to the charge stated in the bills. It is true this is not an action on the tax bills, but, instead, it is one seeking to cancel their apparent obligation and to restrain their enforcement. However this may be, the presumption referred to obtains to the effect that the plans and specifications were on file with the city clerk, and the burden rests upon the plaintiffs here to remove that presumption by introducing competent proof to the contrary. City of Excelsior Springs ex rel. v. Ettenson, 120 Mo. App. 215, 98 S. W. 701. There is no evidence whatever in the record tending to prove that the plans and specifications referred to were not on file with the city clerk at the time of letting the contract for the improvement. Mr. McCammon is the only witness who testified touching the matter. All of the evidence to be found in the record thereon is as follows: "I am one of the attorneys in the case, and I went to the city clerk and asked for copies of all the papers on file in his office in relation to this Jefferson street paving in controversy, and particularly asked for the plans and specifications, but was informed there were no plans and specifications on file in his office." Conceding all that is said by Mr. McCammon on this matter to be true, it does not appear therefrom that such plans and specifications were not on file at the time the contract for the improvement was let. In fact, it does not appear at what time the witness called upon the city clerk with respect to the matter mentioned. It may have been at the time of letting the contract, or it may have been long after the improvement was made and the tax bills issued. It is to be inferred that the inquiry was made while the attorney was making an investigation as to the propriety of instituting this suit. At any rate, it is incumbent upon the plaintiffs to show that no plans and specifications were on file with the city clerk at the time the contract was let, and there is nothing in the evidence of Mr. McCammon which tends to prove that fact. They may have been on file then and afterwards lost or mislaid. Aside from this, the witness does not purport to testify from his personal knowledge of the matter, but rather gives evidence to the effect that the city clerk informed him there were no plans and specifications on file in his office. This evidence is the merest hearsay, and although it was introduced at the trial without objection, the case being in equity, it could be properly disregarded by the court, and no doubt was. Aside from the presumption that the plans and specifications were on file with the clerk, the resolution declaring the improvement necessary refers thereto as though they were as a matter of fact then on file. It is said in the resolution the improvement shall be done in accordance with the plans and specifications and estimates of the city engineer now on file in the office of the city clerk. Of course, this resolution may not be conclusive on the matter. However that may be, it recites that they were on file at that time, which, of course, was some time prior to the date of letting the contract, and, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, it is to be presumed they were on file at the time required by the statute. The evidence introduced on this matter was wholly insufficient to overcome the presumption of law to the contrary.

There is much said pro and con in the evidence on the issue as to whether or not the work of reconstructing the macadamizing was done in accordance with the requirements of the contract. There is abundance of evidence to support a finding either way on the subject. In view of this fact, we defer to the judgment of the trial court thereon.

Finding no reversible error in the record, the judgment will be affirmed. It is so ordered.

never advised insured that proof of loss, prepared by an adjuster appointed by it, and approved by its agent possessing power to adjust losses, was insufficient, and it demanded the performance of acts not authorized by the policy, and without specifying objections to the proof, and later demanded that insured withdraw the proof of loss on pain of being called on to undergo an examination and produce books and papers. The latter demand was not made until more than 60 days after the proof of loss had been turned over to it. Appeal from Circuit Court, Montgomery County; Jas. D. Barnett, Judge.

Action by H. W. Johnson against the Lumber Insurance Company of New York. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Plaintiff's action is on an insurance policy, and sues as assignee of the Fullerton-Powell Hardwood Lumber Company, the insured. The policy covered a stock of hardwood lumber at Mt. Vernon, Ill., and ran a year from March 8, 1907. It was issued from the office of W. T. Campbell, who was defendant's general agent in St. Louis for the state of Missouri, with "full power to receive proposals for fire insurance, to fix rates of premium, to countersign, issue and renew policies of insurance, signed by the president and secretary of the above-named company [Lumber Insurance Company of New York] subject to the rules and regulations of said company and such instructions as may from time to time be given by the officers and general agency of said company." He had power likewise to issue policies on property located in eight other states, including Illinois, by obtaining prior authority from the New York agents of defendant, who were styled "Lumber Insurers' General Agency," and the course of business between Campbell and defendant permitted him to adjust losses in the territory. He had adjusted the loss caused by a small fire in the Mt. Vernon yards of the Fullerton-Powell Company three weeks before the large fire which led to this action, and his adjustment was accepted by the company, and the money paid. The policy in suit was originally for $10,000, but the payment of the first loss reduced it to $9,907.50. Three other companies carried insurance on the stock, including the Adirondack Fire Insurance Company. The loss in controversy was by a fire which occurred April 28, 1907, and was supposed to be of incendiary origin, probably set by tramp intruders in a freight car near the yards. Campbell was notified of the fire by the insured; and, as there had been several incendiary fires in Mt. Vernon, he promptly took steps to have the loss ascertained, with a view to paying it and canceling all policies held in the town by companies he represented. An experienced adjuster by the name of Lowe was directed by him to repair to Mt. Vernon and adjust the loss. Lowe went there; met the Fullerton-Powell people; made a full investigation; was furnished all the information he desired; agreed with them regarding the amount of the damage, and prepared a proof of loss which Powell, the vice president of the company, accepted and signed. As this proof was comprehensive, and in the usual form of such documents, it need not be copied. It stated the entire cash value of the hardwood lumber in the yard at the time of the fire was $24,500, whole loss $3,593.73, total insurance $19,815, amount of defendant's insurance $9,907.50, and amount due the insured under its policy $1,797.87. The balance of the loss was apportioned among the Adirondack, Eastern, and National Lumber Insurance Companies. Two of them paid in accordance with Lowe's adjustment, but defendant and the Adirondack company did not. The proof of loss was signed May 2d by Powell, who accompanied Lowe to St. Louis, at Campbell's office, and was sent by the latter to the general agency in New York May 4th. Campbell had introduced Lowe to Powell as the man who would adjust the loss for the insurance companies, saying the adjustment would no doubt be satisfactory, the loss settled, and that would be the end of the trouble. After signing the proof Powell asked Campbell if there was anything further to be done, remarking his yard had been closed down since the fire; he had laid off from his duties; his employees were idle and drawing salaries; he had cars of lumber coming in, and wanted the matter absolutely settled and the adjustment ended, so he could resume business. Campbell told him nothing more was required, that the adjustment was complete, and he would get his money, asking whether he wanted to be paid in 60 days, or discount the claim 1 per cent. for cash. Powell, according to his expression, desired to get cleaned up and go ahead with his business, and hence agreed to the discount. In transmitting the proof of loss to the New York agency of the company Campbell wrote he had had the loss adjusted by Lowe, and the reason why, and that he would immediately cancel defendant's policy on the yard. On May 14th, or 10 days later, he received a telegram from the New York office asking him to wire the

Fullerton-Powell people to instruct their Mt. Vernon office to furnish defendant's special agent Lightner certain requested information, as he had been sent there to verify the adjustment. In point of fact this man Lightner had been instructed to take an inventory of the stock of the Fullerton-Powell Company, and on arriving at Mt. Vernon had demanded of the foreman of the yard permission to take an inventory and see the books. The foreman told him the books were not kept there, but at the main headquarters of the company in South Bend, Ind., and as to an inventory it would have to be authorized by the officers of the company. This incident led to the telegram to Campbell, wherein the latter was asked to induce the Fullerton-Powell company to permit Lightner to take an inventory. Campbell communicated with Powell, and persuaded the latter to come to St. Louis and meet Lightner. In a letter of date May 17th defendant's secretary informed Campbell they wanted Lightner to inventory the stock because the adjustment stated the sound values in round numbers, instead of listing the kinds of lumber, and defendant wished Lightner to correct this, and to look over the stock to enable defendant to determine whether it would reinsure the property. When Powell, Lightner, and Campbell met in St. Louis, Powell furnished all the information he could, stating he could only estimate the value of the yard stock at the time of the fire, but could do so within a few hundred dollars. This was two weeks after the fire, and Powell declined Lightner's request to inventory the stock. Nothing more was done until May 27th, when defendant's secretary wrote Campbell, complaining the proof of loss had been prepared carelessly, Lightner refused access to the yard, every impediment thrown in the way of defendant's obtaining information, and that the value of the stock was vastly in excess of what the insured stated in the proof. The letter asked Campbell to procure from the Fullerton-Powell Company an exact statement of the quantity of lumber in the yard at the time of the fire, and the different kinds and grades—in other words, a detailed schedule—also the amount the stock had been increased or decreased in the two weeks succeeding the fire. On the same day Campbell wrote defendant's general agency in New York the other companies which carried policies on the risk had paid the insured, and asked why defendant had not sent a draft for its part, as Powell had agreed to take a discount for cash. The New York office answered the proof of loss was inaccurate, and defendant was awaiting the further information asked for in its letter of the 27th. Campbell then wrote under date of June 6th, saying his letter of the 15th had covered the ground called for in defendant's letter of May 27th; that it was only fair to look at the matter from the standpoint of the insured, and the request he was asked to prefer would be embarrassing, explaining that Lightner went to Mt. Vernon without notice being given in advance, and as the adjustment had been made, the Fullerton-Powell people were non-plussed, and, moreover, no one but the foreman of the yard was there at the time, further saying Powell had afterwards met Lightner by Campbell's arrangement in St. Louis, and given what information he could regarding the value of the yard stock at the time of the fire, and that, when Campbell made the adjustment of the first loss, he had approximated the value of the stock. On June 11th the secretary wrote Campbell defendant could see no reason why the policy holder should be embarrassed by a request for a sworn statement of the sound value of the stock, and defendant would consider the matter of further insurance after the loss was settled. Campbell testified he could not remember the substance of the conversation he had with Powell in relation to the information defendant requested; could not remember just what happened. On June 20th the New York agency telegraphed Campbell that, unless the Fullerton-Powell people would withdraw the proof of loss, defendant would proceed in accordance with lines 82, 83, and 84 of the policy; i. e., would require the insured to submit to an examination under oath, and produce books and papers to be inspected by the company; that defendant would allow until Saturday night for a withdrawal of the proof. Campbell communicated the substance of this telegram to a man named Kremer in Chicago, whose only connection with the loss, so far as was shown, was this: He was an experienced lumberman, and had settled losses with insurance companies, and so Powell asked him to be present when the adjustment was made. On June 22d Campbell wired the New York office the insured refused to withdraw the proof of loss. On June 28th the New York agency wrote the insured to its address in South Bend, Ind., that defendant demanded an examination of the officers, agents, and employees of the company under the terms of lines 82, 83, 84, and 85 of the policy; also an examination of all books of account, bills, invoices, and other vouchers, and permission to take extracts and copies thereof, designating the place of examination as South Bend, Ind., the date as July 5, 1907, and designating Alpheus H. Favour as the person who would conduct the affair. On July 6th Favour arrived at South Bend, and served a written demand on Powell of the tenor of the letter just mentioned. Powell refused to grant the examination, and his refusal at this time and previously, as defendant asserts, is relied on in defense of.

the present action; defendant insisting it was wronged because a thorough examination would have shown the stock in the yards was so large when the fire occurred that plaintiff was bound, under a term of the policy, to bear part of the loss itself. The clause of the policy supposed to have been violated reads: "(81) The insured, as often as required, shall exhibit to any person designated by this company, all that remains of any property (82) herein described, and submit to examinations under oath by any person named by this company, and subscribe the same; and (83) as often as required, shall produce for examination all books of account, bills, invoices, and other vouchers, or certified copies (84) thereof if originals be lost, at such reasonable place as may be designated by this company or its representative, and shall (85) permit extracts and copies thereof to be made." We have recited the substance of all the material facts. The case was submitted to the jury under instructions which need not be recited, a verdict was returned for plaintiff, and defendant took this appeal.

GOODE, J. (after stating the facts as above). The policy specified no particular place where, or person to whom, the proof of loss should be delivered, but merely said proof should be rendered to the company in 60 days after the fire. Hence, when the proof of loss was executed by Powell, and left with Campbell on May 2d, it was received by the company in the meaning of the policy. McCullough v. Ins. Co., 113 Mo. 606, 614, 21 S. W. 207. The right of the insured to be paid the stipulated indemnity did not accrue until 60 days after the notice, ascertainment, estimate, and satisfactory proof of the loss thereunder (i. e., the policy) had been received by the company. If an insurance company is dissatisfied with the proof of a loss furnished by the insured, he must be notified of the company's objection, and afforded an opportunity to make corrections, if enough is left of the period in which proof is to be furnished for notice to be given. Probst v. Ins. Co., 64 Mo. App. 408; De Land v. Ins. Co., 68 Mo. App. 277. The company will not be heard to say the proof was unsatisfactory if it omits to inform the insured of defects so he may cure them; and especially is it precluded when its empowered agent adjusts the loss, makes out and approves the proof, and assures the insured, in the most positive terms, the adjustment is ended, and his loss will be paid at once, as happened in the instance at bar. McCullough v. Ins. Co., 113 Mo., loc. cit. 615, 21 S. W. 207. Defendant never advised the Fullerton-Powell Company the proof prepared by Lowe and approved by Campbell was unsatisfactory. Instead of doing this defendant pursued a course outside its rights under the contract. It first demanded the privilege of inventorying the stock in the yard, an act not authorized in the policy; next asked Campbell to get an exact statement from the insured of the quantity, grades, and kinds of lumber on hand when the fire happened, a request which, if Campbell preferred it, was not a demand for an examination according to the policy (Dougherty v. Ins. Co., 87 Mo. App. 526), and, moreover, there was no evidence Campbell preferred it, for he was relied on to prove the fact, and could not remember. Finally, the company, without specifying objections to the proof of loss, demanded the insured withdraw it on pain of being called on to undergo an examination and produce books and papers. The demand for withdrawal was arbitrary, and defendant must be taken, under all the circumstances in proof, to have been given a satisfactory proof of loss on May 2d, so as to make the indemnity accrue 60 days later, on July 2d.

The facts we have recapitulated derive additional force from the further fact that Powell went to St. Louis at Campbell's request to confer with defendant's agent Lightner, and there furnished the latter all the information at hand, and, as far as appears, all Lightner wanted, regarding the value of the stock on hand when the fire occurred and the increase and diminution of it later; for Lightner, no more than Lowe, asked for an examination under oath. What defendant had been insisting on was an inventory of the stock, partly in order to verify the statement in the proof prepared by Lowe of the quantity of lumber on hand at the date of the fire, and partly as a means of determining whether or not it would write another risk on the stock, and so far the insured had rejected no demand by the company which was within the contract. On May 27th, about a month after the fire, defendant wrote Campbell to make a second and different demand, already mentioned and disposed of, to wit, for an exact statement of the quantity of lumber in the yard when the fire occurred, its kinds, grades, and quantity, and the extent of its diminution and increase in the two weeks following the fire. On June 11th the first mention of a sworn statement occurred in a letter from the secretary to Campbell, but no time or date was fixed for this, or demand made within the terms of the policy. Dougherty v. Ins. Co., supra. Defendant then took a third position, and notified Campbell defendant would demand a personal examination under oath and production of the books and papers, in accordance with one of the provisions of the policy, unless the insured would withdraw the proof of loss, and that until the following Saturday would be allowed for withdrawal. The insured having refused to withdraw the proof of loss, on May 28th, two months after the fire, defendant notified him, for the first time, the company asked for an examination under oath, and the production of the books and papers. This notice was given by a letter written from New York, but the actual demand was not made until July 5th, or more than 60 days after the proof of loss had been turned over to defendant, and when its liability had accrued. We think it is unnecessary to determine whether the aforesaid stipulation of the policy should be held, when construed in connection with other clauses, to call for an examination prior to the adjustment of the loss, or whether Campbell's unequivocal promise to pay at once and take a discount bound the company. All the authorities cited in support of the proposition that refusal of the insured to submit to an examination works a forfeiture of his rights under the policy are distinguishable from the present case in one or more important particulars: Either the refusal held to defeat recovery was for an examination demanded first, before the proof of loss was made and any subsequent delay occurred from the misconduct of the insured, as in Vleisch v. Ins. Co., 58 Mo. App. 596, or the proof was prepared by the insured and sent to the company, and was not in the nature of an adjustment of the loss by an accredited agent of the company. In the present instance the proof was prepared for Powell's signature by an adjuster appointed by defendant, after an investigation of all the facts to his own satisfaction, was approved by Campbell, an agent of quite general powers, including power to adjust losses, and was then executed by Powell. We do not say these circumstances would necessarily preclude a company from demanding an examination if the company believed mistake or fraud had occurred in the adjustment, but neither is pleaded. But a demand to examine under oath must be reasonable as to place and time. 4 Cooley, Ins. Briefs, 3395; Vleisch v. Ins. Co., supra; Murphy v. Ins. Co., 61 Mo. App. 323; Am. Cent. Ins. Co. v. Simpson, 43 Ill. App. 98. Defendant's demand was entirely unreasonable, in view of the facts that Lowe might have availed himself of an examination while adjusting the loss, and Lightner might have demanded one when Powell, at his own expense, met him in St. Louis; that formal demand was not made until, under the terms of the policy, it was the duty of defendant to pay the loss if there had happened no exonerating breach of the contract by the insured, and none is alleged. To allow the company to stave off payment by taking time for investigation after liability had accrued would abrogate the policy holder's right to be paid 60 days after satisfactory proof of loss was received by the company. Ætna Ins. Co. v. Schacklett (Tex.) 57 S. W. 583. As this contract appears to be an Illinois one, we have not applied our statute, which requires examinations to be conducted where the loss occurred. Rev. St. 1899, § 7976 (Ann. St. 1903, p. 3792).

The judgment is affirmed. All concur.

It is the duty of a railroad to exercise high care for the safety of a passenger alighting from a train; and to back the car while the passenger is alighting, without waiting a reasonable time, is actionable negligence, if injury results.

Where the petition alleged that, while plaintiff, a passenger, was alighting from defendant railroad's car, it was negligently jerked and backed, thereby causing plaintiff to "fall against the depot platform," etc., an instruction authorizing a recovery if because of defendant's negligent act plaintiff was injured was not erroneous in failing to require a finding that plaintiff fell against the platform; it being immaterial whether she fell against the platform or the earth.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Pemiscot County; Henry C. Riley, Judge.

Action by Susie Van Cleve against the St. Louis, Memphis & Southeastern Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

For former appeal, see 124 Mo. App. 224, 101 S. W. 632.

W. F. Evans and Moses Whybark, for appellant. Duncan & Bragg, Ward & Collins, and J. S. Gossom, for respondent.

NORTONI, J. This is a suit for damages alleged to have accrued to the plaintiff for personal injuries received by her while a passenger alighting from defendant's train. Plaintiff recovered, and defendant prosecutes the appeal.

The evidence tends to prove the plaintiff was a passenger on the defendant's mixed train. She boarded the train at Yarbrow, Ark., destined to Caruthersville, Mo., and paid the usual fare to the conductor. She was injured while in the act of alighting from the defendant's passenger coach at the depot at Caruthersville, because of a sudden jerk of the train, which precipitated her from the steps of the coach against the depot platform. It appears the train had stopped at the defendant's depot at Caruthersville, and the defendant's conductor and brakeman in charge thereof had invited the passengers to alight therefrom. The date of the injury was November 19th. Rain had fallen during the day, and by reason thereof mud had accumulated on the steps of the passenger coach from the shoes of those passing in and out. This had slightly frozen and was slippery. While plaintiff was in the act of alighting from the passenger coach, with her grip in her hand, and while she was upon the steps thereof, the train was suddenly jerked by a movement of the locomotive, which caused her to slip on the mud and ice accumulated on the car steps and fall, striking her breast against the platform of the depot, her limbs passing down between the depot platform and the car steps. She was immediately taken up by bystanders and carried into the depot waiting room, where she had a hemorrhage from the lungs. Afterwards she was carried to the hotel at Caruthersville, where she was confined to her bed for about eight days, and suffered frequent recurring hemorrhages. It appears that four or five weeks elapsed before she was able to perform any kind of service, and then she could only do a slight amount of housework each day. From the testimony of the physician who attended her it appears the fifth rib on the left side was broken near the breastbone, and probably inflicted an injury to the left lung. Numerous witnesses gave testimony to the effect that prior to her injury plaintiff was a strong, robust woman, in good health, of about 158 pounds in weight, and that she had never had a hemorrhage of the lungs prior to that time. It appears she had continued to suffer ever since the injury from hemorrhages of the lungs, and had depreciated from 158 to 130 pounds in weight; that tuberculosis of the lungs set in immediately after the injury, and has continued ever since. If the testimony of her witnesses, together with the inferences arising therefrom, are to be taken as true, plaintiff has been a great and continued sufferer since she was injured, and is now far advanced in the throes of consumption, resulting from a traumatic injury to the lung received from her fall against the depot platform. There was evidence on the part of the defendant that the train was not jerked or started at all while plaintiff was in the act of alighting therefrom, and that she received her fall from no other cause than slipping on the steps of the coach, or an accident. There was also expert testimony on the part of defendant to the effect that the plaintiff was not afflicted with consumption, and one witness said she had stated to him that she had had hemorrhages even prior to the time of her injury. However this may be, all of the testimony on either side tends to show the fall and resultant injury while in the act of passing from the defendant's coach to the defendant's depot platform, and that she was seized immediately with a hemorrhage of the lungs while in the waiting room of the depot. And, further, that she has continued to suffer from like hemorrhages ever since.

The first instruction given by the court on the part of the plaintiff is as follows: "The court instructs the jury that, if you find and believe from the evidence in this case that when the train upon which the plaintiff was a passenger arrived at the depot of defendant at Caruthersville, Mo., that it came to a stop or was at rest at said depot, and the employes of the defendant requested the passengers thereon to alight therefrom, and thereupon within a reasonable length of time the plaintiff attempted, without negligence on her part in so doing, as defined in the instructions, to alight from said train, and that while attempting to alight from said train, said train and cars were suddenly jerked by the negligent act or careless conduct of those in charge of said train, without having given a reasonable length of time for plaintiff to alight from said car of said train, and that in consequence of such negligence of defendant's employes in suddenly jerking or moving said train, the plaintiff, without negligence on her part, directly contributing thereto, was injured, you will find for the plaintiff in a sum not exceeding $15,000." The principal argument for a reversal is that this instruction broadens the issues in the case, and permits a recovery on the part of the plaintiff on a matter not alleged in the petition. The petition alleges, in substance, that while the plaintiff was on the steps of the car, and in the act of alighting from the train, the car was negligently jerked and backed, thereby causing her to slip on the accumulated mud and ice on the steps thereof, and "fall to and against the said depot platform," etc. The particular point made against the instruction is that it does not require the jury to find that she fell against the depot platform. There is certainly no merit in this argument. The gravamen of the case is the negligent act of the defendant in jerking and backing the car while plaintiff was in the act of alighting therefrom. It was the duty of the defendant to exercise high care for the plaintiff's safety until she was safely on the depot platform. To jerk or back the car while she was in the act of alighting therefrom, and without waiting a reasonable time for her to alight, was a breach of its obligation in that behalf, and actionable negligence if an injury resulted. Canaday v. United Railways Co. (Mo. App.) 114 S. W. 88. And such is the negligence relied upon in the petition. This negligent act of the defendant is the element which affixes liability against it. It is not what she did or did not fall against. It is immaterial whether she was precipitated against the depot platform or the earth. If plaintiff was precipitated to either by the negligent act of jerking or moving the car while she was in the act of alighting, the defendant is liable to respond for her injury. All of the witnesses on either side of the case who were present at the time testified to the same effect—that is, that the plaintiff fell against the platform—and the jury could not have found otherwise. Aside from this, it is sufficient to say on this appeal that the identical instruction was approved by this court in this case, between the same parties, on a former appeal. See Van Cleve v. St. L. M. & S. E. Ry. Co., 124 Mo. App. 224, 233, 101 S. W. 632. Having been approved, the matter is now res adjudicata, and it remains the law of this case thereafter. Feurt, Ex'r, v. Ambrose, 34 Mo. App. 360; Hombs v. Corbin, 34 Mo. App. 393; Shoninger v. Day, 61 Mo. App. 366.

In rebuttal to certain expert testimony introduced by the defendant the plaintiff placed upon the stand two physicians, and examined them quite generally touching the disease of consumption. It is now argued that the court erred in permitting plaintiff to examine these physicians on the disease of tuberculosis in rebuttal. Without more it is sufficient to say of this assignment that no objection or exception whatever was made thereto by the learned counsel for defendant in the trial of the cause. And, further, it appears he fully and freely participated therein. The assignment will be overruled.

The jury awarded plaintiff a verdict of $5,000. Upon the hearing of the motion for a new trial plaintiff voluntarily entered a remittitur to the extent of $500, and the court entered judgment for plaintiff for $4,500. We are asked to set aside this verdict on the ground that it is excessive. Besides the facts heretofore recited touching the injury, and that it resulted in entailing or developing consumption from a latent germ in the system, the evidence tended to show the plaintiff was a woman 36 years of age at the time of her injury, enjoying good health and strength. It appears she has paid between $200 and $300 for medicines and medical aid and attention. She is now worn and emaciated, has suffered, and continues to suffer, great pain, and is now in a well-advanced stage of tuberculosis. Her injuries are permanent, of course. It is immaterial what the testimony on the part of the defendant may show. The question was for the jury. If the jury believed the plaintiff and her witnesses, as it evidently did, the verdict is not at all excessive. There is certainly nothing in the record to indicate that the verdict was the result of either passion, prejudice, or misconduct. In view of these facts, the verdict is certainly not excessive.

The judgment will therefore be affirmed. It is so ordered.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Buchanan County; Henry M. Ramey, Judge.

Action by the Chicago Crayon Company against John J. McNamara and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Spencer & Landis, for appellant. Mytton & Parkinson, for respondents.

BROADDUS, P. J. This is a suit by plaintiff against J. W. Chapman, as principal, and defendants J. J. McNamara, A. J. Gordon, and D. C. Sampson, as his sureties, on his own bond, to recover the sum of $461.84, alleged to be due plaintiff under the terms of the bond and the contract thereto attached, for money furnished Chapman while he was acting as plaintiff's agent under said contract, and for materials in his hands furnished him thereunder for which he failed to account to the plaintiff. Chapman not being a resident of the state and not being served with notice of the suit, the cause was tried against the sureties alone.

Under the contract mentioned, Chapman was to act as district manager for plaintiff in soliciting orders for frames and enlargement of portraits on his own account and through subagents. He was to receive as commission 98 cents per point, a point being $1.98, out of which he was to pay his subagents 50 cents per point and was to defray the expenses of himself and subagents. This controversy arises over a proper construction of the following clauses of the contract, viz.: "Second party [Chapman] shall assume all responsibility for all money advanced to or collected by crew managers, solicitors, and deliverymen under his management. Second party shall not be allowed to hold or appropriate any money collected for goods by himself or deliverymen. When funds are inadequate to carry on the business, first party is expected to furnish the same from Chicago in such sums as first party deems advisable. Either party may, at any time they deem the business unsafe or unprofitable, terminate this contract by giving notice to that effect, and second party agrees, in the event of such termination, to turn over to first party the entire business and management of the same, including all subagents, orders, samples, printed matter, and everything pertaining to the business, and further agrees to permit first party to conduct and close such business and make final settlement to the best of its ability."

The conditions of the bond of the defendant sureties are as follows: "The conditions of this obligation are such that, whereas, John Ward Chapman (principal) has been appointed and has agreed to act as district manager for said Chicago Crayon Company in the state of Illinois, or such territory as may be mutually agreed upon, and is to conduct the business for and on behalf of said Chicago Crayon Company in accordance with the terms and provisions of the above contract between the said principal and said Chicago Crayon Company: Now, therefore, if the said John Ward Chapman (principal) shall faithfully perform the conditions imposed upon him by the above contract, then this obligation shall be void; otherwise, to remain in full force and effect."

The business not having proved satisfactory, it was terminated by the parties. During the course of Chapman's employment, his funds not being adequate for the purpose of carrying on the business, plaintiff made him advancements for that purpose as provided by the contract. Chapman, on the termination of his agency, turned back to plaintiff all the material, orders, etc., in his possession; but it was found that he had failed to pay back to plaintiff $461.84 money advanced to him. The court, sitting as a jury, found and rendered judgment for defendant upon the theory that Chapman was not bound under his contract to repay said advancements, and therefore there was no breach of his contract and no liability incurred by the defendant sureties. The plaintiff appealed.

By the terms of the contract Chapman was to pay his own expenses and that of his agents in the business. No such obligation rested upon the plaintiff. And the provision that plaintiff might make advancements when he had not sufficient funds of his own to carry on the business of his agency is to be interpreted merely as that plaintiff might make a loan for that purpose, which by every rule of reasonable construction he was to pay back. Although the contract does not specifically provide that he was to return to plaintiff these advancements, it is clearly implied that he was to do so, and such was evidently the intention of the parties. If Chapman, the principal, was bound to return these advancements under his contract, defendants, as sureties, bound themselves to plaintiff that the contract in that respect should be performed.

Notwithstanding the contract of a surety must be strictly construed, and that he is only bound to the extent that he has agreed to be bound, yet his contract must be construed, like any other contract, according to the intention of the parties. It is said that "a surety has the right to stand upon the strict terms of his obligation, and is not liable unless the words make him so; but, beyond this, his undertaking must be construed, like any other contract, according to the intention of the parties." Springfield Lighting Co. v. Hobart, 98 Mo. App. 227, 68 S. W. 942; Fairbank Co. v. Am. Bond & Trust Co., 97 Mo. App. 205, 70 S. W. 1096; North St. Louis B. & L. Ass'n v. Obert, 169 Mo. 507, 69 S. W. 1044. It is held that, if the contract is susceptible of two constructions, the one most favorable to the secured party should be adopted, if consistent with the object for which the bond is given. Hurley v. Fidelity & Dep. Co., 95 Mo. App. 88, 68 S. W. 958. We believe the construction we have given the contract is fairly consistent with the object for which the bond was given.

As there is no dispute as to the evidence, the cause is reversed and remanded, with directions to the trial court to enter up judgment for plaintiff for the amount of its demand, with interest. All concur.

GLEASON v. CITY OF KIRKSVILLE.

(Kansas City Court of Appeals. Missouri. March 29, 1909. Rehearing Denied April 19, 1909.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 827*)—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—LIABILITY.

To hold a city liable for grading a street by a fill with insufficient culverts, and thereby obstructing the flow of surface water, it is necessary to show that the work was directed by an ordinance of the city.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 827.*]

2. NUISANCE (§ 10*)—MAINTENANCE OF NUISANCE—LIABILITY.

One not originally responsible for the erection of a nuisance is not liable for its continuance, in the absence of notice or request to abate it.

Error to Circuit Court, Adair County; Nat M. Shelton, Judge.

Action by William H. Gleason against the City of Kirksville. There was a judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

C. Knox and A. Doneghy, for plaintiff in error. Weatherby & Frank, for defendant in error.

ELLISON, J. This action is for damages alleged to have been caused by the defendant, a city of the third class, constructing a grade by a fill and insufficient culverts in one of its streets, whereby the surface water was collected and became foul and offensive, and whereby, at times of rain, it would be discharged over plaintiff's abutting property. At the close of the trial the jury was directed to find for the defendant.

There was no ordinance of the city council directing the construction of the work in the street, and plaintiff claims that it was on that ground the trial court directed a verdict. The petition alleges the work was negligently done, and plaintiff by his brief seeks to have the judgment against him reversed, and the cause remanded for trial, on the ground that in doing the work a nuisance was created and maintained by the city. But there was no ordinance alleged or shown for the work, and therefore under the ruling in this state the city is not liable for erecting or constructing the work. Stewart v. City of Clinton, 79 Mo. 603; Koeppen v.

City of Sedalia, 89 Mo. App. 648, and authorities cited in each.

But plaintiff claims that the work became a nuisance, and that it was so permitted to remain and continue, and by so doing the city became liable for maintaining a nuisance. The difficulty with plaintiff's case is that, as decided by the Supreme Court, for the continuance of a nuisance by one not originally responsible for its erection, there must be allegation and proof of a notice or request to abate it, and neither appeared in this case. Rychlicki v. St. Louis, 115 Mo. 662, 22 S. W. 908; Martin v. City of St. Joseph (decided this term) 117 S. W. 94; Martinowsky v. Hannibal, 35 Mo. App. 70.

So we have a case where the city was not shown to be liable for the erection of the work, and if we concede, under the line of argument advanced by plaintiff, that it is nevertheless liable for permitting a nuisance already erected to continue, then there is lacking the request to abate it. Authorities cited by plaintiff do not meet the case as presented.

The judgment is affirmed. All concur.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jackson County; James H. Slover, Judge.

Action by Clyde B. De Lapp against John H. Van Closter. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Meservey & German and Cameron L. Orr, for appellant. Ward, Hadley & Neel, for respondent.

BROADDUS, P. J. This is an action based upon the defendant's liability as an innkeeper.

The plaintiff was a bartender in Kansas City, but was unemployed at the time of the occurrence in question. He was a married man and was living in said city. About June 10, 1907, his wife went on a visit to Indiana, and during a part of the time of her absence plaintiff stayed at night at what was known as the Centropolis Hotel, and took most of his meals there. The defendant was the lessee and proprietor of said hotel, which was conducted upon both the American and European plans; that is to say, a person stopping at the hotel could do so at so much per day for a room and meals, which is what is called the American plan, but he could also be accommodated, if he chose, by paying for a room and buying his meals at the hotel or elsewhere, to suit his taste and convenience, which is what is called the European plan. The plaintiff had to his credit in a bank in the city about $1,500, from which he had withdrawn $580 about the 8th or 10th of June, and carried the same upon his person until the 17th of June. It appears that he had withdrawn this money for use on a visit he contemplated making his wife in Indiana. About 1 o'clock on the night of the 16th day of June he registered at defendant's hotel, paid 50 cents, and was assigned to a room, which he took possession of and occupied until about 8 o'clock in the morning of June 17th, when his brother came to the hotel and went up to his room and awakened him. In about one hour they came down, when the plaintiff went to a desk in defendant's hotel and asked a clerk of the defendant to hand him an envelope, and, when same had been furnished, he took $540 in bills from his pocket, and placed in it and handed it to the clerk for safe-keeping. The clerk in return gave him a slip of paper on which were written the figures and words, "6-17-07, De Lapp," and placed the package in the drawer of the desk which had a lock. Plaintiff and his brother at once left the hotel, and went out and took breakfast at the Saratoga Restaurant. In the afternoon plaintiff returned to the hotel and slept in his room for a few hours, but he did not stay at the hotel on the night of that day. Plaintiff stated: "I thought I might use the room the next night, but I did not stay at the hotel the next night. I surrendered the key to that room at supper time—at 6 o'clock." About three weeks afterwards, when he got ready to use the money on his contemplated trip to Indiana, he applied for his money, and it was not to be found. At the time plaintiff made the deposit of the money, a clerk of the defendant by the name of Williams was on duty, and was the person who received the package and gave in return the slip of writing mentioned. It was shown that plaintiff asked Williams to put the package in the safe kept for the security of money and other valuables, but that Williams replied that he did not have the key, that defendant had it, and that plaintiff met defendant in the hotel and called his attention to the matter, and he said that he would see to it himself. It was the custom of the hotel at about 7:30 o'clock p. m. each day to have the desk examined, and packages found in it taken out and placed in the safe. Defendant had no personal recollection of the matter, and Williams but little. He barely remembered the occurrence, and was unable to make any definite statement. The inference to be derived from the circumstances is that the money was stolen some time before the hour of 7:30 in the evening, the usual time for an examination of the desk for valuables to be placed in the safe. In fact, defendant testified that it must have disappeared between the two periods; otherwise it would have been discovered when the desk was searched for valuables, and have been placed in the safe. The judgment was for the plaintiff, and the defendant appealed. The attorneys of the respective parties have argued the cause with much ability and at great length, but, as we view it, there seem to be but two main questions for our determination. It must be conceded as a preliminary that the law is that an innkeeper is liable for the loss of valuables left in his charge by his guest for safe-keeping while the relation of innkeeper and guest continues.

The first question is: Was the plaintiff at the time he made the deposit of his money a guest of defendant's hotel. The St. Louis Court of Appeals defines a guest as follows: "A guest is a transient person, who resorts to, and is received at, an inn for the purpose of obtaining the accommodations which it purports to afford." Overstreet v. Moser, 88 Mo. App. 72. In some instances a guest is defined as a traveler or wayfarer. "Any one away from home receiving the accommodations of an inn as a traveler is a guest, and entitled to hold the innkeeper responsible as such. A guest is a traveler or transient comer who puts up at an inn for a lawful purpose to receive its customary lodging and entertainment." Words and Phrases. "A guest is a traveler or wayfarer who puts up at an inn. It was said that it was not now deemed essential that a person should have come from a distance to constitute a guest. A leading case holds that distance is not material, and that a townsman or neighbor may be a traveler, and therefore a guest, as well as he who came from a distance or from a foreign country." Curtis v. Murphy, 63 Wis. 4, 22 N. W. 825, 53 Am. Rep. 242. From the foregoing we believe the rule as stated in Overstreet v. Moser, supra, is a proper definition of what it takes to constitute a guest, and that the testimony shows that the plaintiff was a guest of the defendant's hotel when he registered and paid for his lodging, and we think it immaterial whether he became such upon the American or European custom. It is reasonably clear that when the plaintiff surrendered the key to his room at 6 o'clock p. m. of June 17th, and left without returning, he ceased to be a guest of the inn. The fact that he had paid for his room for 24 hours, which would carry the time up to midnight, is of no significance in determining the question of whether he was a guest of the inn if before the expiration of that time he had left the inn without any intention of returning to it. The fact that he did not intend to return, and did not in fact do so, it seems to us is conclusive on that question.

Therefore instruction numbered III, given for plaintiff, to the effect that he continued to be a guest of the inn until the time expires for which he had paid for the accommodation of the hotel, was erroneous and misleading, as the jury might well have concluded from the language used that he was to be considered a guest for so long as he had paid for the use of the room. We cannot conceive how one could be considered the guest of an inn without being an inmate at the time or temporarily absent intending to return. The vice of the instruction is glaring when we come to consider that the evidence shows that the money must have disappeared between the time of its deposit with the clerk and 7:30 o'clock p. m. of the day. As plaintiff discontinued his relation as guest at 6 o'clock p. m., and if the money was taken after that time and between 7:30 o'clock and that time, defendant would not be liable for the loss, as the plaintiff would not be his guest. And, as it would be a matter of conjecture as to what time the money did disappear, whether before or after 6 o'clock p. m., the plaintiff was not entitled to go to the jury notwithstanding the instruction had been properly framed. We are persuaded that the plaintiff as a matter of fact did not make the deposit for its security while he might be defendant's guest, but that he deposited it on call or until he should be ready to make his visit to Indiana. The evidence seems to be conclusive on this phase of the case. He had been carrying the money around on his person for about a week previous, had it with him when he went to bed on the night of June 16th, deposited it on the following morning, and made no inquiry or call for it until three weeks afterward. A man under such circumstances would not likely have made the deposit as a matter of security while a guest of the inn.

Viewing the case in all its aspects, we feel compelled to hold that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. All concur.

STATE ex rel. VANDERBURG v. BIDWELL,
Justice of the Peace, et al.

(Kansas City Court of Appeals. Missouri.
March 29, 1909. Rehearing Denied April
19, 1909.)

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 124*)—JUDGMENT—CONFORMITY TO VERDICT.

Where a verdict in a justice's court was simply for plaintiff without assessing any amount of recovery, it must be assumed that the jury did not intend to find for plaintiff in any sum, and the entry by the justice of a judgment on the verdict for the sum demanded in plaintiff's statement was void.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. § 389; Dec. Dig. § 124.*]

2. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 124*)—VERDICT FOR PLAINTIFF NOT DESIGNATING AMOUNT—JUDGMENT FOR DEFENDANT.

Under Rev. St. 1889, § 4008 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2189), providing that a judgment for defendant shall be rendered in a justice's court if no sum shall be found by the verdict or by the decision of the justice in favor of plaintiff, a judgment for defendant must be entered on a verdict for plaintiff not assessing any amount of recovery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. § 389; Dec. Dig. § 124.*]

3. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 124*)—JUDGMENT—ENTRY.

The duty of a justice of the peace to enter judgment on a verdict is purely ministerial, and his failure to enter the right judgment does not deprive the verdict of any of its force.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. § 389; Dec. Dig. § 124.*]

4. MANDAMUS (§ 51*)—GROUNDS OF RELIEF—JUSTICE OF THE PEACE—ENTRY OF JUDGMENT.

Mandamus is a proper remedy to compel a justice of the peace to perform the ministerial duty of entering formal judgment on a verdict.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Carroll County; John P. Butler, Judge.

Petition by the State, on relation of Alfred Vanderburg, against M. C. Bidwell, Justice of the Peace, and another. Judgment for defendants, and relator appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Guy Whiteman and Busby & Busby, for appellant. W. A. Franken, for respondents.

JOHNSON, J. Relator filed his petition in the circuit court of Carroll county for a writ of mandamus to compel defendant Bidwell, a justice of the peace of Egypt township, Carroll county, to accept and treat a verdict returned by a jury in a cause tried before said defendant, wherein relator was defendant, as a verdict in favor of relator, and to enter judgment on his docket for relator, and to compel the defendant Lovell, the constable of said township, to receive and levy an execution when issued on such judgment. The facts disclosed by the alternative writ issued by the court and defendants' return thereto are as follows: On September 2, 1907, William M. Fulcher brought suit against Alfred Vandenburg, the relator, before defendant Bidwell to recover the purchase price of a hog, which he alleged in his statement he sold to Vandenburg for $17. No counterclaim or set-off was interposed by defendant at the trial, which occurred September 26, 1907. The trial was to a jury, and the following verdict was returned: "We, the jury, find our verdict for plaintiff. J. W. Bowles, Foreman." This verdict was received by the justice, entered on his docket as the verdict of the jury, and the jury was discharged. The justice then, over the objection of relator, entered judgment on his docket for Fulcher in the sum of $17, and on October 21, 1907, issued an execution on said judgment and delivered it to the defendant constable, who was proceeding to execute the writ when the present suit was begun. It is alleged in the return: "The said jury aimed and intended thereby to find for the plaintiff therein and against the defendant in the sum of $17, that said verdict was publicly delivered to and received by the defendant Bidwell, that defendant Bidwell understood and interpreted said verdict as finding for the plaintiff therein and against the defendant therein in the sum of $17, and thereupon discharged the jury finally. Defendants further state: That the said jury did not refuse to find any sum in favor of the plaintiff therein, but, on the contrary, they duly agreed upon a verdict in favor of the plaintiff therein and against the defendant therein, in the sum of $17; that at the time of delivering said verdict to the justice, said jury, and each and every member thereof, understood and regarded their verdict, in the form aforesaid, as finding for the plaintiff therein and against the defendant therein in the sum of $17, and they continued to so regard it up to and after their discharge; that the failure of said jury to insert the said amount in their said written verdict was due solely to a lack of information on their part that such was necessary and proper." A motion for judgment on the pleadings was filed by relator and overruled by the court, after which the following judgment was entered: "Come the respective parties by their attorneys and this cause coming on for hearing before the court upon plaintiff's alternative writ of mandamus issued by the judge of this court in vacation, and upon defendants' return to said alternative writ, and upon the evidence adduced both by relator and by the defendants, the court doth order, adjudge, and decree that the peremptory writ of mandamus prayed for by relator against the defendants, M. C. Bidwell and J. T. Lovell, be denied, except as hereinafter directed. It is ordered by the court that said J. T. Lovell, constable, is hereby commanded to return the execution issued by M. C. Bidwell, in case of William Fulcher, plaintiff, against Alfred Vandenburg, for the sum of $17 and costs on a purported judgment of M. C. Bidwell, justice of the peace, in favor of William Fulcher, and against Alfred Vandenburg, on the 26th day of September, 1907, without further executing the same; and the said M. C. Bidwell is here ordered and commanded to refrain from issuing any further execution on said purported judgment, and upon receipt of this mandate is commanded to set aside his docket entries of judgment in said cause and disregard the alleged verdict of the jury upon which said judgment was founded and then redocket the said cause for trial and set the cause for trial and give 10 days' notice in writing to each party of the day when said cause will be tried before him and then proceed to the trial of said cause. It is adjudged that the costs of this proceeding in mandamus shall go in the original case." After his motions for a new trial and in arrest of judgment were filed and overruled by the court, the relator brought the case here by appeal.

We shall treat as admitted the fact alleged in the return that the real purpose of the jury was to find for plaintiff in the sum of $17; but, since the verdict on its face expresses no such purpose, we do not think any effect should be given this fact in the present state of the record. Defendants argue that the rules giving to a court of record the power to amend a verdict to express the manifest intention of the jury (Acton v. Dooley, 16 Mo. App. 441; Hary v. Speer, 120 Mo. App. 558, 97 S. W. 228) may likewise be exercised by inferior statutory courts in the furtherance of justice. It sufficiently answers this argument to say that defendant justice did not attempt to amend the verdict, and therefore the question of his right to amend is not before us. He received and recorded the verdict as the jury returned it and then, guided by his own interpretation of it, entered judgment for the plaintiff in the sum demanded in the statement. In such state of the record, the verdict should be accepted as conclusively expressing the real purpose of the jury, and, since it does not assess the amount of the recovery, we must assume that the jury did not intend to find for the plaintiff in any sum. These considerations impel us to hold that the attempted assessment of an amount in the judgment entered by the justice was a clear invasion of the province of the jury, and as such was wholly nugatory.

The learned trial judge evidently so held, but we think he fell into error in treating the verdict as void, as he must have done in ordering the justice to redocket and retry the case as though no verdict had been returned. We concede for argument that in an action on contract for the recovery of money only, tried in the circuit court, a verdict for the plaintiff which fails to state the amount of the recovery is insufficient to support a judgment and should be treated as a nullity. In such cases the amount of the recovery is one of the vital issues, and the verdict must respond to all of the issues submitted to the jury. Ryors v. Prior, 31 Mo. App. 555. But a different rule has been prescribed by statute for cases tried in justice courts. Section 4008, Rev. St. 1899 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2189), provides: "Judgment for the defendant, with costs, shall be rendered whenever a trial or hearing has been had and no sum shall be found by the verdict of the jury or by the decision of the justice in favor of the plaintiff." This statute treats a verdict, deficient in the respect under consideration, as no verdict for the plaintiff, doubtless because of its failure to pronounce on one of the essential issues of the case, but in effect as a finding and verdict for the defendant. We perceive no reason in law for refusing to give effect to this statute. It construed the verdict in the present case, and, observing its requirement, the defendant justice should have entered judgment for the relator. The failure of the justice to enter the right judgment on his docket did not deprive the verdict of any of its force. The duty of a justice to enter judgment on a verdict is purely ministerial. From the moment the verdict is entered on the justice docket, it possesses all the force and effect of a formal judgment. Morse v. Brownfield, 27 Mo. 224; Hazeltine v. Reusch, 51 Mo. 50; Glett v. McGannon, 74 Mo. App. 209. Under this rule the verdict, when entered by defendant justice, ipso facto became a judgment in favor of the relator by virtue of the provisions of section 4008. A right to appeal from that judgment inured to the plaintiff Fulcher. As that right was not exercised in the time prescribed by law, it follows that the judgment now is final. Relator is entitled to the performance by the defendant justice of the ministerial duty of entering formal judgment in his favor and to the other relief he seeks in his petition. Mandamus is a proper remedy in a case of this character. State ex rel. v. Clayton, 34 Mo. App. 563; State ex rel. v. Cline, 85 Mo. App. 628; State ex rel. v. Adams, 76 Mo. 606; State ex rel. v. Horner, 86 Mo. 71.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to award a peremptory writ in conformity with the views expressed. All concur.

BIGGINS v. GULF, C. & S. F. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Texas. April 21, 1906.)

1. ASSAULT AND BATTERY (§ 3*)—ACTION—RECOVERY FOR NEGLIGENCE.

The intent to injure is the gist of an assault and battery, so that under a complaint therefor there can be no recovery for injury from an accidental, though negligent, act.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assault and Battery, Cent. Dig. § 2; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 712*)—RECORD—AFFIRMATIVE SHOWING OF ERROR.

The record does not, as it must, affirmatively show error in exclusion of evidence to affect credibility of defendant's witness C., for whose shooting of plaintiff action for assault and battery was brought, and which shooting witness testified was accidental, where, for all the record shows, the indictment charging witness with assault with intent to murder plaintiff, which was sought to be introduced, might have been founded on a different transaction, and it is not made to appear, or offered to be shown, that witness, when testifying, knew that the indictment had been found for such shooting, if such was the fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 712.*]

Error from Court of Civil Appeals of Sixth Supreme Judicial District.

Action by O'Finley Biggins, by next friend, against the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railway Company. Judgment for defendant was affirmed by the Court of Civil Appeals (110 S. W. 561), and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Plummer & Haynes, for plaintiff in error. H. P. Brown, P. Lomax, Terry, Cavin, & Mills and Chas. K. Lee, for defendant in error.

WILLIAMS, J. The plaintiff in error sued for damages for an assault and battery alleged to have been committed upon him by a watchman in the employment of the defendant in error by shooting him with a pistol. There was evidence at the trial tending to show each of the following states of fact: (1) That the watchman fired the shot with the intent to hit plaintiff; (2) that he discharged the pistol purposely, not with the intent to hit plaintiff, whom he was pursuing, but with the intent to frighten and cause him to stop; (3) that the pistol was accidentally discharged as the watchman was climbing up a bank in pursuit of the plaintiff.

The charge of the trial court authorized a recovery by plaintiff if the jury, in addition to other facts, which need not be stated, should find either of the two facts first stated to have existed. It further instructed, in substance, that if the discharge of the pistol was unintentional and purely accidental the plaintiff could not recover. The plaintiff, by a requested charge, sought to have the jury instructed, in substance, that if the watchman shot plaintiff either intentionally or in a negligent manner in the discharge of his duties they should find for plaintiff. This requested instruction stated a correct proposition of law; but, as was held by the Court of Civil Appeals, the ground of recovery for negligence was not within the scope of plaintiff's petition. It alleged nothing but an assault and battery to characterize the shooting as unlawful and wrongful. An intent to injure is the gist of an assault and battery, and the suit was, therefore, for an intentional and willful act not otherwise alleged to have been wrongful. If the only fact alleged to make it unlawful did not exist, there was no basis in the pleading for finding it to have been wrongful because of other facts not stated. There are defenses which could be made to a charge of a negligent inflicting of such an injury, such as contributory negligence, which would be no answer to an action for an intentional act. The defendant was not notified by the petition to come prepared to meet a case different from that alleged. 4 Thompson on Neg. § 7465. The court, therefore, did not err in charging as it did and in refusing the requested instruction.

Another assignment, upon which the writ of error was granted, complains of the exclusion of evidence offered by the plaintiff. Churchwell, the watchman whose act is in question, was a witness for defendant, and testified, among other things, that the shooting was accidental. To affect his credibility the plaintiff made the offer as shown by the following extract from the stenographer's transcript, which is all that appears from the record upon the point: "Plaintiff introduced in evidence the bill of indictment found by the grand jury of Johnson county against Joe Churchwell, charging him with an assault with intent to murder O'Finley Biggins on the 7th day of January, 1906; said indictment being filed in the district court of Johnson county, Tex., on the 27th day of January, 1906. This was offered as affecting the credibility of the witness Churchwell, and to show motive as to why he had sworn as he did. Court: I don't think that is admissible, and I exclude it from the record. I will state in the bill of exceptions that the case is still pending in court. Counsel for plaintiff excepted to the ruling of the court." It will be seen that neither the paper called an indictment nor the objections urged to it are set out. Why it was excluded does not appear. For all the record shows, the indictment may have been founded on a different transaction from that here in question, and there may have been other objections to its admission which we cannot see from what is presented. It was not made to appear, nor did the plaintiff offer to show, that the witness, when his deposition was taken, knew that an indictment had been found against him for the shooting under investigation, if such was the fact. Error in such a ruling must be made to appear affirmatively; the presumption being that the court ruled correctly. Hence we cannot sustain this assignment. Affirmed.

FINE v. ROBISON, Land Com'r.

(Supreme Court of Texas. April 14, 1909.)
PUBLIC LANDS (§ 173*) — DISPOSITION BY STATE—SCHOOL LANDS.

Under Laws 1905, p. 160, c. 103, § 2, providing that, on the expiration or cancellation of a lease of school or asylum lands, the Land Commissioner shall fix a date not less than 90 days on and after which application for purchase may be filed, and that the land shall not be for sale until after such date, an application for the purchase of such land filed before the date so fixed is void.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Dec. Dig. § 173.*]

Original petition, on the relation of J. H. Fine, for mandamus against J. T. Robison, Commissioner of the Land Office. Petition denied.

D. E. Simmons, D. W. Doom, D. H. Doom, and J. D. Cunningham, for relator. R. V. Davidson, Atty. Gen., and Wm. E. Hawkins, Asst. Atty. Gen., for respondent.

BROWN, J. On the 10th day of January, 1909, being qualified to purchase public school lands of the state, the relator made application to the Commissioner of the General Land Office for the purchase of sections 18 and 19, in block A-47, Andrews county. The applicant complied in all respects with the requirements of the statute, and it is unnecessary to detail the facts here. Andrews county was unorganized, and was attached to Martin county for judicial purposes. On the 1st day of July, 1899, the Commissioner of the General Land Office leased the lands in question for 10 years to Thos. Newman, who paid the lease money on the same regularly until the 1st day of July, 1908, when the owner of the lease failed to pay the lease money, and, on the 15th day of October, 1908, the Commissioner declared the lease void, and notified the county clerk of Martin county of the cancellation of the lease, and that the land would be on the market on the 18th day of February, 1909. When relator's application was made, on the 10th day of January, 1909, the Commissioner of the General Land Office rejected it, because the land was not on the market at the time the application was made. The Commissioner filed his answer to this petition for mandamus, setting up the facts as stated above, and the issue is whether by operation of law the land was placed upon the market without any action on the part of the Commissioner.

lature approved April 15, 1905, providing for the sale and lease of school and asylum lands, being chapter 103, p. 159, of the Laws of the Twenty-Ninth Legislature, prescribes the rule by which this case is to be decided as follows: "In cases where lands are now leased or may be hereafter leased and the same shall come on the market by reason of the expiration of such lease, it shall be the duty of Commissioner to notify the county clerk ninety days, when practicable, before the expiration of such lease, of the date of such expiration. When a lease is for any cause canceled, he shall notify the county clerk of that fact and fix a date not less than ninety days thereafter on and after which applications to purchase may be filed. All notices of expiration and cancellation of leases shall be forthwith recorded as required for notices of classification and valuation. The Commissioner shall adopt such means as may be at his command that will give the widest publicity as to when land will be on the market for sale by reason of expiration of any lease. Such publicity shall, when practicable, be given ninety days in advance of such expiration. When a lease is canceled for any cause, the land shall not be for sale until ninety days thereafter. Immediately after the cancellation of a lease or leases the Commissioner shall proceed to give publicity to the fact, the same as is herein required with reference to publicity of expiring leases. If there are no other satisfactory or sufficient means at the command of the Commissioner that will give the necessary publicity, he shall have printed at the expense of the state, to be paid out of the appropriation for public printing, a list or lists of the lands and send them out in the mail and to every person requesting them. Such lists shall also contain a brief statement as to how one shall proceed to purchase the land."

Upon cancellation of the lease it was made the duty of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to notify the county clerk of Martin county of that fact, which he did. It was also his duty at the same time to fix a date on which applications might be filed in the land office to purchase the land, and this he did also. The only limitation placed upon the time when applications might be filed for its purchase was that it should not be less than 90 days. The time beyond 90 days was left to the discretion of the Commissioner, in order that he might give suitable and necessary publicity to the fact that the land was on the market and thereby secure the benefit of competition among the different persons who might wish to purchase. In this instance purchasers had no right to present their applications until the date fixed by the Commissioner, which was the 18th day of February, 1909, and, the relator having presented his applications at a time when the land was not on the market for sale, the Commissioner rightly rejected them.

It is therefore ordered that the petition for writ of mandamus be refused, and that the relator pay all costs of this proceeding.

MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 180*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—EXCEPTION TO FELLOW SERVANT RULE—"OPERATING A CAR."

Where sectionmen were building a temporary track in defendant's yard, and used a push car to bring the rails to be laid, and plaintiff was injured by the falling of a rail while being removed from the car to the track, the injury did not occur while engaged in the work of "operating a car," within the fellow servant rule of Batts' Ann. Civ. St. art. 4560ea.

Error from Court of Civil Appeals of Sixth Supreme Judicial District.

Action by Jim Anderson against the Texarkana & Ft. Smith Railway Company. A judgment for plaintiff was affirmed by the Court of Civil Appeals (111 S. W. 173), and defendant brings error. Reversed and rendered.

Glass, Estes & King, for plaintiff in error. Hart, Mahaffey & Thomas and T. N. Graham, for defendant in error.

WILLIAMS, J. The defendant in error (plaintiff), a section hand in the service of plaintiff in error (defendant), had his foot mashed by the falling upon it of a steel rail which he and other sectionmen, his co-employees, were carrying from a push car to put it in place upon the ground, and recovered the judgment before us for the resulting damages. The negligence on which the judgment is based was that of the co-employees in allowing the rail to fall. They were plainly his fellow servants, engaged in doing the same piece of work, and he cannot recover, unless he was hurt "while engaged in the work of operating" the car, in such way as to bring his case within the provisions of Act Jan. 18, 1897 (Gen. Laws [Sp. Sess.] p. 14, c. 6, § 1 [Batts' Ann. Civ. St. § 4560ea]). The sectionmen were engaged in building a temporary track in defendant's yards, and used the push car to bring rails to the place where they were to be laid from another part of the yards. The car was propelled by pushing. When the load of rails had been brought to the proper place, the men proceeded to take them by hand from the car and put them on the ground, and while plaintiff and several others were supporting an end of one of them the others suddenly released their hold and allowed it to drop upon plaintiff's foot. These are all the facts material to the question stated.

We think it quite clear that plaintiff was not hurt "while engaged in the work of operating" the car. The operation of the car had no more to do with the injury to him than if the rail had been lifted from a wagon or from the ground. In the case of G., C. & S. F. R. R. Co. v. Howard, 97 Tex. 518, 519, 80 S. W. 229, 230, the meaning of the provision in question is discussed, and the reason for the discrimination between employees hurt while operating trains, locomotives, cars, etc., and others differently occupied, is thus stated: "If we consider the perilous position of men while actually engaged in the work of operating trains, and their attitude toward other employees, whether upon the same trains or not, which renders it very difficult to protect themselves against the negligence of others, the discrimination appears to be just as a provision for such employees and their families, if injured, and a wise policy tending to excite the diligence of their employers to procure safe and reliable persons to perform the work affecting the safety of train service. When such employee is not actually engaged in the work out of which the danger grows, the reasons for the distinction between him and other employees cease; for there is no more reason why Howard, while walking upon the track, should be protected against the negligence of those who were upon the locomotive, than there would have been if he had been a section hand in the same situation, and had suffered the same injuries by the negligence of those handling the locomotive." In the case of G., C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Johnson (Tex. Civ. App.) 103 S. W. 447, facts very similar to those here in question were passed upon in an extended opinion by Judge Gill. This court again considered the question in reviewing that decision upon application for writ of error, approving the decision there made, and the doctrine as stated in those decisions may be regarded as settled. It is that the liability declared by this statute does not rest upon the mere fact that the injured servant is employed to do the work of operating trains, cars, etc., but upon the fact that, at the time he is hurt, he is engaged in that work; and this for the reason that it is the character of the work that gives rise to dangers incident to it. The Courts of Civil Appeals, in this case (111 S. W. 173) and in the Johnson Case, just referred to, were embarrassed by the decision in the case of T. & P. Ry. Co. v. Webb, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 498, 72 S. W. 1044, in which, also, an application for a writ of error, raising the question upon the facts therein involved, was refused by this court; and it is, to say the least, far from clear that that decision can be reconciled, in principle, with the construction given to the statute in the Howard and Johnson Cases. These cases, being the later, are of controlling authority, and nothing in the Webb Case is to be allowed to prevent the application of their doctrine to other cases as they arise. The case of St. Louis S. W. Ry. Co. v. Thornton (Tex. Civ. App.) 108 S. W. 437, was not reviewed by this court, and, besides, had features which may distinguish it.

The plaintiff has no cause of action, and the judgment is reversed, and judgment rendered for defendant.

Reversed and rendered.

STATE v. BRADY, Co. Atty.

(Supreme Court of Texas. April 14, 1909.)

1. STATUTES (§ 228*)—REPEAL—EFFECT OF SAVING CLAUSE.

The saving clause or proviso of a repealing statute, which preserves some right, must be strictly construed so as not to include anything not fairly within its terms.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 310; Dec. Dig. § 228.*]

2. STATUTES (§ 228*)—REPEAL—PROVISO.

Where a statute repealing a penal statute contains a clause saving the rights of the state under the repealed law, the right of action only is preserved, and it must be prosecuted under the new law or under some law other than that repealed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Dec. Dig. § 228.*]

3. DISTRICT AND PROSECUTING ATTORNEYS (§ 5*) — COMPENSATION — STATUTES — REPEAL — EXCEPTIONS.

The anti-trust law of 1899 (Laws 26th Leg. p. 246, c. 146), approved May 25, 1899, gave the prosecuting attorney as compensation for prosecuting suits under the act one-fourth of the penalty collected, provided that the fees allowed him should be over and above the fees allowed him by the general fee bill. The anti-trust law of 1903 (Gen. Laws, p. 119, c. 94), expressly repealed the act of 1899 with a proviso that nothing in the repealing law should affect or destroy any rights of the state to recover penalties or forfeit charters of domestic corporations or prohibit foreign corporations from doing business within the state, for acts committed before it took effect. Held, that the repealing law repealed that part of the act of 1899 giving prosecuting attorneys one-fourth of the penalties as compensation; the proviso saving only those rights mentioned therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see District and Prosecuting Attorneys, Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

4. DISTRICT AND PROSECUTING ATTORNEYS (§ 5*)—COMPENSATION—STATUTES—PROVISO.

Though the anti-trust law of 1903 (Gen. Laws, p. 119, c. 94), expressly repealing the anti-trust law of 1899 (Laws 26th Leg. p. 246, c. 146), approved May 25, 1899, but saving all rights of the state to recover penalties, etc., for acts committed before it took effect, repealed that part of the law of 1899 giving prosecuting attorneys as compensation one-fourth of the penalties collected, the provision of the law of 1903, providing that the fees of the prosecuting attorney for representing the state in prosecutions under the act shall be over and above the fees allowed him by the general fee bill, would apply to the collection of penalties for the violation of the law of 1899 by suits brought after its repeal, since prosecutions for the collection of penalties for violations of the law of 1899 must be under the law of 1903 after the repeal of the former law.

Error from Court of Civil Appeals of Third Supreme Judicial District.

Action by the State of Texas against John W. Brady, County Attorney. Judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals affirming a judgment for defendant (114 S. W. 895), and plaintiff brings error. Reversed, and judgment rendered as stated.

Jas. R. Hamilton, Dist. Atty., and J. M. Patterson, for the State. Jno. W. Brady, Allen & Hart, Gregory & Batts, D. W. Doom, D. H. Doom, and L. G. Denman, for defendant in error.

BROWN, J. The parties agreed in writing upon a statement of the facts, upon which the trial court gave judgment for Brady, and the Court of Civil Appeals adopted the statement, which follows, and affirmed that judgment:

"(1) It is agreed that the facts alleged and set out in plaintiff's petition are true and correct and shall be taken as facts in the trial of this suit, especially as to the official acts of the said John W. Brady, the dates and amounts of the judgments recovered and of the fees retained by the said Brady as county attorney under the anti-trust laws of 1899 and 1903 of the state of Texas. However, it shall not be taken as admitted by the said Brady that the fee alleged in the motion to be the fee allowed by law is the fee allowed him by law. In this respect he only admits that he received as county attorney 25 per cent. of each respective judgment for penalties as alleged in plaintiff's motion and claims that he was entitled to the same under the law.

"(2) It is agreed that in all of the suits named in said motion, except that of J. M. Guffey Petroleum Company, and the facts as to that are correctly stated in defendant's answer, the said John W. Brady appeared and represented the state, under the direction of the Attorney General of Texas.

"(3) That on March 31, 1903, C. K. Bell was Attorney General of Texas, and held that office until on or about January 2, 1905. That on July 14, 1904, the said John W. Brady, as county attorney of Travis county, Tex., assisted by D. A. McFall and G. W. Allen, attorneys, brought suit in the district court of Travis county, Tex., in behalf of and in the name of the State of Texas against the J. M. Guffey Petroleum Company and the Beaumont Confederated Oil & Pipe Line Company for violations of chapter 146 of the General Laws of the state of Texas of 1899, and by agreement recovered a judgment in said suit for $5,000. That said judgment was collected in full by said John

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

W. Brady on or about December 5, 1904, and that said Brady retained $1,250 as his official fee in said suit of the State of Texas against the J. M. Guffey Petroleum Company and the Beaumont Confederate Oil & Pipe Line Company. That out of said fees he paid under contract to the said two attorneys two-thirds thereof for their services therein. That the settlement which resulted in said judgment and collection was at the time approved by said O. K. Bell, Attorney General, as the construction of the anti-trust laws of 1899 and 1903, by which the said John W. Brady retained one-fourth of said judgment as his official fees therein.

"(3½) It is agreed that in all the judgments rendered in the cases in which collections were made, and in which penalties were assessed for violations of the act of 1899, such penalties were assessed for the minimum penalty of $200 per day for each day's violations, as provided in said act of 1899, and collections made accordingly.

"(4) That the suit No. 21,046, the State of Texas v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company et al., was filed while O. K. Bell was Attorney General, but was settled a short time after R. V. Davidson qualified as Attorney General.

"(5) That all the suits named in plaintiff's motion, including those filed and settled under the administration of Attorney General Bell, as well as under the administration of Attorney General Davidson, were settled by agreed judgments, approved in terms and amounts by the Attorney General. That all of the fees retained by the said John W. Brady in said suits were retained by him in good faith, believing that he was entitled thereto under the law. That in so retaining said fees he relied upon and followed the construction given to the anti-trust laws of 1899 and 1903 by Attorneys General Bell and Davidson, viz., that the repeal of the act of 1899 (Gen. Laws, p. 246, c. 146) by the act of 1903 (Gen. Laws, p. 119, c. 94), with the saving clause in the latter act, had the effect of keeping alive the act of 1899 as to all acts committed before the act of 1903 took effect, not only as to the penalties named in the former act, but also as to all its machinery and provisions for the enforcement of the same, including the compensation of 25 per cent. to county and district attorneys. That such construction is still adhered to by the Attorney General's department of this state.

"(6) That upon the faith of said construction by the Attorney General's department, the said John W. Brady, with the knowledge and sanction of said department, employed attorneys and made contracts with them for contingent interest in said fees, based upon the construction that he was entitled to 25 per cent. of the recovery under the act of 1899, to assist him and the Attorney General in the prosecution of each of said suits. That said attorneys actively assisted in the work of preparing said cases for trial, and performed all legal services therein required of them by the said John W. Brady or by the Attorney General. That out of the fees received by him in said cases, the said Brady has paid out to said attorneys and in expenses for procuring testimony and preparing the same for trial over two-thirds of the fees actually retained by him upon the faith of said construction."

The anti-trust law of 1903 contained this language: "That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with this act be and the same are hereby repealed, * * * and that an act entitled 'An act to prohibit pools, trusts, monopolies and conspiracies to control business and prices of articles, to prevent the formation or operation of pools, trusts, monopolies and combinations of charters of corporations that violate the terms of this act, and to authorize the institution and prosecution of suits therefor,' approved May the 25th, 1899, and published and known as chapter CXLVI of the General Laws of the Twenty-Sixth Legislature, be and the same are hereby expressly repealed," etc.; "provided nothing in this act shall be held or construed to affect or destroy any rights of the state of Texas to recover penalties or forfeit charters of domestic corporations, or prohibit foreign corporations from doing business in this state, for acts committed before this act takes effect." Laws 1903, p. 122, § 17.

The only question in this case is: Did that language, quoted from the act of 1903, repeal this part of the anti-trust law of 1899: "The prosecuting attorney shall receive for his compensation one-fourth of the penalty collected; provided, the fees allowed the prosecuting attorney representing the state, provided for in this section, shall be over and above the fees allowed him by the general fee bill now in force." Laws 1899, p. 251, § 9.

It is a well-established rule of construction that, when a statute repeals another with a saving clause or proviso attached by which the right of some person or of the state is reserved, such proviso or saving clause must be strictly construed, and will not be held to embrace anything which is not fairly within its terms. Endlich on Int. Stat. § 186; Sutherland Stat. Const. § 223. When a statute repeals a pre-existing law with a clause saving the rights of the state, as in this case, the right of action only is preserved. The right to recover or to enforce the right under such conditions must be prosecuted under the new law or some other existing law. Endlich, Int. Stat. § 487; Aaron v. State, 40 Ala. 307; Farmer v. People, 77 Ill. 322; Brotherton v. Brotherton, 41 Iowa, 112; People v. Livingston, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 527. The sound reason given by all the courts for holding that the cause of action which is preserved by a repealing act must be prosecuted under the new law is that a repealed law is not a law, and courts cannot adjust rights nor afford remedies to parties without some law upon which to base their action.

The learned counsel for the defendant in error did not controvert either of the propositions that we have laid down, but claimed that the language of the saving clause is sufficient, when considered with the attending circumstances, to justify this court in holding that it was not the intention of the Legislature to repeal that portion of the law of 1899 which provided that the county attorney should receive for his services one-fourth of the recovery. This contention is based upon the words, "any rights," in the saving clause, which counsel ingeniously argued embraced the right of the state to employ and pay counsel for services to be rendered. Waiving the question as to whether the prosecution of causes through the officer of the state is a right within the meaning of the statute, we think that the Legislature so clearly defined the phrase "any rights" that there can be no question as to what was intended to be embraced in that language. If it had said that "no right of the state under the former law should be destroyed," that would be held to preserve all rights of action the state had under that law for acts done prior to the taking effect of the new law; but the Legislature enumerated what character of rights were preserved, limiting those rights to recovery of penalties for violations of the old law to procuring the forfeiture of charters of domestic corporations for violations of the old law, and the right to deny to foreign corporations the privilege to do business in this state, for acts committed before the last act took effect. The reservations are so definitely stated that it does not admit of a construction which will embrace anything more than that which is fairly included within the terms of the reservation. We are unable to see how it can be held that the payment to an officer of a portion of the sum recovered in the prosecution of a case is embraced in the terms of this proviso. Indeed, it is absolutely excluded from the proviso by the maxim that the mention of one thing excludes all others. It is not possible to reach the conclusion that the payment of the fees to the county attorney was necessary to the enforcement of the law of 1899 or 1903. Therefore it cannot be preserved as being necessary to enforce a reserved right. That the Legislature did not consider it necessary is shown by its omission from the law of 1903.

Counsel also contend that taking into consideration the fact that the new bill omits a number of provisions contained in the old law, which might be important and serviceable in the prosecution of trusts for the violation of the law, we must presume that it was not intended to repeal those important provisions which would include that which provides for the fees claimed by the defendant in error. However important the provisions of the old law, looking to its enforcement, might have been considered in the enactment of that law, still a subsequent Legislature had the power in the enactment of a new law to omit those which appear to have been most important. It was a question of policy to be determined by the Legislature, and not by the courts, whether the extraordinary measures authorized by the old should be continued. The Legislature which enacted the law of 1899 doubtless thought it was sound policy to offer to county attorneys the inducement of one-fourth of the recovery to stimulate their action in the prosecution of such cases; but the body which passed the law of 1903 evidently thought the time had passed for the inducement to be beneficial, or may have differed from the preceding Legislature as to the policy of doing so, for in enacting the later law upon the subject almost the identical language that prescribed the duties of officers in prosecuting such cases as well as the fees that should be paid was copied into the new statute, except that part which gave to the county attorney one-fourth of the recovery, which shows conclusively that the Legislature intended to change the compensation of the prosecuting attorney in this class of cases. Other changes were made in like manner. Whether wisely or not is not a question for this court to determine.

It is said by counsel for the defendant in error that the construction which we place upon the statute will deprive the county attorney of any compensation for his services in those cases above the $2,500 limitation placed upon his right to fees as county attorney. If that were correct, it would still not furnish a sound reason why this court should supply the omission by construction, for the Legislature might well presume that the officer would do his duty whether compensated or not so long as he should hold the office; but we are of opinion that the same fees that are allowed to the prosecuting attorney for collecting penalties under the law of 1903 will apply to collections of penalties for violations of the law of 1899, because in each case the prosecution and collection must be under the law of 1903. It follows that the collecting of penalties accruing under the law of 1899 comes within this language of the act of 1903: "And it shall be the duty of the Attorney General, or the district or county attorney under the direction of the Attorney General, to prosecute for the recovery of the same, and the fees of the prosecuting attorney for representing the state in proceedings under this act shall be over and above the fees allowed him under the general fee bill." Section 11. The defendant in error would be entitled to the benefit of that provision.

It is said that the construction which we place upon the statute would deprive the county attorney of the ability to employ counsel to aid in prosecution of such cases, but the state is not without counsel in any event, because by section 21, art. 5, of the Constitution, it is provided: "The county attorneys shall represent the state in all cases in the district and inferior courts in their respective counties. * * * County attorneys shall receive as compensation only such fees, commissions and perquisites as may be prescribed by law." The change of the law in these and other particulars may render the service less efficient than under the old statute, but, as we have said before, that was a matter for the Legislature to decide upon and not for this court to supply the omission of that department.

In the oral argument the constitutional right of the citizen to employ and pay counsel was invoked. If a citizen were denied that right, we would deal with that question; but such is not the case. If it were the case of a citizen whose rights are in question, he might waive the right, or he could make his own terms as to fees. The state has no less power in the transaction of her business and is asserting this right of control, the attorney complains.

The district court erred in entering judgment against the state, and the Court of Civil Appeals erred in affirming that judgment. Wherefore it is ordered that the judgments of the district court and Court of Civil Appeals be reversed, and judgment be here rendered in favor of the state of Texas for the excess of fees collected by defendant in error as agreed upon by the parties and found by the Court of Civil Appeals, with 6 per cent. interest per annum on each sum so received from the date of collection to this date, to wit, in the sum of $10,875.76, together with all costs of all courts.

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 601*)—RECORD—STATEMENT OF FACTS—ORIGINAL STATEMENT—NECESSITY.

Act May 25, 1907 (Acts 31st Leg. 1907, pp. 509-513, c. 24), providing for an official stenographer for district courts, by section 15 provides that no statement of facts shall be incorporated in the transcript on appeal, but the original shall be sent up, and by section 16 requires the appointment of a stenographer in any civil action in the county court on application, and makes the provisions of the act as to the preparation of the statement of facts, etc., apply to statements of facts in civil cases tried in the county court. Held that, on an appeal from the county court to a Court of Civil Appeals, the original statement of facts should be sent up, without being made a part of the transcript.

Certified Question from Court of Civil Appeals of Second Supreme Judicial District.

Action by E. J. Wall against the St. Louis, San Francisco & Texas Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. On certified question from the Court of Civil Appeals for the Second District. Question answered.

C. H. Yoakum and Decker & Clarke, for appellant. M. M. Hankins, for appellee.

GAINES, C. J. This is a certified question from the Court of Civil Appeals of the Second District. The statement and question are as follows:

"The above-styled cause is pending before this court on appeal from the county court of Hardeman county, and there are assignments of error which will perhaps require the reversal of the case in the event we are authorized to consider the statement of facts accompanying the record. This statement of facts consists of the original statement of facts made up under the act of 1907 (Acts 31st Leg. 1907, pp. 509-513, c. 24), and the same is not copied into the transcript. The Court of Civil Appeals for the Sixth Supreme Judicial District, in St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. of Tex. v. Nelson (Tex. Civ. App.) 108 S. W. 182, has construed this act to mean that 'on an appeal from a judgment of a county court (the statement of facts) should be copied into and made a part of the transcript, as required by the laws in force prior to the passage' of the act.

"In view of the uncertainty which appears to exist amongst the practitioners, and in view of the language used by your honors in the decision in Tex. & Pac. Ry. Co. v. Stoker, 113 S. W. 3, we deem it advisable to certify for your decision whether or not we are authorized to consider as the statement of facts in this case the original statement of facts properly made up under the act referred to, but not incorporated or copied in the transcript?"

We are of opinion that the original statement of facts in this case should be considered in deciding the case. It is presumed that the question grows out of the construction of section 16 of the act approved May 25, 1907, which reads as follows: "Whenever either party to a civil cause pending in the county court shall apply therefor, the judge of the court shall appoint a competent stenographer to report the oral testimony given in such cause. Such stenographer shall take the oath herein prescribed, and shall receive such compensation as the court may fix, to be not less than five dollars per day, which shall be taxed and collected as costs. The provisions of this act with respect to the preparation of the statement of facts, the time to be allowed therefor, and for the presentation to the opposite party, and the approval and filing thereof by the court shall apply to all statements of facts in civil causes tried in the county court."

This section is appended to the act entitled "An act providing for the appointment of official stenographers for district courts," etc. The previous sections are devoted to the appointment and duties of stenographers in the district courts. Hence, in order to give the county courts the benefits of the act, this section was necessary. We find nothing in it which says that the statement of facts should be incorporated in the record for appeal. "The preparation of the statement of facts, the time to be allowed therefor, and for the presentation to the opposite party, and the approval and filing thereof by the court," are all to be governed by the provisions of the act. It is difficult to say that this provides for the sending up of the statement of facts upon appeal. But section 15 contains the declaration that "no statement of facts shall be incorporated in the transcript on appeal, but the original shall be sent up therewith"; and it may be that this was regarded as sufficiently comprehensive to include statement of facts from the county courts. We fail to see how, if the original statement was good enough for the district courts, it was not good enough for the county courts. Nor can we conceive why they should, for the sake of saving costs, require the original to be sent up from the district courts, and not make the same requirement as to judgments appealed from the county courts.

We answer the question in the affirmative.

EVANTS et al. v. FUQUA et al.

(Supreme Court of Texas. April 28, 1909.)

BROKERS (§ 57*)—COMPENSATION—CONTRACT NEGOTIATED DIFFERENT FROM THAT AUTHORIZED.

Real estate brokers cannot recover commissions on a sale, where the contract negotiated by them with the purchaser binds the owner, without authority from him to do so, to pay $50 a day for each day that he fails, after a time fixed, to execute a deed, and makes that sum a lien on the land; and this, though the purchaser may be willing to waive the forfeiture and only hold the owner to such terms of the contract as the brokers were authorized to make.

Error to Court of Civil Appeals of Second Supreme Judicial District.

Action by W. R. Evants and another against W. H. Fuqua and another. From a judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals (111 S. W. 675), affirming a judgment of the district court for defendants, plaintiffs bring error. Affirmed.

Reeder, Graham & Williams, R. W. Hall, and Geo. W. Barcus, for plaintiffs in error. Madden & Truelove, W. D. Wilson, Carl Gilliland, Turner & Boyce, and John P. Slaton, for defendants in error.

GAINES, O. J. This is an action by Evants and James P. Hagler to recover of defendants, Ferguson and Fuqua, $72,000 for procuring a purchaser of 72,000 acres of land, alleged to belong to defendants. The plaintiffs alleged that they were employed and authorized by Ferguson to sell 72,000 acres of land owned by him and his codefendant Fuqua at a price of $3.50 per acre net to the vendor, and that they were to have for their compensation all in excess of that sum for procuring the purchaser, and that in pursuance of the power conferred upon them by the contract they procured a purchaser of the land at $4.50 per acre for the land and entered into a contract with him therefor. To the petition the defendants, among other defenses, pleaded a general denial. Upon conclusion of the evidence the court instructed a verdict for the defendants.

The plaintiffs proved a contract in writing authorizing them to make the sale at $3.50 per acre for the entire tract or tracts of land, and proved by parol that they were authorized to sell on a credit over $40,000 to $100,000; the balance to be paid in notes running for 10 years and to bear 6 per cent. interest. When the terms of the sale were agreed upon with the proposed purchaser, they were put in writing and signed by the parties; Evants and Hagler signing for the proposed vendor, and John S. Hagler signing for himself. That contract contained the following stipulations: "It is further agreed by the said Jno. E. Ferguson et al. that in the event the said John S. Hagler makes and deposits with the First National Bank, heretofore referred to, the said sum of $10,000 as a part of the purchase money of said 72,000 acres of land in said Bailey county, Tex., and in the event the said Jno. E. Ferguson et al. do not, by themselves or through their agents or attorneys in fact, execute and deliver to the said John S. Hagler a good and sufficient title and deed of conveyance to said land, duly and properly signed and acknowledged, for him and in his behalf, through the said bank, within or before the expiration of the said 60 days hereinbefore mentioned, then the said John S. Hagler is hereby empowered, and we hereby agree that he may take down, take from, receive, and withdraw from said bank the said sum of $10,000 so deposited by him with said bank as a part of the purchase money on said land, together with all vendor's lien notes that he may have executed therefor and deposited with said bank, and the same shall be considered of no further force and effect against him, and we hereby release him from all further obligations for the purchase money for said land or damages from the nonperformance of said contract of purchase; and we furthermore agree with the said John S. Hagler to for-felt and pay to him, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, the sum of $50 per day for each and every day after the expiration of the 60 days hereinbefore mentioned, as liquidated damages for the nonperformance of said contract of sale on the part of the said Jno. E. Ferguson et al., and the failure on our part to make, execute, and deliver to him a deed of conveyance in writing and a good and sufficient title to all of the land hereinbefore referred to. And we, the said Jno. E. Ferguson et al., do hereby give and guarantee unto the said Jno. S. Hagler, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, a lien upon the 72,000 acres, just before referred to, as a security for the payment on our part to the said Jno. S. Hagler of all liquidated damages, agreed to be paid to him and provided for in this contract, should we fail to carry out and perform this contract for any reason whatsoever."

There is no claim that Evants and Hagler were empowered by the agency contract to make such a stipulation as the above. Indeed, one of the agents testified that they had no authority for that action. But it is insisted that the proposed purchaser was not bound to insist upon that stipulation; that he might waive it, and hold the proposed vendors to such of the terms of the agreement as they were authorized to make. But we do not concur in this view. The purpose of the contract between Evants and Hagler, as agents of Ferguson, and Jno. S. Hagler, as purchaser of the land, was to evince their acceptance of the proposition made by the vendors, and when he accepted in part and wrote into the contract the onerous stipulation set out above, it was not the contract of the vendors. They were not bound by the contract. It amounted to no more than a counter proposal, which they could accept or reject as they saw fit. It was a departure from the contract they authorized their agents to make, and they were not bound by it.

It is insisted that Hagler had the right to release Ferguson from the stipulation. This may be so, if he had gone about it in the right way; that is, by releasing the contract as executed and executing a new one with this stipulation left out. But this he did not do. The agents set out the contract in their petition, and pray to recover compensation for making it. It is the foundation for their action. It was Ferguson's right to say to him: If you desire to accept the contract of my agents, do so according to the terms they are entitled to make, but do not insert in it any terms which they are not authorized to grant. Because the plaintiffs were not authorized to make the contract which is declared upon in this case, we hold that they cannot recover compensation for making it.

Having examined the other assignments of error, and finding none the determination of which should have changed the result of the suit, the judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals is affirmed.

HAGLER v. FERGUSON.

(Supreme Court of Texas. April 28, 1909.)

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 65*)—CONTRACTS ENFORCEABLE—CONTRACT NEGOTIATED DIFFERENT FROM THAT AUTHORIZED.

A contract of sale of land negotiated by a broker will not be specifically enforced against the owner, where binding the owner, without authority, to pay $50 a day for each day he fails, after a time fixed, to execute a deed and making such sum a lien on the land; and this, though the purchaser may be willing to waive such forfeiture.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Dec. Dig. § 65.*]

Error from Court of Civil Appeals of Second Supreme Judicial District.

Specific performance by John S. Hagler against John E. Ferguson. From a judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals (111 S. W. 678), affirming a judgment for defendant, plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Reeder, Graham & Williams and H. O. Randolph, for plaintiff in error. Turner & Boyce, Madden & Truelove, and W. D. Wilson, for defendant in error.

GAINES, C. J. This is a companion case to that of Evants & Hagler v. Ferguson et al. (this day decided by us) 118 S. W. 132. That case was a suit for commissions for a sale of 72,000 acres of land, alleged to have been made for plaintiffs by the defendants. This is a suit by John S. Hagler, the alleged purchaser at that sale, to enforce a specific performance of the terms of that sale. After the evidence was introduced the trial judge instructed a verdict for the defendant, which was accordingly returned and made the basis of a judgment for that party.

The two cases were tried in different counties and not before the same judge. It seems to us that the facts in the two cases were substantially the same. This suit is to enforce the contract which was made in the former case; and since we have held that, because that contract was unauthorized by the principal in the former case, the agents could not recover, we think it follows that it will not support a finding of a contract for the sale of the land. It is true that the alleged purchaser, John S. Hagler, may be willing to forego the stipulation that Ferguson was to pay him $50 a day for every day that he fails after a certain time to execute a deed for the land; but the answer to the suggestion is that he did not so contract. The contract by an agent for the sale of land must be such as either party can enforce it strictly in accordance with its terms. How could Ferguson have enforced this contract against Hagler without complying with the stipulation that, if he failed after 60 days from the date of the contract to make a conveyance of the land, he should become liable to pay $50 a day for each day he was so in default, and that sum should be a lien upon the land proposed to be sold. Michael v. Hoffsteadt, 5 Neb. (Unof.) 453, 98 N. W. 1078. In the case cited the husband authorized his wife to sell his land at $50 per acre if she could not get more. She entered into an agreement to sell the land, and stipulated that, if her husband failed to convey, he should pay $500 liquidated damages. This last stipulation was held to avoid the contract, for the reason that she was not authorized to make it, and a recovery was denied. For the same reason, we think a recovery should be denied in this case.

There are other assignments of error which we have considered; but we find none of them which, if sustained, would affect the question of the right of recovery.

For the reasons given, the judgments of the Court of Civil Appeals and of the district court are affirmed.

GALVESTON, H. & S. A. RY. CO. v. DE GROFF et ux.

(Supreme Court of Texas. April 28, 1909.)

1. NUISANCE (§ 23*)—INJUNCTION—ADEQUACY OF REMEDY AT LAW.

Injury to the business of keeping a hotel, occasioned by a nuisance, causing guests to leave the hotel and to induce others to remain away, is susceptible of ascertainment and satisfaction in money, and an injunction will not lie to restrain its continuance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Nuisance, Cent. Dig. § 57; Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

2. RAILROADS (§ 222*)—OPERATION IN STREET—NUISANCE—INJUNCTION—LACHES.

One entitled to an injunction restraining a railroad company from creating a nuisance by using streets for switching purposes and for hauling heavy locomotives and cars must act within a reasonable time after the creation of the nuisance, and the question of reasonable time depends on the facts of the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 724; Dec. Dig. § 222.*]

3. RAILROADS (§ 222*)—OPERATION IN STREET—NUISANCE—INJUNCTION—LACHES.

A railway company maintained for 19 years tracks in a street, and continually used the same for switching purposes, increasing the use only to meet the increase of the business. An individual kept a hotel for more than 9 years, and then sought to restrain the railway company from using the tracks on the ground that the use created a nuisance, interfering with the business of the hotel. Held, that the delay in instituting the suit was unreasonable, requiring the court to deny relief.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 724; Dec. Dig. § 222.*]

4. RAILROADS (§ 222*)—OPERATION IN STREET—NUISANCE—INJUNCTION—RELATIVE INJURY.

The court, in determining the propriety of restraining a railway company from using its tracks in a city street for switching purposes, on the ground that the same creates a nuisance causing damage to an individual, must consider the relative injury to the individual by a continuance of the business, and that which would be inflicted on the company and the public by granting the injunction, and, where the injury to the individual is greatly less than that to the company and the public, the court must deny relief.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 724; Dec. Dig. § 222.*]

5. RAILROADS (§ 222*)—OPERATION IN STREET—NUISANCE—INJUNCTION—REMEDY AT LAW.

A railway company maintained tracks in a street by permission of the city authorities. The machine and repair shops and railroad yards were so located that to reach them it was necessary to pass over the tracks in the street, and, unless such tracks could be used, the company would be obliged to incur a heavy expense in either removing its shops and yards, or resorting to some other part of the city on the main line at which to make the diversion of the cars to the shops and yards. A real estate owner in the vicinity suffered a depreciation in value of his property and in his business conducted thereon. Held, that an injunction restraining the company from using the tracks in the street should not issue, but the individual should be remitted to his action for damages.

Error to Court of Civil Appeals of Fourth Supreme Judicial District.

Action by Charles De Groff and another against the Galveston, Harrisburg & San Antonio Railway Company to enjoin the use of a city street for switching purposes. There was a judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals (110 S. W. 1006) affirming a judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant brings error. Reversed and rendered.

Baker, Botts, Parker & Garwood and Beall & Kemp, for plaintiff in error. Coldwell & Sweeney, for defendants in error.

BROWN, J. We adopt the statement of the pleadings and the result of the trial made by the Honorable Court of Civil Appeals, as follows:

"Defendants in error, who will hereinafter be called 'plaintiffs,' sued plaintiff in error, who will hereinafter be called 'defendant,' for an injunction to restrain defendant, from using that part of Main street, in the city of El Paso, lying between the east line of Mesa avenue and the east line of Kansas street for yard and station purposes, and from switching cars, making up trains, and doing like things on said street within the limits mentioned. As grounds for the injunction, plaintiffs alleged, in substance: That they are, and for many years hath been, the owners of certain premises, situated in said city within 120 feet from that portion of Main street above described, upon which and as a part of said premises there is a large and commodious hotel, built and conducted in a manner calculated to secure the patronage of the traveling public, which would be secured and maintained were it not for the annoyance and disturbance caused by defendant's wrongful and unlawful use of said street between the points mentioned; that at all hours, day and night, and especially at night between the hours of 9 p. m., and 5 a. m., defendant is constantly switching and propelling heavy locomotives and cars along railway tracks unlawfully built and maintained along that part of Main street, which causes great noise, the ground to be constantly jarred, defendant's engines making loud, penetrating, and disagreeable sounds, the bells of the engines being constantly ringing, etc., to the great discomfort of persons stopping at plaintiffs' hotel, which disturb and are calculated to disturb the slumber of persons stopping at said hotel; that by reason thereof many guests who stopped there have left, and others stopping there will leave, and many persons, who would otherwise become guests, will not do so; that in the future, unless relief be granted to plaintiffs, many persons who would otherwise have stopped at said hotel will omit to do so on account of said acts of defendant; that by reason of the premises, the property which belongs to Mrs. De Groff, and the business of plaintiff, Charles De Groff, as a hotel keeper, has been greatly damaged; that such property and business will still be further damaged and render the premises valueless as a hotel and destroy such business of the plaintiff, Charles De Groff; that the damages plaintiffs have suffered and will suffer are not shared by the public at large; that such damages cannot be estimated in any fixed or approximately correct sum, and the injuries suffered are not susceptible of compensation in damages; that defendant threatens to continue its unlawful and injurious acts, and will do so unless restrained therefrom by the court; that plaintiffs have no adequate remedy at law, etc.

"The defendant answered by general and special demurrers, a general denial, and a special plea alleging, in substance: That it is a railway corporation created for the purpose of carrying freight and passengers, and had existed as such for over 25 years; that its road traverses almost the entire state of Texas, and is an important link in transcontinental routes between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans; that under an ordinance passed by the city council of the city of El Paso in the year 1881, and by several amendments thereto, it acquired a right of way through said city over and upon Main street, with full authority to locate its tracks, switches, and spurs, and construct and maintain its depot and yards thereon, in order that it might fulfill the obligations imposed upon it by law as a common carrier of freight and passengers; that by virtue of the authority conferred by said ordinances and franchises, and with the consent of the city council of El Paso and abutting property owners it, at great expense, acquired by purchase real estate and property contiguous to and abutting on Main street, constructed and built, and has continuously maintained thereon, its passenger and freight depots, machine shops, and other improvements necessary and incident to the operation of its line of railway and the discharge of its duty to the public as a common carrier; that the location of its said property and of its tracks and other improvements thereon is shown upon a certain map sent up with the record as a part of the statement of facts in the case. Defendant further alleged: That by an ordinance passed by the city council of El Paso May 14, 1883, it was given the privilege and right to erect on any part of Main street any additional tracks of railway it might desire. That so much of the street as lies between Kansas and Stanton streets was by ordinance of the city closed and abandoned for the purpose and use as a street by the public. That every and all of the privileges, rights, and franchises were granted the defendant upon the express condition that the passenger depot to be built and maintained should not be at a greater distance from the main plaza than 660 feet; it being the intention of the city council that such depot should not be located from the present business center of the city a greater distance. That defendant thereafter located its yards and grounds, tracks, side tracks, and switches and built its machine shops, and has continuously maintained the same in strict conformity with the conditions and requirements of the city of El Paso, in the proper performance of its duties to the public. That any noise or inconvenience arising from the operation of its trains and switching its cars was only a reasonable exercise of the rights and privileges granted it by said city. That long prior to the time plaintiffs acquired or owned the premises, the Orndorff Hotel was located thereon, and the hotel business conducted by its then owner, without complaint of any inconvenience or annoyance caused to its patrons. That plaintiffs thereafter purchased said property with full knowledge that there would be some inconvenience and annoyance incident to the handling and operation of defendant's trains, cars, and engines over said tracks, and has acquiesced in the same for a period of about 10 years. That it was then, and is now, absolutely necessary to so handle its cars and conduct its business on Main street between the points mentioned. And that such injury or inconvenience as complained of by plaintiffs arises from causes necessarily incident to railway service in the conduct of defendant's railway business under the rightful exercise of its franchises granted by the laws of Texas and the ordinances of the city of El Paso.

"The case was tried before the court without a jury, and a decree was rendered perpetually enjoining and restraining the defendant from using that portion of Main street in the city of El Paso which lies between its intersection with the easterly line of Stanton street and its intersection with the easterly line of Mesa avenue for railroad yards and station purposes, and from making up in whole or in part any trains thereon, and from doing any switching thereon, and from causing its trains, engines, locomotives, and cars, or either, to stand thereon, subject to this provision: 'Provided, however, this shall not in any way be construed as prohibiting passenger, freight or other trains coming in over the main line from the west, or such trains as have been made up and are departing for the west, passing over the switches and side tracks onto the main tracks within said limits, or from stopping for a time reasonably sufficient to throw switches for that purpose. It is expressly ordered by the court, however, that this judgment, and no part thereof, shall be construed as to apply to any tracks of defendant not situated on that portion of Main street which is herein described, and this judgment and injunction hereby ordered shall not apply to any ground or territory other than to that portion of Main street herein mentioned and defined.'

The judge of the trial court filed conclusions of fact, which we condense in part and copy a portion, as follows:

On the 17th day of February, 1881, the city council of the city of El Paso adopted an ordinance by which it granted to the Galveston, Harrisburg & San Antonio Railway Company the right of way over a great number of the streets and alleys of the said city, which included Main and San Francisco streets and contained this provision: "Provided that the right of way, herein granted to said company for its railway, shall (not) exceed five feet from each side of a center line of the track thereof, from the point where such track touched San Francisco street, to the southwestern boundary of the depot grounds as herein-after defined and between which points no side tracks, switch or spur shall be constructed." On March 24, 1881, the said city adopted a second ordinance, by which it enlarged the right of way granted to the said railway company to the width of 16 feet and repealed the inhibition in the first ordinance against the building of said tracks, switches, etc., upon certain streets. On May 14, 1883, the said city council adopted a third ordinance, by which the right of way was extended 12 feet from each side of the 16 feet theretofore granted, making 40 feet in width, and the said ordinance contained these provisions:

"Beginning at the center of San Francisco and Anthony street as shown on map known as the official map of the city, and running thence through said San Francisco street twelve feet on either side of said sixteen foot grant to the intersection of said San Francisco street with Main street; thence with Main street twelve feet in width on each side of said sixteen foot right of way to the northeasterly boundary of Kansas street, with privilege and right to said company to erect on said part of said street any additional tracks of railway as it may desire."

"Section 3. That so much of said Main street as lies between Kansas street and Stanton street be and the same is from and after the passage and approval of this ordinance, closed and abandoned for the purpose of use as a street on the part of the public."

"The defendant railway company as appears from the map introduced in evidence, in [is] operating and maintaining on Main street, between Stanton street and Mesa avenue, in addition to the double tracks of its main line, three side tracks; one leaving the main line on the south side thereof about 100 feet west of Mesa avenue, continuing east along Main street and diverging to the south from the Main line to a point about 50 feet east of Mesa avenue, where it leaves Main street and enters the private property of the defendant railway company and connects with the defendant's yards, and this track constituting the main lead track from the west to the freight yards of the defendant company. The other two tracks on the north of the north track of the Main line join the main line about 50 feet from the east line of Mesa avenue on Main street and run east on Main street to the east line of Stanton street and constitute the main lead to the coach tracks, coalyards, machine shops, etc., of the defendant. That the part of said side tracks and leads on Main street, as aforesaid, are constantly used for switching purposes; and the yard engines, in the course of making up trains and shifting cars for various purposes, are constantly going back and forth over same within said territory, ringing their bells, and stopping and starting. That the moving back and forth of the switch engines and cars attached thereto on said tracks and leads and upon the main line between Mesa avenue and Stanton street, while engaged in switching and shoving cars, causes a great deal of noise and vibration.

"Second. That the plaintiff Mrs. De Groff owns a large four-story building, called the 'Orndorff Hotel,' situated on Mesa avenue about 90 feet south of the south line of said Main street where same is intersected by Mesa avenue. That plaintiff Charles [De Groff] is conducting a hotel in said building, and the same has a large patronage.

"Third. That the noise caused by the moving back and forth of switch engines while engaged in switching and shifting cars and making up trains upon all of said tracks situated on Main street between Mesa avenue on the west and Stanton street on the east, arising from the escape of steam, the exhaust of locomotives, the coming together of cars, and the ringing of bells, is so great and constant as to annoy and disturb the guests at said hotel, and keep them from sleep and rest at night, as has been the case for some time past, and continues to be. That the vibration caused by the stopping and starting of the switch engines and cars attached, and the passage of such engines and cars up and down the tracks in the course of switching, causes the building of the said De Groff to vibrate and shake, thereby disturbing the said De Groff and his guests, making his hotel uncomfortable.

"Fourth. That in consequence of such condition the plaintiff's property is seriously damaged and lessened in value, the said hotel's patronage has been materially decreased, and his hotel business materially injured.

"Fifth. That in addition to said switching there are some 18 to 20 trains a day passing along said main track, and out of and into the yards on the south side over the south side lead to and from the main track, and that these trains cause even greater vibration than the said switching, and cause also a great deal of noise.

"Sixth. That as now constructed, in order to get into and out of the defendant's freight yards on the south side of the main line, it is necessary that trains should pass over said lead south of the main line, leaving the same, as stated, about 100 feet west of Mesa avenue, and that, in order to reach said yards on the north side of the main line from the west as the same are now constructed, it is necessary that cars and engines enter the same upon said lead switch which joins the main line, as stated above, east of Mesa avenue about 50 feet. That the use made of said leads by switch engines is, in effect, the use of said Main street between Stanton and Mesa avenue for yard purposes.

"Seventh. That said south lead track as it is now upon the ground on Main street was constructed in the year 1887, or 1888, and has continuously remained and been used without intermission and without any action being taken on the part of the city to oust the railway company up to the present time. And that the said Orndorff Hotel building was in use for hotel purposes long before the plaintiff Mrs. De Groff acquired the property, and the said south lead was so used by the said defendant railway company long before that time."

The plaintiff in error will hereafter be called the "defendant," and the defendants in error will be called the "plaintiffs." In their petition the plaintiffs allege, in substance: That the use of Main street as therein alleged has caused many guests who were stopping at the hotel to leave, and, unless relief be given, many others will leave; that many persons who would have become guests of the hotel had not done so on account of the noises and disturbances produced by the acts of the defendant, but have sought hotel accommodations elsewhere, and will continue to do so in the future unless relief be granted as prayed for. The petition alleges "that by reason of the premises the value of the said real estate belonging to the said Mrs. Alzina De Groff has been greatly depreciated, and the business of the plaintiff, Charles De Groff, as a hotel keeper, has been greatly damaged." No other element of damage is claimed to exist. It is a well-established principle which is recognized in the petition that the plaintiffs were not entitled to an injunction in this case if they had an adequate remedy at law; that is, if they could recover by a suit at law for the amount of the depreciation of the real estate and compensation for the decrease in the business of hotel keeping. It does not require authority nor argument to show that the decrease in the value of the real estate could easily be ascertained and could be compensated for in money. Therefore the irreparable injury upon which the right to an injunction depends rests wholly upon the question whether the injury to the business of the hotel keeper is susceptible of ascertainment and of satisfaction in money. We are of opinion that the injury arising from the depreciation of the business constituted a good ground of recovery in an action for damages. Brunswick & W. Ry. Co. v. Hardey, 112 Ga. 604, 37 S. E. 888, 52 L. R. A. 896; Rose v. Groves, 5 Man. & G. 826; Aldrich v. Wetmore, 56 Minn. 20, 57 N. W. 221. In the first case cited the action was to recover damages against a railroad company for obstructing the way by which persons usually did and would pass in going to a house on a public street where plaintiff did business. The complaint was that the obstruction prevented persons who had and would have traded with the plaintiff at that place from doing so, and thereby his business was injured. The railroad company contended that such damages were speculative in their nature and not the subject of a legal action. The court said: "In cases, however, where these elements are merely speculative and conjectural and cannot be ascertained with reasonable certainty, no allowance should be made therefor. This does not mean that the amounts of these elements of damage should necessarily be reduced to an exact calculation before a recovery could be had, but there must be sufficient data to enable a jury with a reasonable degree of certainty and exactness to ascertain the loss." Again the court said in the same opinion: "We think, on the contrary, that it is well established by this court * * * that illegally obstructing and continuing to obstruct a public street so as to prevent the customers of a merchant from getting to his store is inflicting upon him a special wrong not shared in by the public at large, for which he is entitled to maintain an action for damages." The other cases cited are equally in point. Conceding that the acts of the defendant constituted a nuisance to the plaintiffs for which they would be entitled to be remunerated, they could not resort to the process of injunction; there being a remedy at law by which they could have been reimbursed for the injury sustained. Duck v. Peeler, 74 Tex. 273, 118 S. W. 1111.

If we concede for the argument that plaintiffs had a right to an injunction, then the law required that they should prosecute that right within a reasonable time after the nuisance was created by the operation of the trains upon that street. Madison v. Ducktown Sul. Co. (Tenn.) 83 S. W. 662; Clifton Iron Co. v. Dye, 87 Ala. 468, 6 South. 192. What will be considered a reasonable time depends upon the facts and circumstances of the case. In some instances courts have held three years an unreasonable time to delay proceedings of this character, and, in other instances, a longer time has been held to be reasonable. The facts, briefly stated, are: The lead tracks, upon which the operation of the trains is complained of, were constructed in the year 1888, and the acts complained of and now carried on upon said tracks were begun then and have been continued ever since, increasing only to meet the increase of business. This suit was instituted on the 27th day of June, 1907, 19 years after the commencement of the use of the tracks for said purposes. It does not appear at what time the hotel was built, but the plaintiff, Charles De Groff, testified that he had been keeping hotel there more than nine years at the time of the trial, and the house was there before he took charge of it, so it is a reasonable inference from the facts stated that the house had been there for a considerable number of years before Mrs. De Groff became the owner of it. We are of opinion that, as a matter of law, the delay of 19 years was unreasonable, and for that reason the court should not have granted the writ of injunction. Counsel for plaintiffs ask: "When did the injury occur?" That might be a pertinent question if this were a suit for damages, but it cannot affect the issue of delay in moving to abate the nuisance.

The question of issuing an injunction, under such state of facts, depends upon the circumstances, and it is the duty of the court to consider the relative injury to the plaintiffs by a continuance of the nuisance to that which would be inflicted upon the defendant and the public by granting and enforcing an injunction, and, if the injury to the plaintiffs appears to be greatly less in amount in comparison to that which will result to the railroad company and the public, then it is the duty of the court to deny the writ of injunction. Wees v. Coal & Iron R. Co., 54 W. Va. 430, 46 S. E. 166; Sheldon v. Rockwell, 9 Wis. 166, 76 Am. Dec. 205. The undisputed evidence shows that the machine shops, repair shops, and the railroad yards were so located and constructed that to reach either of them from the main track it is necessary to pass over that portion of the tracks to which the injunction as granted applies. It is true that the running of the trains to the depots is not enjoined, but the cars which compose those trains must necessarily be taken off the main track and shifted from one track to another, to the yards and shops, and the facility with which this may be done is of great importance to a railroad company doing as much business as is done at that place. The use of the tracks which is enjoined consisted in bringing cars out of the shops, or from the railroad yards and attaching them to and forming them into trains for use, or in breaking up trains that might come in and distributing the cars, thus clearing the main track by running the cars into the yards or to the repair shops. With the injunction in force, the yards and repair shops could not be reached by the cars brought in on the main line, from which it will necessarily result that the railroad company must either remove its yards and shops to some other place where it may connect with them from the main track, or it must resort to some other part of the city on the main line at which to make the diversion of the cars from the main track on Main street to the yards and shops. In either event the cost to the railroad company will be great, and the whole system of its tracks, depots, shops, and yards would be broken up. The same business, if done in any other portion of the city, would create the same character of nuisance to people living in that neighborhood as is created at the present location. Besides, the people of El Paso are interested in the maintenance of those shops and depots at the place where they are located. In granting the right of way in 1881, the city made it a condition that the passenger depot should be located within 660 feet of the plaza. It appears from the testimony that it would work a great hardship, although it would not be an impossibility, for the railroad to reconstruct all of these yards, depots, and tracks so as to accommodate the business of the city as it is now done and as the people are entitled to have it done. It does not appear that this could be done and at the same time maintain the passenger depot at a point conforming to the ordinance. The public convenience is of controlling importance in this class of cases, especially is it so in this case, wherein it is shown that this railroad company carries the freight and passengers for El Paso over a large scope of country, and also carries the through travel and traffic which reaches it over the Southern Pacific, as well as that which the Galveston, Harrisburg & San Antonio Railroad Company receives from and delivers to other roads.

The use of the tracks which are enjoined was lawful and indispensable to the operation of the railroad. It cannot be prevented without destroying the usefulness of this public utility. A railroad cannot be operated without locomotives which, being moved by steam, must produce noises. If removed beyond the limits of a city so as to place the yards out of contact with business houses and residences, their value to the public would be greatly impaired. Some one must suffer these inconveniences rather than that the public interest should suffer. If the defendant were compelled to remove to another part of the city, the same nuisance to other people would be caused by the same necessary operation of the machinery, and the citizens at that point could with greater propriety than plaintiffs seek another injunction. These conflicting interests call for a solution of the question by the application of the broad principles of right and justice, leaving the individual to his remedy by compensation and maintaining the public interests intact. This works hardships upon the individual, but they are incident to civilization with its physical developments, demanding more and more the means of rapid transportation of persons and property. The plaintiffs should be left to their action for damages. The injunction should not have been granted.

Plaintiffs rely upon G., H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Miller (Tex. Civ. App.) 93 S. W. 177, in which this court refused a writ of error. In that case the railroad company averred that its use of the street was temporary and would be abandoned by a certain time. The trial court granted the injunction to become effective at a time subsequent to the date fixed by the railroad company for its removal. The Court of Civil Appeals said: "We do not think appellant has any ground to complain of the court's action in decreeing that it should not do at a certain time certain things, which at that time it alleged that it did not desire to do, and promised that it would voluntarily desist from doing them. We are unable to see of what its grievance consists. Appellees might have had cause to complain, if the court had made their rights in the matter rest on promises made by appellant to remedy their wrongs at some time in the future. As it is, the court seems to have decreed the relief that appellant alleged and proved that it was willing to grant." This court did not undertake to review the case for the reason that by lapse of time the question had ceased to be of practical importance.

It is ordered that the judgments of the district court and the Court of Civil Appeals be reversed, and judgment be here rendered that the petition for an injunction be denied, and that the petition be dismissed. It is further ordered that defendant in error recover of Charles De Groff and Mrs. Alzina De Groff all costs of all of the courts.

BROWN v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. March 20, 1900.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 90*)—JUSTICES OF THE PEACE—NATURE AND SCOPE OF JURISDICTION.

The jurisdiction of a justice of the peace is only that fixed by the Constitution and statutes; and, as a general rule any exercise of jurisdiction by him beyond his prescribed power is void.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 129-136; Dec. Dig. § 90.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 90*)—JUSTICES OF THE PEACE—AUTHORITY AS MAGISTRATE.

A justice of the peace has authority to sit as a magistrate under the express provisions of Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 41; but, in view of article 62, providing that, when a magistrate sits to inquire into a criminal accusation, his court is called an examining court, his authority as a magistrate is entirely distinct from his jurisdiction as a justice of the peace.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 90.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 90*)—JUSTICES OF THE PEACE—JURISDICTION—TERRITORIAL EXTENT.

Ordinarily one justice of the peace has no authority to take cognizance of proceedings within the limits of the jurisdiction of another justice, and statutes permitting it under prescribed conditions are to be strictly construed; and, where by statute certain proceedings must be had before a proper justice, no other justice can take jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 90.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 90*)—JUSTICES OF THE PEACE—JURISDICTION—AUTHORITY TO SIT IN ANOTHER PRECINCT.

One justice of the peace as such cannot sit in the precinct of another justice and take jurisdiction of matters arising therein, even when the other justice is absent, under Rev. St. 1895, art. 1568, providing that, if a vacancy exists in the office of justice of the peace of a precinct, or the justice shall be absent or unwilling to perform the duties of his office, the nearest justice in the county may perform the duty of the office, in view of article 1564, providing that each justice of the peace shall be commissioned as justice of the peace of his precinct, but, if he performs such duties, they must be performed in his own precinct; and hence, under Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 941, providing that a justice of the peace, having good cause to believe that an offense against the state laws has been committed, may summon and examine witnesses in relation thereto, a neighboring justice, as a justice of the peace, cannot go into another justice precinct where there is a resident justice, and hold a court of inquiry.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. 90.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 90*)—JUSTICES OF THE PEACE—JURISDICTION—"ACCUSED"—"DEFENDANT."

Under Pen. Code 1895, art. 25, providing that the words "accused" and "defendant" therein refer to one who in a legal manner is held to answer for an offense at any stage of the proceedings, or against whom complaint in a lawful manner is made, charging an offense including all proceedings from the order of arrest to final execution, a defendant is not "accused" until charged with an offense, and hence a justice of the peace as a magistrate cannot sit as an examining court until a criminal action has been commenced against a person, and he has been arrested and brought before the justice, and therefore a justice does not act as a magistrate at a court of inquiry called to summon and examine witnesses as to a supposed crime, under the express provisions of Code Cr. Proc. 1895, art. 941; nobody being present and called upon to answer any accusation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 90.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 105, 106; vol. 8, p. 7562; vol. 2, pp. 1936-1938.]

6. WITNESSES (§ 390*)—IMPEACHMENT—INCONSISTENT STATEMENTS—CONFESSIONS—FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH STATUTE.

Where an alleged confession of accused, claimed to have been made while he was under arrest, was not shown to have been a voluntary statement taken before an examining court, or to have been made in writing, signed by accused, showing that proper warning had been given as to his rights, as required by Acts 30th Leg. 1907, pp. 219, 220, c. 118, evidence thereof was inadmissible to impeach accused testifying in his own behalf.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Dec. Dig. § 390.*]

Brooks, J., dissenting.

Appeal from District Court, Fannin County; Ben H. Denton, Judge.

Simon Brown was convicted of perjury, and appeals. Reversed and remanded.

E. L. Agnew and McGrady & McMahon, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DAVIDSON, P. J. This conviction was for perjury, the punishment assessed being three years' confinement in the penitentiary.

The evidence shows that on December 3, 1906, G. W. King was justice of the peace of precinct No. 3 of Fannin county, and that he, together with the assistant county attorney, sheriff, with deputies, and the county attorney of Lamar county, went into justice precinct No. 4 of said Fannin county, where there was a resident qualified justice of the peace, and that said King issued subpoenas for witnesses, under authority of article 941 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1895, and had said witnesses brought before him for the purpose of inquiring into violations of the law. While testifying before said King, appellant stated, "I never saw any card playing or craps in any room above Jim Lewis' frosty joint, and I have not seen a game of poker or crap game around or in Ladonia for three or four years, at least; it has been more than one year." Perjury was assigned against appellant upon his testimony before said King. As above stated, the evidence is that King was the duly elected and qualified justice of the peace in precinct No. 3; that he went into precinct No. 4, where there was a resident qualified justice of the peace, and held a court of inquiry, and it is further shown that the justice of precinct No. 4 was in no way disqualified from holding said court of inquiry, or sitting in regard to these matters. The commissioners' court had designated Ladonia as the seat of justice, or place for holding the justice court for said precinct No. 4.

Appellant was brought before said King by a deputy sheriff, and held in custody from the time he was supposed to have been summoned before said King until indicted by the grand jury. The contention is made that King, as justice of the peace, had no jurisdiction or authority to act as justice of the peace, or preside as such over a court of inquiry in precinct No. 4, inasmuch as there was a resident justice of the peace, who was a qualified justice of precinct No. 4, and was in no way disqualified to act in such investigation. We are of opinion this contention is sound. A justice of the peace has no authority as such to act out of his precinct, and in the precinct of another justice of the peace. Article 5, §§ 18, 19, of the Constitution provide there shall be not less than four, nor more than eight, justices of the peace in and for each organized county in this state, unless there should be a city of 8,000 or more inhabitants, in which case there may be two justices elected for such city. It further provides that the county court then in existence should make the first division, and all subsequent divisions should be made by the commissioners' court, as provided by the Constitution. Further provisions of the Constitution provide for the jurisdiction, criminal and civil, of such justices of the peace, and that they shall hold their courts at such times and places as may be provided by law. In obedience to these provisions of the Constitution the Legislature provided, among other things, for the election of justices of the peace in these respective justice precincts, and to fill vacancies in case of such occurrence. Article 1564 of the Revised Statutes of 1895 provides: "Each justice of the peace shall be commissioned as justice of the peace of his precinct and ex-officio notary public of his county, and shall take the oath of office prescribed in the Constitution, and give the bond prescribed by law." Article 1565 provides: "Where any vacancy shall occur in the office of a justice of the peace, the same shall be filled by some person appointed by the commissioners' court of the county, who shall hold his office until the next general election, and until his successor shall be elected and qualified." Article 1566 provides: "During the period of such vacancy, or whenever the justice of the peace in any precinct shall be absent, or unable or unwilling to perform the duties of his office, the nearest justice of the peace in the county may perform the duties of the office until such vacancy shall be filled, or such absence, inability or unwillingness shall cease." This seems to be the extent of the law with reference to the authority of the justice of the peace as enacted by the Legislature, except as coroner and magistrate. Article 941 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is in the following language: "When a justice of the peace has good cause to believe that an offense has been, or is about to be committed against the laws of this state, he may summon all and examine any witness or witnesses, in relation thereto; and if it shall appear from the statement of any witness or witnesses that an offense has been committed, the justice shall reduce said statements to writing, and cause the same to be sworn to by the witness or witnesses making the same, and thereupon such justice shall issue a warrant for the arrest of the offender, the same as if complaint had been made out and filed against each offender." These are the provisions in the Constitution and statutory enactments in regard to the power and jurisdiction and authority of justices of the peace. It is a well-settled proposition that the jurisdiction and power and authority of justices of the peace are such only as are fixed by the Constitution and statutes. In some of the states their jurisdiction is coextensive with the limits of their respective counties, while in others it is confined to their townships, district, wards, precincts, or hundreds, and it is a general rule that any exercise of jurisdiction by a justice of the peace beyond his prescribed power is coram non iudice and void. See Dew v. State Bank, 9 Ala. 323; Caldwell v. Meador, 4 Ala. 755; Gage v. Maschmeyer, 72 Iowa, 696, 34 N. W. 482; State v. Brayman, 35 Kan. 714, 12 Pac. 111; Russell v. Muldraugh's Hill, etc, 13 Bush (Ky.) 307; Hebel v. Amazon Insurance Co., 33 Mich. 400; Hartford F. Insurance Co. v. Owen, 30 Mich. 441; U. S. Mutual Ins. Co. v. Reisinger, 43 Mo. App. 571; People v. Campbell, 22 Hun, 574; Sear v. Shanks, 9 N. D. 204, 82 N. W. 734; Neville v. Morgan, 10 Phila. (Pa.) 522; Leadbetter v. Kendall, Fed. Cas. No. 8,157a; The Martha Anne, Fed. Cas. No. 9,146, OLC. 18. See, also, 24 Cyc. 484, 485. The same rule obtains in this state. See Foster v. McAdams, 9 Tex. 542. See, also, Crawford v. Saunders, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 225, 29 S. W. 102; Horan v. Wahrenberger, 9 Tex. 313, 58 Am. Dec. 145; Stewart v. Smallwood (Tex. Civ. App.) 102 S. W. 159; and Peacock v. State, 37 Tex. Cr. R. 418, 35 S. W. 964. The justice has also authority to sit as a magistrate, but this is entirely distinct from his jurisdiction as justice of the peace. Code Cr. Proc. arts. 41, 62; Kerry v. State, 17 Tex. App. 178, 50 Am. Rep. 122.

Another proposition is that ordinarily one justice has no authority to take cognizance of proceedings within the jurisdiction of another justice; but in some states other justices, usually the nearest, are given jurisdiction over proceedings within the jurisdiction of another justice who has resigned or is disqualified, absent, or is some way legally disabled; but these statutes are to be strictly construed, and will not be extended to cases clearly not within their terms, and where by statute certain proceedings must be had before a proper justice, no other justice can take jurisdiction. See 24 Cyc. 493, and notes 85, 86, 87, and 88, for collated authorities. It is also settled that one justice of the peace, as such, cannot sit in the precinct of another justice, even when the other justice is absent. See Stewart v. Smallwood (Tex. Civ. App.) 102 S. W. 159. In no case can he take jurisdiction or cognizance of matters arising in another precinct where there is a resident justice of the peace capable of acting. Stewart v. Smallwood, supra; Horan v. Wahrenberger, supra; Moss v. State, 83 S. W. 829, 11 Tex. Ct. Rep. 763; Pyles v. State, 83 S. W. 811, 11 Tex. Ct. Rep. 732; Liggett v. State, 83 S. W. 807, 11 Tex. Ct. Rep. 764; Wilson v. State, 27 Tex. App. 47, 10 S. W. 749, 11 Am. St. Rep. 180. The three cases, supra, cited from the Texas Court Reporter arose in regard to whether the jurisdiction of the mayor's authority extended beyond his territorial limits. It was held where the case arose outside such limits, perjury assigned upon testimony delivered during the trial before the mayor could not afford the basis of a prosecution because of want of jurisdiction on the part of said officer to try such cases; that his action was coram non iudice. The latest utterance in regard to this matter is the case of Stewart v. Smallwood, supra. We quote from that case: "It is not disputed that John Fitzgerald, justice of the peace for precinct No. 1 of Fannin county, was absent at the time of filing this suit, and the issuance of the writ of attachment, and that T. J. Self, the justice of the peace of precinct No. 8, was the nearest justice of the peace in Fannin county. It is contended in argument that, when the justice of the peace is absent from his precinct, the nearest justice in the county has jurisdiction of all the cases which may be brought in the precinct of such absent justice, but such nearest justice cannot go out of his precinct and issue process, and make the same returnable to the court of the absent justice, but should make the same returnable to the court of said nearest justice of the peace; in other words, that there is no law authorizing a justice of the peace to go out of his precinct and issue process in another jurisdiction and make it returnable to that jurisdiction. We are of opinion that the intention of this statute is, in the case of the absence of the justice of the peace, to authorize and confer jurisdiction on the nearest justice of the peace in the county to perform the duties of such absent justice. The statute, however, does not confer power upon such nearest justice to go outside of his precinct, and to the office of such absent justice, and there perform such duties, but contemplates that the duties shall be performed in the precinct of such nearest justice. Crawford v. Saunders, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 225, 29 S. W. 102." If this is correct, and it follows the authorities in this state from the beginning, and if the justice of one precinct cannot go into the precinct of another justice of the peace and issue process in that precinct returnable before another justice, then the reasoning is infinitely stronger why the neighboring justice cannot go into the domain of an adjoining or other justice precinct where there is a resident authorized and qualified justice of the peace, and institute or hold courts of inquiry, under Code Cr. Proc. art. 941. The visiting justice of the peace would have no such authority under any provision of law in Texas. This construction of our constitutional and legislative provisions seems to have been followed from practically the beginning of our jurisprudence. We are not discussing how far the Legislature may go in fixing the territorial jurisdiction of justices of the peace. We are only discussing the statutes as we find them enacted.

We have only been discussing the authority of a justice of the peace as such, and acting in the capacity of justice of the peace holding courts of inquiry under article 941, Code Cr. Proc.; but such officer is presented in another light which we have not been discussing. But that matter is not involved in this case, if at all, in an indirect or negative way, but will notice it, as it may be so involved. That is: That such officer is as well clothed with authority to act as magistrate as justice of the peace, and that as magistrate he may hold an examining trial which as justice of the peace he cannot. There is no contention, however, and no fact going to show, that the justice of the peace in this case was acting in the capacity of magistrate. On the contrary, the uncontroverted facts show that he was acting only as justice of the peace, carrying on what may be termed a "court of inquiry," under and by virtue of article 941, Code Cr. Proc., supra. In other words, he was summoning before himself, as justice of the peace, witnesses solely for the purpose, and only with the view, of ascertaining if any crimes or violations of the law had been committed in the neighboring precinct into which he had gone, and it may be presumably with the further view, if the witnesses summoned before him in the court of inquiry developed any violations of the law, of having them to make affidavit for the arrest of such discovered violators or offenders. He had no case before him; he was investigating as justice of the peace, with a view and for the purpose of finding, or procuring, or originating, a case or cases. He was therefore not sitting as a magistrate in an examining trial, but only in his capacity as justice of the peace, ferreting out, or attempting to ferret out, crimes against unknown violators of the law. Our laws have clothed the justice of the peace with varied duties and powers, not only as justices of the peace, but as magistrates, coroners, and notaries public, and they have been assigned different relations, different duties, and the power and authority of such justices in each of these relations is different and entirely distinct from what it is in all of the other relations. As justice of the peace he may discharge certain duties, and in fact is required to discharge them, as justice of the peace, and not as notary public; as a notary public, certain duties as notary public, and not as justice of the peace; so, as coroner, and so, as magistrate. The Legislature has authority to pass laws investing the justice of the peace with these various duties and power, and to separate one from the other, and have so done. As magistrate he may hold an examining trial; reduce testimony to writing; remand parties to jail; discharge them; admit them to bail to await the action of the grand jury, etc. As notary public he could not; as justice of the peace he could not. As magistrate, however, he could. Code Cr. Proc. art. 41; Kerry v. State, 17 Tex. App. 178, 50 Am. Rep. 122. It has been held that the testimony taken before such magistrate sitting as an examining court may be used in subsequent trials under certain circumstances when the witness or witnesses have departed this life or have left the state; but this rule would not apply to evidence of a witness in a court of inquiry, for manifest reasons. Code Cr. Proc. art. 24; Kerry v. State, 17 Tex. App. 178, 50 Am. Rep. 122; Childers v. State, 30 Tex. App. 160, 16 S. W. 903, 28 Am. St. Rep. 899. Among others, the accused is not at the court of inquiry; he is not accused of any offense; he has not been arrested; nor has he been confronted with the witness. At the examining trial he has been arrested, and is confronted with the witnesses against him. In the examining court he must answer. At the court of inquiry he is not even accused, is absent, and cannot answer; he is not called upon to answer any accusation. At the court of inquiry, if the evidence of the witnesses summoned before the justice of the peace develop a sufficient case to authorize it, an affidavit is taken; a warrant of arrest issued; accused taken into custody; brought before the court for examination; and the witnesses are then called to face the accused in such examining trial. The justice of the peace is then, and not till then, a magistrate. So the difference between a court of inquiry and an examining court has a wide range of demarcation, and the justice of the peace sits in entirely different capacities in the two characters of duty.

Again, all judges of courts of appeal, district courts, county courts, and justices of the peace are magistrates. Code Cr. Proc. art. 41. It would hardly be contended that as a magistrate these judicial officers could issue writs of habeas corpus. If so, then a justice of the peace, by virtue of his office as a magistrate, would have as much authority to issue a writ of habeas corpus as a district judge, judge of the Court of Criminal Appeals, or judge on the supreme bench. It would not seriously be asserted that justices of the peace can issue writs of habeas corpus, and yet, under the statute, there seems to be no distinction in the office of magistrate between the justice of the peace and any of the higher or more elevated judicial officers. A writ of habeas corpus can only be issued where a judge has a right to do it: First, as a court; second, as a judge—and this may be in vacation—but never can it be issued by a magistrate as such. The Court of Criminal Appeals, as a court, has authority to issue writs of habeas corpus, and each member of the court is clothed with authority to grant writs of habeas corpus. Each member of the court is a magistrate under our law, and so defined in the same article of the statute with the justices of the peace. As a magistrate, however, it would not be asserted that any member of this court could issue a writ of habeas corpus. Until a very recent date the Supreme Court and its members could not issue or grant writs of habeas corpus, but this authority was conferred by the Legislature recently; but, at all times prior to such recent legislation, the members of that court have been magistrates, and could sit as such, but could not issue writs of habeas corpus. They could, however, as magistrates hold examining trials. So, then, the official character of a magistrate is as distinct as the law can make it from any other official character pertaining to judicial officers, or the discharge of any other official duty devolving upon such officer. And this is true from the justice of the peace upward to the most elevated judicial officer in Texas. The Legislature has exercised its authority in prescribing the duties of the justice of the peace in such relations as deemed proper. In the discharge of these various duties will be found the limit of jurisdiction. It only remains with the courts to uphold such legislation. The cases of Hart v. State, 15 Tex. App. 202, 49 Am. Rep. 188, and Childers v. State, 30 Tex. App. 180, 16 S. W. 903, 28 Am. St. Rep. 899, recognizes the correctness of this position, as does Evans v. State, 12 Tex. App. 370, and Kerry v. State, 17 Tex. App. 178, 50 Am. Rep. 122.

In the Hart case the justice of the peace was sitting as a magistrate conducting an examining trial in a cause pending before him, wherein Hart was charged with assault to murder, was sitting in the precinct of which he was justice of the peace, and taking the testimony as magistrate in an examining trial, as the statute directed, or authorized, such magistrates to do when sitting as examining court. He was holding his examining trial in precinct No. 1 as magistrate, and of which precinct he was presiding as justice of the peace. It became necessary in that case to go into a neighboring precinct to secure the testimony of the party who had been shot by Hart. He proceeded to the neighboring precinct, and took the testimony of the wounded man, not as justice of the peace, nor as a court of inquiry, but strictly as magistrate conducting an examining trial. The opinion sustained this action of the magistrate as reported supra. So in the Childers Case, supra. In that case the district judge had granted a writ of habeas corpus. Evidence was adduced before him as such judge presiding over the trial had under the writ of habeas corpus. Later on, when Childers was upon final trial before a jury, the state sought to introduce the evidence taken before the district judge on the habeas corpus trial, and it was admitted, but on appeal the judgment reversed for this alleged error, on the ground that testimony taken before a judge sitting in a habeas corpus proceeding could not be reproduced before the jury, because the statute limits the introduction of this character of evidence to depositions or testimony taken before a magistrate, and that the district judge sitting in a habeas corpus trial was not sitting or acting as a magistrate. See, also, Evans v. State, 12 Tex. App. 370. These cases clearly draw the distinction between a judge acting as a judge on habeas corpus proceedings, and the same person or officer acting as a magistrate in an examining trial. So the difference between the office of magistrate and that of justice of the peace is decidedly marked and evident. It is as distinctly marked where the justice of the peace is acting as magistrate, and where he is acting as justice of the peace, as is the difference in the authority of a district judge in a writ of habeas corpus and where the same judge is acting as magistrate.

Article 41, Code Cr. Proc., provides who are magistrates, as follows: "Either of the following officers is a 'magistrate' within the meaning of this Code: The judges of the Supreme Court, judges of the Courts of Appeals, the judges of the District Court, county judges of the county, either of the county commissioners, the justices of the peace, the mayor or recorder of an incorporated city or town." Article 42, Code Cr. Proc., clothes magistrates with authority to preserve the peace within their jurisdiction by the use of all lawful means, etc. Article 62, Code Cr. Proc., defines what it takes to constitute an examining court, thus: "When a magistrate sits for the purpose of inquiring into a criminal accusation against any person this is called 'an examining court.'"

Wherever a justice of the peace sits as an examining court, it has been held his jurisdiction is coextensive with the limits of his county. Hart v. State, 15 Tex. App. 202, 49 Am. Rep. 188; Kerry v. State, 17 Tex. App. 178, 50 Am. Rep. 122. But this does not constitute such justice or judge a justice of the peace under the terms of article 941, supra. In Kerry's Case Judge White, delivering the opinion of the court, used the following language: "A justice of the peace is a 'magistrate'. Code Cr. Proc. art. 41. When a justice sits for the purpose of inquiring into a criminal accusation against any person, he sits, not as a justice of the peace, but as a magistrate, and the court which he then holds is not a justice's, but an 'examining,' court. Code Cr. Proc. art. 62. When holding such a court, his functions as a magistrate are the same as those of the judges of the county, district, Supreme, or Court of Appeals, when they sit as magistrates to hold an examining trial. The same rules govern each." This decision very clearly draws the line, and marks the distinction between a justice of the peace, as such, and when he is acting under his authority as a magistrate. A magistrate can never act until he has a criminal action before him, and a criminal action must be prosecuted in the name of the state against the person accused, and is conducted by some officer or person acting under the authority of the state in accordance with its laws. Article 60, Code Cr. Proc. Therefore there must be a criminal action filed against the party before the justice of the peace can act as magistrate. This is not the condition under the terms of article 941, supra. Under the terms of the latter article, as before stated, the justice of the peace may inquire in regard to violations of the law in order to obtain a criminal action.

Article 25, Pen. Code 1895, reads as follows: "The word 'accused' is intended to refer to any person who, in a legal manner, is held to answer for any offense, at any stage of the proceedings or against whom complaint, in a lawful manner, is made, charging the commission of an offense, including all proceedings from the order for arrest to the final execution of the law; and the word 'defendant' is used in the same sense." So it would seem from this that a defendant is not accused until he has been charged with an offense, and he cannot be tried until he has been arrested, and therefore a magistrate cannot sit as an examining court, or conduct an examining trial, until he has the party under arrest and before him. Under article 941 as justice of the peace he may make inquiry as to violations of the law, and, after one has been discovered, complaint may be taken, process issued, and the arrest consummated; the prisoner brought before the court; and, if he has not final jurisdiction over it, he can resolve himself into an examining court or magistrate, but a prior accusation must be filed before he can obtain jurisdiction of such party as magistrate. In the case in hand, therefore, we say that the justice of the peace had no authority to go into the neighboring precinct to hold a court of inquiry. He was not acting as a magistrate, and could not do so as justice of the peace. Again, would it be contended that a judge of this or the Supreme Court could as a magistrate institute courts of inquiry under article 941, Code Cr. Proc.? Of course not. Why? Because the terms of that article limit the power to justices of the peace. They do not extend or include magistrates, county judges, district or higher judges.

There is another proposition in the case that would be fatal to the conviction independent of the jurisdictional matter. A bill of exceptions was reserved to the ruling of the court permitting the introduction of the confession of appellant while in jail, which seems to have been for the purpose of impeaching him while testifying in his own behalf. The bill, in substance, is as follows: That after appellant had stated he did not remember making the statement upon which the perjury was based, the state's counsel then asked him, for the purpose of impeachment, "Didn't you swear that [meaning the statements upon which the perjury is based] up there, and afterwards didn't you go before Mr. Lattimore, and go before the grand jury of this county, and if you did not go before it, and ask to go before it; and, if you did not there state that Jim Lewis persuaded you to make the statement that is made here, and you testified falsely, and that you wanted to correct it, and say that you saw the gambling from the start to finish"—and counsel for defendant interrupted, and asked the defendant the following question: "Were you under arrest at that time for this offense, and in charge of an officer?" To which defendant replied, "Yes, sir," and defendant then objected to said question, and any answer thereto, because it was an attempt to get a confession before the jury that was not a legal confession, it not being in writing and signed by the defendant, and not showing that he had been warned by the person to whom the same was made, and because it was pretending to lay a predicate to impeach the defendant by illegal testimony, and quite a number of other objections; and it was further asked by said state's attorney: "And when you came up there, if I didn't tell you this: 'Simon, I don't want you to make any statement before this grand jury. If you do make this statement, it will be used as evidence against you, and not for you; that it cannot help you in your case'—and after I told you that, didn't you go ahead and make this statement [the district attorney reading from a paper purporting to be the statements so made by defendant before the grand jury], and tell the grand jury that you wanted to tell them what was right; that you had lied there, and you wanted to go there and correct it? Defendant answered, 'I don't remember.' These statements were read from a paper by the district attorney to the witness, before the jury. The jury heard them all as read from the paper, and were evidently considered by them as evidence. They were not denied nor withdrawn, but left in that condition. No more dangerous way could be resorted to, to secure consideration of illegitimate and harmful evidence. This was not right, and ought not to have been permitted. This testimony was not admissible. The trial occurred on September 10, 1907, after the act of the Thirtieth Legislature had gone into effect on the 12th of July, 1907. This act provides that, where a party is under arrest, and his confession is sought to be used against him, the party being under arrest, it must be shown that it was a voluntary statement, taken before an examining court in accordance with law, or be made in writing and signed by him, which written statement shall show that he has been warned by the person to whom same is made: First, that he does not have to make any statement at all; second, that any statement made may be used in evidence against him on his trial for the offense concerning which the confession is therein made, or unless in connection with said confession, he makes statements of facts, or circumstances that are found to be true, which conduce to establish his guilt, such as the finding of secreted or stolen property, or the instrument with which he states the offense was committed, provided that, where the defendant is unable to write his name and sign the statement by making his mark, such statement shall not be admitted in evidence, unless it be witnessed by some person other than a peace officer, who shall sign the same as a witness. See Acts 30th Leg. 1907, pp. 219, 220, c. 118. This law had been in effect some time when this purported confession was sought to be used against appellant. Evidently the legislative intent here enunciated is that confessions, under the circumstances stated in this act, shall exclude all verbal confessions, except as provided in said act. The confession and statements here sought to be used and read to the jury are clearly outside of, and not included within, the provisions of said act of the Legislature. Even before the last act of the Legislature, this court had held that confessions of a party under arrest, made without warning, could not be used against him, even for the purpose of impeachment, citing

State, 29 Tex. App. 401, 16 S. W. 258, 25 Am. St. Rep. 730, which laid down a contrary rule.

Under the views enunciated above, it is unnecessary to discuss the remaining questions, though some of them seem to be well taken. As the case is presented to us, the judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded, and it is accordingly so ordered.

SMITH v. STATE.

(Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas. Dec. 12, 1908. Rehearing Denied March 20, 1909.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 594*)—CONTINUANCE—ABSENT WITNESS.

Application for continuance for absence of a witness was insufficient; there being filed, on motion for new trial, an affidavit by such witness that he would not, if present, have testified to the matters set up in the application, and that such statements were not true.

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 598*)—CONTINUANCE—ABSENT WITNESS.

Defendant may not have continuance for absence of a witness, who had not been served with subpoena and was under no obligation to attend, as was known to defendant at the preceding term.

3. HOMICIDE (§ 190*)—ASSAULT WITH INTENT—THREATS—PROOF OF REPUTATION.

The state, on a prosecution for assault with intent to murder, where defendant gives evidence of threats to kill him, made by P., the person assaulted, may prove the general reputation of P., as to whether he was of a violent or dangerous character or of a kind and inoffensive disposition; this being within the spirit of Pen. Code 1895, art. 713, though in terms it provides for evidence of character of "deceased" where one accused of murder seeks to justify on the ground of threats.

Appeal from District Court, Robertson County; J. C. Scott, Judge.

Henry Smith appeals from a conviction. Affirmed.

Bailey, Woods & Morehead, for appellant. F. J. McCord, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

RAMSEY, J. Appellant was indicted in the district court of Robertson county on a charge of assault with intent to murder one Scott Phillips. On trial he was convicted, and his punishment assessed at confinement in the penitentiary for a period of 10 years.

When the case was called for trial, appellant made an application for continuance on account of the absence and for the want of the testimony of two witnesses, Jim Rains and Fred Rumbeck, both of whom are alleged to reside in Robertson county. We think that the application is not sufficient as to Jim Rains, for the reason that on motion for new trial an affidavit was filed by the said Rains to the effect, in substance, that he would not, if present, have testified to the matters set up in defendant's application, nor were said statements true. We think the application was insufficient as to Fred Rumbeck for the reason that the proof taken on the hearing shows as a matter of fact that this witness was never subpoenaed, and that this fact was known, soon after the prosecution was instituted, to appellant. The application for a continuance, under consideration, was a second application. At a former term of the court an application had been made for continuance on account of the witness Rains. It appeared at that term of the court that, while the subpoena for Fred Rumbeck was returned as served on him, as a matter of fact it was not served, and, while the process was yet in the hands of the sheriff, appellant said to him that he need not delay matters, or trouble himself about serving a subpoena on Rumbeck; that he (appellant) would see personally as to his appearance as a witness. At the second term of the court, several months thereafter, the witnesses, including Rumbeck, not appearing, appellant asked for an attachment for them, including Rumbeck, which for some reason was not served, although it appears that Rumbeck was in the county at the time and reasonable diligence might have obtained his attendance. In view, however, of the fact that no subpoena had ever been served on Rumbeck, and he was under no obligation to attend as a witness, and that this fact was known at the preceding term to appellant, it seems to us that he was in no condition to ask or demand a continuance on account of the absence of this witness.

Complaint is made of the admission by the court of evidence as to the general reputation of Phillips. The matter arose in this way: The appellant had testified to certain threats, which he stated had been communicated to him by Rumbeck and Rains, on the part of Phillips to kill him. There were no witnesses to the difficulty, except Phillips. In view of the threats claimed by appellant to have been made by Phillips, the state, under article 713 of the Penal Code of 1895, offered in evidence proof of the general reputation of Phillips, as to whether he was a man of violent, dangerous character, or a man of kind and inoffensive disposition. Article 713 is as follows: "Where a defendant accused of murder seeks to justify himself on the ground of threats against his own life, he may be permitted to introduce evidence of the threats made, but the same shall not be regarded as affording a justification for the offense unless it be shown that at the time of the homicide the person killed by some act then done manifested an intention to execute the threat so made. In every instance where proof of threats has been made it shall be competent to introduce evidence of the general character of the deceased. Such evidence shall extend only to an inquiry as to whether the deceased was a man of violent or dangerous character, or a man of kind and inoffensive disposition, or whether he was such a person as might reasonably be expected to execute a threat made."

It is obvious that the testimony here introduced does not come within the letter of this statute, for the reason that the person assaulted was not killed, and the case does not, therefore, come within the statute, which seems to apply in its language to a case where the person assaulted died; but it seems clear to us that the evidence sought to be introduced does come within the spirit of this statute, and that in a case where an assault is claimed to be unlawfully made, and is sought to be justified on the ground of self-defense, superinduced by communicated threats, in arriving at the truth of this contention it should be permissible to introduce evidence of the general reputation of the person assaulted. In this case the parties were well acquainted, lived in the same neighborhood, and presumably appellant was acquainted with the reputation and character of Phillips in the respects mentioned. We think, after all, the statute is but declaratory of a general rule; and to limit it to cases of actual death of the person assaulted would be to nullify its salutary provisions. We think, therefore, and so hold, that this testimony was admissible.

The other questions raised in the case are not of important character, nor of such gravity as to demand discussion.

We think there was no error committed in the trial of the case, and that the judgment should be, as it is, in all things affirmed.

2. MONEY RECEIVED (§ 7*)—MONEY OBTAINED UNDER CLAIM OF RIGHT.

Where plaintiff in execution recovered from the first bidder, who failed to consummate the sale, the difference between his bid and the price obtained on the second sale, which, under the statute, belonged to defendant in execution, the execution defendant, not being a party to the action against the defaulting bidder, could recover from plaintiff in execution, in a proper proceeding, the amount wrongfully recovered in his action against the bidder.

Appeal from District Court, Jackson County; J. C. Wilson, Judge.

Suit by S. B. York against M. H. Shanley and another to enjoin the enforcement of an execution, in which the defendant named filed a cross-action. From a judgment for plaintiff in both actions, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Guy Mitchell and W. W. McCrory, for appellants. O. S. York, for appellee.

REESE, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of the district court enjoining appellants, M. H. Shanley, plaintiff in execution, and A. C. Egg, sheriff, from seeking to enforce an execution upon a certain judgment in favor of appellant Shanley against appellee York, and against Shanley on his cross-action. Shanley had sued out an execution upon a certain judgment in his favor against York, in a justice court of Hood county, which he claimed was unsatisfied. The execution had been placed in the hands of Egg as sheriff, who was proceeding to enforce the same by levy and sale of York's property, when York instituted this action to restrain them, and obtained a temporary injunction. In his petition York alleges that the judgment had been satisfied. The grounds of this contention will appear from the findings of fact by the trial court, which are set out in full, and which are contested by appellant. By his answer appellant Shanley contended that the facts so set out in the petition did not constitute payment of the judgment, and that the same was a valid, subsisting judgment. There is no statement of facts in the record. The findings of fact are not disputed, appellant resting his appeal upon the contention that the conclusions of fact do not support the conclusions of law, nor the judgment.

The conclusions of fact of the trial court, here adopted by us, are as follows:

"(1) On the 31st of October, 1898, M. H. Shanley, in a suit numbered 654, and styled 'M. H. Shanley v. S. B. York, in the Justice of the Peace Court of Precinct No. 1 of Hood County, Texas,' recovered a judgment against the plaintiff herein, S. B. York, for the sum of $151.50, with 10 per cent. interest thereon from the date of said judgment, and all costs of suit.

"(2) An abstract of this judgment was duly and regularly filed and recorded in the office of the county clerk of Jackson county, Tex., on the 27th day of February, 1899.

"(3) Execution was issued on said judgment soon thereafter, and levied upon the land of said S. B. York in Jackson county, Tex., and said land was by the sheriff of said Jackson county sold under said execution of the 6th day of February, 1900, and one C. Redman bid same in at said sale for the sum of $165.

"(4) Said C. Redman failed and refused to comply with the terms of said sale, and thereafter there was a second sale of said land, at which said land was sold for the sum of $1.

"(5) Soon after said second sale M. H. Shanley filed a motion in said justice of the peace court of precinct No. 1 of Hood county, Tex., in said suit No. 654, against C. Redman for 20 per cent. on the value of said property on which C. Redman had bid the sum of $165, and also for the sum of $164, which was the difference between the prices sold for on the first and second sales, and on the 30th of October, 1900, M. H. Shanley recovered a judgment in said justice of the peace court of precinct No. 1 of Hood county, Tex., on said motion in said suit No. 654 against C. Redman for the sum of $33, as a penalty of 20 per cent. on the value of the land sold under execution for his failure to comply with his bid thereon, and the further sum of $164, 'difference in the price realized upon the sale of said land under second sale from the sale wherein it was purchased by said C. Redman,' also 6 per cent. interest on said amounts from the date of said judgment.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

"(6) From said last-mentioned judgment of the justice of the peace court of precinct No. 1 of Hood county, Tex., C. Redman appealed to the county court of Hood county, Tex., in which court, upon a trial of cause, a judgment was rendered in favor of said M. H. Shanley against C. Redman for said sums of $33 penalty, and $164 difference in the price of the land at the first and second sales thereof. This last judgment the said C. Redman paid off in full, as shown by the receipt of the sheriff of Jackson county, Tex., acknowledging the receipt from said C. Redman of the sum of $211.21, 'the amount of the judgment and costs and interest in case No. 414/654, county court, Hood county, Tex., M. H. Shanley v. S. B. York et al.'

"(7) The first sale of the land of S. B. York to C. Redman, by the sheriff of Jackson county, by virtue of the execution issued upon the judgment for $151.50, in the justice of the peace court of precinct No. 1 of Hood county, Tex., M. H. Shanley v. S. B. York, being for payment and satisfaction of the said judgment against the said S. B. York, if said sale had been complied with by said C. Redman, the proceeds would have been applied to the satisfaction of said judgment, and would have been sufficient in amount to have satisfied said judgment, interest, and costs.

"(8) Execution was issued April 6, 1907, on the judgment of the justice of the peace court of precinct No. 1 of Hood county, Tex., by the justice of the peace thereof, in the cause No. 654, M. H. Shanley v. S. B. York, for $151.50, and directed to the sheriff of Jackson county, Tex., who levied said execution upon certain lands of the plaintiff, S. B. York, in Jackson county, Tex., and advertised the same for sale to satisfy said judgment and execution. Plaintiff sued out a writ of temporary injunction on the — day of May, 1907, to restrain said sale, and now seeks to perpetuate same."

Upon these conclusions of fact the trial court concluded, as matter of law, that appellant, not having the right to recover the difference between the amount realized upon first and second sales for his own benefit, said recovery and the payment of the judgment for this difference should be credited upon the judgment against York, and the same satisfied said judgment. The assignments of error attack this conclusion of law. The action invokes the equity jurisdiction and powers of the court, and the case presented, it seems to us, involves the question of whether the arm of equity, properly administered, is long enough to prevent what would clearly be an act of gross injustice if not of positive fraud.

It is indisputably clear, and is not attempted to be denied here, that there was no right of action in Shanley to recover in his own name, and for his own use, the difference between the amount bid by Redman at the first sale and the amount for which the property was sold at the second sale. Under the statute Redman's liability was to York. Rev. St. 1895, art. 2381. He was liable to appellant for 20 per cent. of the amount of the judgment, by way of damages, for failure to comply with his bid, to be recovered on motion in the original suit, and this appellant did recover, and was entitled to. It is not pretended that appellee had in any way transferred to appellant his cause of action against Redman. Just upon what ground the court in Hood county proceeded, in awarding appellant a recovery of this difference, and upon motion in the original suit, we cannot determine, but the only ground we can conceive of is that, as Redman owed York this amount, and York owed Shanley the original judgment, it was sought in this way, by a species of garnishment, not set down in the books, to reach and condemn this amount to be applied on the judgment against York. It is clear that by means of this proceeding appellant received $164 which really belonged to appellee. Appellee not having been a party to that proceeding, we think it clear that he could, by a timely proceeding, have compelled appellant to surrender this money. If Redman had voluntarily paid this money to appellant, without appellee's consent, under the mistaken view that it belonged to appellant, appellee would have had a right of action against appellant for the recovery of the same. If A. owes B., and, under a mistaken belief that C. is entitled to the money, A. pays it to C., without the consent of B., surely B. could recover it from C. It is true that such payment would not relieve A. of liability to B. B. would have his remedy against both of them. It would not, we think, at least in equity, affect essential merits of the question that A. does not voluntarily make such payment, but is compelled, by a proceeding not binding on B., to do so, as in this case. The substance of the whole matter is that appellant has received and appropriated money belonging to appellee sufficient to pay the judgment. It adds to the force of appellee's contention that there is a strong suggestion that he recovered it on the ground that he was entitled to it as a creditor of appellee.

This is in no sense, we think, a collateral attack upon the Hood county judgment. Equity simply intervenes to compel that to be done which every principle of justice and fair dealing requires to be done.

We think the conclusion of the trial court was correct, and that the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

Conclusions.

SPEER, J. This appeal presents the same question as that decided by us in Price v. White (No. 5,665) 117 S. W. 484, which is whether or not a real estate broker employed to make a sale of his principal's land has earned his commission when he has procured a purchaser who is ready, able, and willing to buy on the terms offered and enters into an enforceable contract to that effect, but who subsequently fails or refuses to comply. We there held that in such a case, if the owner chose not to enforce the contract with the purchaser, it was no fault of the broker, and that the commissions were earned. We are not aware of the question's having been specifically decided in this state by any other court, but the Court of Appeals of Illinois in the cases of Greene v. Hollingshead, 40 Ill. App. 195, and Lang v. Hand, 57 Ill. App. 134, has very clearly announced the rule in accordance with our holding in the case referred to. The contract between the owner and the purchaser in the present case stipulated for a sum as liquidated damages for its breach, but, if it could be held that this represented the measure of the owner's recovery for a breach, still that would not alter the rights of appellants, since their principal saw fit to accept the contract containing such stipulation, and presumably contemplated his liability to them as a part of the damages which he would sustain in the event the purchaser failed to comply with his undertaking.

The judgment of the county court is therefore reversed and here rendered for appellants for the sum of $800, the amount shown by the undisputed evidence to have been agreed upon between the parties as commissions in the event of a sale.

Reversed and rendered.

On Rehearing.

Appellee could have elected to insist on a specific performance of the contract to purchase notwithstanding the stipulation for a forfeit as liquidated damages, since the parties evidently contemplated that the transfer of the land was the principal consideration, while the provision for a forfeit was a means of enforcing a compliance. 1 Pom. 3. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS (§ 89*) — PLEADING — ANSWER — CONSTRUCTION.

Where the petition seeks to set aside a deed not only on the ground of insanity of plaintiff when it was executed, but also on the ground of imposition and fraud, proceeding on the theory of her sanity, acts of ratification by plaintiff alleged in the answer, denying insanity and fraud, do not necessarily have reference to her being insane.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Cancellation of Instruments, Cent. Dig. § 82; Dec. Dig. § 39.*]

4. PLEADING (§ 364*)—MOTION TO STRIKE OUT IMMATERIAL MATTER.

Where, on a motion to strike out an allegation of the answer as immaterial and irrelevant, it did not appear so, in view of a pleading in the answer of ratification, refusal of the motion was not error, though the feature of ratification was afterwards eliminated by its not being submitted to the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 1156; Dec. Dig. § 364.*]

5. PLEADING (§ 32*) — ALLEGATIONS AS TO WRITTEN INSTRUMENTS — DATE.

An allegation in the answer as to an agreement is not objectionable as not giving its date; it being evident that the agreement is the one previously pleaded in the answer as of the date of the deed sought by the petition to be set aside.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 57; Dec. Dig. § 32.*]

6. EVIDENCE (§ 419*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—CONSIDERATION OF DEED.

Inadequacy of the consideration being alleged by the petition as a ground for the relief sought, the setting aside of a deed, defendant may plead and prove the real consideration, including more than recited in the deed.

7. WITNESSES (§ 237*)—EXAMINATION—QUESTION CALLING FOR FACT.

Objection to the question, "State how she is with regard to remembering and being influenced by parties," that there were no facts offered to show that she was easily influenced, was not good, as the answer, which, but for the sustaining of the objection, would have been, that she was easily influenced, would have been a statement of a fact.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1057*)—HARMLESS ERROR.

Sustaining an objection to a question to plaintiff's witness H., as to plaintiff being easily influenced, was harmless, where H. was an interested witness, and at least two disinterested witnesses testified to the same fact, notwithstanding which the jury found against plaintiff, and H. otherwise testified fully as to plaintiff's condition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4194-4196; Dec. Dig. § 1067.*]

9. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 760*)—BRIEF—REFERENCES TO RECORD—SHOWING OBJECTIONS.

An assignment of error to exclusion of testimony cannot be considered; the brief referring to no bill of exceptions, and, though it refers to the statement of facts, and it there appears objection to the testimony was sustained and exception was taken to such action, no mention being made of the ground of objection.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3065; Dec. Dig. § 760.*]

10. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 837*) — MATTERS WHICH CAN BE CONSIDERED.

In passing on the question of error in exclusion of evidence, reference cannot be had to an allegation of a pleading properly stricken therefrom.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3262; Dec. Dig. § 837.*]

11. INSANE PERSONS (§ 26*) — ADJUDICATION OF INSANITY — EFFECT ON PRIOR ACTS.

A judgment adjudging one of unsound mind, as preliminary to granting guardianship, is not admissible in a suit to set aside, on the ground of insanity, her deed executed a year before.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insane Persons, Cent. Dig. § 36; Dec. Dig. § 26.*]

12. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS (§ 52*)—VERDICT—SPECIAL ISSUES—TEST OF SANITY.

The issue submitted to the jury in a suit to set aside plaintiff's conveyance of land to defendants was: At the time she executed the deed, did she have the mental capacity to and was she capable of understanding that by the execution of it she was parting with her title to the property and vesting title thereto in defendants for the consideration claimed by them? Held, that there was no foundation for the criticism thereof that the proper test was her mental capacity to understand the nature and effect of the transaction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Cancellation of Instruments, Cent. Dig. § 106; Dec. Dig. § 52.*]

13. TRIAL (§ 352*)—SPECIAL ISSUE—CONFORMITY TO PLEADING AND EVIDENCE.

A special issue: Did plaintiff, when she executed the deed to defendants, believe she was simply making a contract by the terms of which they were to have the use of land for taking care of her—was based on the pleadings and evidence; the petition setting up fraud and imposition in the obtaining of the deed, and under this the proof of fraud and imposition being, in substance, that she did not understand that she was signing a deed, and that she was led to believe that they were to have the use of the land for taking care of her.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 840, 851½; Dec. Dig. § 352.*]

14. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS (§ 52*)—VERDICT—SPECIAL ISSUES—FRAUD.

The special issue: Did plaintiff, when she executed the deed to defendants, believe she was simply making a contract by the terms of which they were to have the use of the land for taking care of her—cannot be complained of by plaintiff, in a suit to set aside a deed for fraud, as not submitting the proper test as to whether fraud had been practiced on her; it, if anything, being too liberal to her.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Cancellation of Instruments, Cent. Dig. § 106; Dec. Dig. § 52.*]

15. DEEDS (§ 99*)—CONSTRUCTION—CONSTRUCTING INSTRUMENTS TOGETHER.

A deed and a contract, executed at the same time, as part of the consideration of the deed, whereby the grantees agreed to move onto the land and there give the grantor a home and support her, are to be considered as though the contract were incorporated in the deed.

Appeal from District Court, Bexar County; J. L. Camp, Judge.

Action by Anna Uecker against John Zuercher and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Gunn & McNeill, for appellant. Sallaway & McAskill, for appellees.

JAMES, C. J. The first amended original petition was by Anna Uecker to cancel a deed, executed by her on May 16, 1906, to the appellees, reciting the consideration of $200 cash and a vendor's lien note for $2,000, upon the ground that at the time she executed it she was incompetent to do so by reason of the weakness of her mind to comprehend and understand the nature of the transaction or the effect of the instrument. This pleading alleged, also, that the consideration received by her was insufficient and inadequate, that she signed it under a misapprehension of its contents, brought about by the fraud and deception of defendants, and that they also misrepresented to her the force and effect of said instrument and its consideration. The answer denied any mental weakness or incompetency on her part, or fraud on the defendants' part. That, in addition to the consideration stated in the deed, there was a further consideration for the land; same being set out in a contract in writing of same date reciting a small consideration, wherein defendants agreed to support, maintain, and keep the said Anna Uecker during her life. That the agreement set out in the written contract, and the further oral agreement that they would move on the ranch and give her a home there, was a part of the consideration to be received by her for the land. Defendants further pleaded that plaintiff had ratified the deed by various acts, such as living with the defendants and accepting interest payments on the $2,000 note. There were supplemental pleadings, but the above is the statement of the pleadings given in appellant's brief and adopted as correct by appellees. The case was submitted by special issues, with verdict for defendants.

It appears that the amended original petition was filed by Anna Uecker. It appears further that Herman Harms, a son of plaintiff, subsequently filed a petition suggesting the mental incapacity of Anna Uecker, praying to be permitted to come in and prosecute the action in her name and behalf as next friend. The court appears to have allowed this to be done, as the decree shows. In his said petition Harms alleged, among other things: "That on the — day of May, 1907, she (Anna Uecker) was formally adjudged to be of unsound mind by the probate court of Bexar county, Tex., and this petitioner was duly appointed and confirmed by said court as guardian of her person and estate, which action of the court the said defendants Zuerchers contested, and by writ of certiorari have appealed said cause for revision and correction and filed bond superseding said judgment of the probate court, which appeal is now pending." This allegation was stricken out on demurrer, and this is the complaint of the first assignment of error. Inasmuch as it appeared from the allegation that the order of the probate court had been vacated by the certiorari proceeding, and the appointment was not in effect, there was no error in the ruling. Railway v. Jackson Bros., 85 Tex. 605, 22 S. W. 1030.

The second assignment complains that the court refused to strike out, upon an exception, the fourth clause of the third amended answer. The first proposition is overruled for the reason that it appears that the allegation claimed to be omitted from the clause is alleged elsewhere in the pleading. The second proposition is this: "When a person is insane at the time she enters into a contract, subsequent acts supposed to be in ratification of the original contract cannot be shown, without first alleging and proving that the insane party has been restored to reason at the time of such acts of ratification." Inasmuch as the issue of ratification was not submitted, there is nothing substantial or pertinent in the proposition. Besides this, the petition sought to set aside the deed also on the ground of imposition and fraud (proceeding upon the theory of her sanity), and acts of ratification on her part would not necessarily have reference to her being insane.

The third assignment complains of the overruling of an exception to this clause of the answer: "And for further answer these defendants state: That they did not wrongfully go into possession of this property, but say that John Zuercher and Mrs. Anna Uecker, the mother of his wife, peacefully went into possession of same because he was the owner of same, and because of an agreement with his mother-in-law that he was to move thereon and give her a home upon the ranch; that he had agreed to do this, and she asked and requested him to move thereon; and that she wanted, in her old age, to return to the ranch where she had spent nearly all her life and remain the balance of her life." The exception to this was that it did not show when such agreement was made, or the consideration therefor, that it was immaterial and irrelevant, and attempts to inject into the case an immaterial issue, that it was argumentative, and a pleading of the evidence. It should be borne in mind that this answer contained pleading of a ratification of the sale. True, this feature was afterwards eliminated by not submitting such matter to the jury, but at the time this exception was presented the allegation contained in the clause did not appear to be irrelevant, immaterial, and foreign to the issues made by the pleadings. It is also contended that this clause should have shown the time such agreement was made, and the consideration therefor, in order that its connection with the main transaction may be seen and its relevancy and materiality arrived at. We find that elsewhere in the answer it was alleged that plaintiff moved with John Zuercher "to the ranch and has made her home there in accordance with the agreement, and getting her rights under a valid agreement, forming a consideration for the conveyance." It is evident that the agreement referred to was the one alleged as being a part of the consideration of the deed.

The fourth assignment relates to another exception, the nature of which is disclosed by appellant's proposition: "The tenth paragraph of defendants' answer sets up a consideration for the land in addition to that named in the written instrument executed by the parties at the time, and inconsistent and contradictory of the terms of such written instrument, and for that reason should have been stricken out." Appellant is evidently contending that no consideration for the land could be shown except that expressed in the deed of conveyance. Inadequacy of consideration is alleged by plaintiff as a ground or circumstance connected with the relief asked, and in such a case we know of no rule denying defendant the right to plead and prove the real consideration.

The fifth is that the court erred in sustaining objection to the question propounded to Harms: "State how she is with regard to remembering and being influenced by parties." He would have answered that she was easily influenced. The objection was that there were no facts offered to show that she was easily influenced. The objection was not a good one, as the answer would have been the statement of a fact. The evidence was perhaps admissible, but we have come to the conclusion that it is apparent that plaintiff's case was not prejudiced by the ruling. In the first place, Harms was an interested witness, and there were at least two disinterested witnesses who testified to the fact, and yet the jury found against plaintiff. In the second place, Harms' testimony in reference to plaintiff's condition, concerning which he testified very fully, was not accepted by the jury, and it is not to be supposed, from what is said above, that, if he had been allowed to give the additional testimony objected to, it would have made any difference in the result.

The sixth assignment complains of the exclusion of certain testimony by Harms and others. The brief refers us to no bill of exception. It does refer to the statement of facts where we find that the court sustained defendants' objection to this testimony, and, the objection being sustained, plaintiff excepted. No mention, however, is made of the ground of the objection. Ingenhuett v. Hunt, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 248, 39 S. W. 310.

The seventh complains of the admission of testimony of H. B. Sallaway of conversations between him and plaintiff in his office in reference to the terms of the deed and agreement entered into by her and the defendants. The eighth complains of similar testimony by witnesses Mathews and John Zuercher. The proposition advanced is that, the deed and agreement having been reduced to writing, parol testimony was inadmissible to vary, add to, or contradict the same. The testimony of H. B. Sallaway, as it is copied in appellant's brief under the seventh assignment, does not vary or contradict the terms of the writings, and the testimony of the other two witnesses is stated in the brief as being substantially the same.

The ninth complains of the exclusion of evidence contained in the probate records showing that since the making of the deed and contract Anna Uecker had been held non compos mentis, that Harms had been appointed the guardian of her person and estate, and that said judgment had not been set aside and annulled. This evidence was objected to upon the ground that it was immaterial, foreign to the issue before the court, and could not be res judicata, had nothing to do with the case, and that same took place about one year subsequent to the making of the deed. The proposition contended for is that such an adjudication was admissible for the purpose of showing mental unsoundness. We cannot, in passing on this question, have reference to the pleading of Harms, which alleged that the judgment of the probate court had been superseded by an appellate proceeding, because that part of his pleading had been stricken from it. We must take it for granted that plaintiff would have shown, as the bill shows he offered to do, that the judgment had not been set aside or annulled in any manner, and therefore the question seems to be squarely presented as to the admissibility of such a judgment, rendered a year after the deed in question was executed, as evidence relevant to the question of the grantor's sanity a year previous. The courts have adopted a liberal rule of admitting evidence of acts, conduct, etc., of the person, both prior and subsequent to the time of the execution of the instrument in question, in inquiries of this nature. As stated in Hamburger v. Rinckel, 164 Mo. 398, 64 S. W. 106: "Evidence of the condition of the mind of the testator before and after making a will is admitted of course for the sole purpose of shedding light upon his mental condition at the time of executing the will." See, also, Williams v. Sapieha (Tex. Civ. App.) 62 S. W. 72. The acts, conduct and peculiarities, etc., of the person before and after the time are allowed.

The judgment offered was evidently one adjudging plaintiff of unsound mind, as preliminary to the granting of guardianship of her person and estate. The determination of her mental capacity for that purpose was a matter within the jurisdiction of the county judge, but it was nothing more than an adjudication of her condition at that time. Perhaps the evidence on that hearing was much the same as that in this record, and it probably was, for there was evidence on this trial that no changes have taken place in plaintiff's condition for a considerable period. It seems to us an unsound and dangerous rule which would permit either side to use the judgment of the county judge to strengthen the facts. We presume that, if the county judge had ruled that plaintiff was of sound mind and had refused to appoint a guardian, appellees would have endeavored to have the prestige of that court's views to fortify their theory of the evidence. We think that while subsequent acts, conduct, etc., of the party are proper evidence, a subsequent judgment, such as we have here, declaring the person to be of unsound mind at that later time, is not. Such judgment is in no sense the act or conduct of the party, and to allow it to be used as testimony would tend to the substitution of the judgment of the county judge upon the facts for that of the jury who were there to try this case. It has been decided in this state that a contract made with one who has been adjudged insane and is under guardianship is void (Elston v. Jasper, 45 Tex. 409); but it has not been held in this state that a contract is affected in any manner by such proceedings had after the making of the contract, nor that such subsequent proceedings can be looked to as a material fact in determining the state of the party's mind when the contract was made. What is said by the Supreme Court in Boehme v. Sovereign Camp, 98 Tex. 876, 84 S. W. 422, and in McCamant v. Roberts, 66 Tex. 260, 1 S. W. 260, is not in line with the view that the subsequent judgment sought to be used in this case was any evidence of insanity of plaintiff when she executed the papers in question. In a case similar to this the Supreme Court of Missouri stated: "It is claimed by defendant that, as the inquest was held subsequently to the exchange of the properties, it was not competent evidence against defendant. The record was clearly inadmissible. The inquest was a judicial proceeding after the trade. Defendant was not a party to it, had no connection with it, and his rights previously acquired could in no possible way be affected thereby. It raised no presumption as against him of Rhoades' insanity at the time of the trade, which was consummated something over 20 days before the date of the inquest." Rhoades v. Fuller, 139 Mo. 179, 40 S. W. 760. This accords with our views and determines the tenth assignment also.

The eleventh assignment complains of the first issue submitted, which was as follows: "At the time Mrs. Anna Uecker executed the deed in evidence before you, and in which she conveyed her ranch property to the defendants, John and Wm. Zuercher, did she have the mental capacity to and was she capable of understanding that by the execution of the said deed she was parting with her title to said ranch property and vesting title to same in said defendants, John and Wm. Zuercher, for the consideration claimed by them?" The answer was, "Yes." It is contended that the proper test was her mental capacity to understand the nature and effect of the transaction. As the transaction in question was a conveyance of land, in its nature and effect, we are unable to perceive any foundation for this criticism.

The second special issue was as follows, to be answered if the above was answered in the affirmative: "Did the plaintiff, Mrs. Anna Uecker, at the time she executed the deed to John and Wm. Zuercher, believe she was simply making a contract with said defendants, John and Wm. Zuercher, by the terms of which they, the said John and Wm. Zuercher, were to have the use of said ranch free of rent, for taking care of her?" This was answered, "No." The propositions are: (1) That this charge was not based on the pleadings and evidence. The petition set up fraud and imposition in the obtaining of the deed. Under this the proof of fraud and imposition was, in substance, that she did not understand that she was signing a deed, and that she was led to believe that they were to have the use of the ranch for taking care of her. The court did not err in submitting the very contention made by the evidence on this issue. (2) The question was erroneous in not submitting the proper test as to whether or not fraud had been practiced upon plaintiff. The submission was, if anything, too liberal to plaintiff. If the question had been answered in the affirmative, it was evidently the purpose of the court to enter judgment upon it for plaintiff, and this upon the simple finding that she believed when she made the deed that she was making such a contract, even though she had her full faculties. Requiring the jury to further find fraud inducing such belief would have rendered the submission less effective in appellant's favor. As it resulted, however, the jury found she labored under no such idea, and unless she did the issue of fraud could not have been resolved in her favor. These remarks dispose of the twelfth, thirteenth, and fourteenth assignments.

The fifteenth is overruled for the reason that there was no necessity of the jury answering the third question after answering the others as they did.

The sixteenth assignment is overruled. The deed and the contract were executed at the same time and formed one transaction. The latter was a part of the consideration for the deed, and in legal contemplation had the same effect as if it had been incorporated in the deed, instead of being taken and considered separate from the deed and destructive of it.

Judgment affirmed.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. March 11, 1909. On Rehearing, March 25, 1909.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 39*)—ACCOUNTING—LIMITATIONS—"ACTION."

Rev. St. 1896, art. 2766, provides that the court shall, upon its own motion or upon the written complaint of any one interested, cause a guardian to be cited to file his final account, and article 2770 provides that, after citation, the court shall examine the account, and, if correct, direct the guardian to pay over the estate to the ward. Article 8358 requires every action other than for the recovery of land, for which no limitation is otherwise prescribed, to be brought within four years. Held, that neither article 3358 nor the two-year statute of limitations includes proceedings to compel a guardian to render a final account, such proceedings not being an "action" within the statute, nor did the filing of exceptions to the account by the ward and the hearing thereon, as permitted by statute, constitute an "action" within the statute.

2. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 145*)—ACCOUNTING—LIMITATIONS.

Rev. St. art. 3357, requiring suit on a guardian's bond to be brought within four years after discharge by the court, has no application to proceedings under article 2766 to compel a guardian to file his final account, though the bondsmen became parties in opposition thereto, and such proceedings, brought four years and nine months after the ward became of age, could not be said to be brought too late, section 2766 not barring such proceedings within any definite time.

4. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 137*)—ACCOUNTING—NATURE OF DUTY TO ACCOUNT.

The final settlement of a guardian's accounts by the probate court arises from the trust relationship of the guardian, and is for the purpose of securing a detailed statement of the guardian's accounts showing the balance of receipts and disbursements of the estate in his possession.

6. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 137*)—ACCOUNTING—DUTY.

Under the statute, the guardian must render an account to the court for final settlement and discharge when the ward becomes 21 years old, and is not entitled to an absolute discharge until he has submitted an accounting.

9. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 601*)—RECORD—STATEMENT OF FACTS—ORIGINAL STATEMENT OR COPY.

Under Act May 25, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 509, c. 24), requiring the original statement of facts to be sent up on appeal, that is the only statement that can be considered on appeal, the clerk not being authorized to certify a copy, and, unless the parties by agreement waive the original and substitute a copy, the appellate court cannot assume that what purports to be a statement of facts, is a true copy thereof.

10. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 162*)—ACCOUNTING—OPPOSITION—COSTS.

Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 2785, authorizing the taxing of costs against any one who makes opposition and is defeated, where a guardian's sureties voluntarily became parties in opposition to proceedings against the guardian for an accounting, the costs of the appeals from the county court to the circuit court were properly taxed against the sureties and guardian on judgment against them.

11. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 159*)—ACCOUNTING—DECREE—SURETIES AS PARTIES—INCLUDING SURETIES' NAMES IN FINDINGS AGAINST GUARDIAN.

In proceedings against a guardian for a final accounting, in which the bondsmen made themselves parties without citation and defended the guardian's account, the decree properly found the amount due both against the bondsmen and the guardian, the former not being entitled to complain that they were named therein, since under Rev. St. 1895, art. 2770, authorizing the court to examine the account for final settlement after citation had been served, objections heard, etc., and enter a decree directing payment over of the estate, and article 2771, authorizing the court to correct the account and have it restated, if incorrect, a settlement of the account is conclusive against the bondsmen, even without citation.

Appeal from District Court, Lampasas County; John M. Furman, Judge.

Proceedings by Eugenia G. Burrell and others against E. E. Whitfield and others to compel a final accounting by a guardian. From a decree for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

By order of the probate court of Lampasas county, Tex., made April 8, 1890, appellant E. E. Whitfield was appointed guardian of the person and estate of Eugenia G. Whitfield and Ethel M. Whitfield, minors, and he duly qualified as such guardian. On May 22, 1907, said Eugenia G. Burrell (née Whitfield), joined by her husband, filed in the probate court of Lampasas county a complaint in writing complaining to such court that said guardian had never made and rendered any annual account of his guardianship, or settlement in any manner, of his transactions as such guardian, and had failed and refused to settle with complainant for her estate; that she was now a married woman; and prayed that an order be made citing the said guardian to appear and file his final account of settlement as such guardian, and for an order directing him to pay and deliver to complainant such money and property as she was entitled to have. The application also asked for his accounting with Ethel M. Whitfield, who was still a minor. After service of citation the guardian appeared at the regular term of the probate court and answered by general denial and a plea of the statute of two and four years' limitation in bar of the right to have final accounting, and, without waiving his plea of limitation, tendered an account in final settlement. The probate court passed the accounting as to Ethel, a minor, and determined the accounting as to appellee only. The appellee entered a contest to some of the items in the account of the guardian; and, after hearing evidence thereupon, the court entered an order restating the account as filed and presented by the guardian, and, after approving and allowing certain disbursements by the guardian, decreed that by a full and fair settlement of accounts the guardian has in his possession as due the appellee the sum of $2,644, and "which said sum he, the said

E. E. Whitfield, is hereby ordered and directed to at once pay over to said Eugenia G. Burrell; and upon compliance with this order said E. E. Whitfield shall be discharged and said guardianship closed, so far as the same affects said Eugenia G. Burrell." From the order of the probate court the appellant and the sureties on his guardian's bond appealed to the district court. The sureties on the guardian's bond seem, from the record, to have voluntarily appeared and made themselves parties to these proceedings in the probate court. In the district court a decree was entered upon trial fixing the amount of the property in money after allowing certain disbursements due by the guardian to appellee, and directing the guardian to pay over the same to the appellee, and upon the payment of the same that he be fully discharged by reason of his guardianship; and further ordered that the decree be certified to the county court for observance. From this decree so entered by the district court an appeal was prosecuted to this court by the guardian and his sureties.

L. C. McBride, for appellants. W. D. Abney, for appellees.

LEVY, J. (after stating the facts as above). Appellant Whitfield, the guardian, pleaded limitations in bar of the proceedings, and complains, by proper assignments of error, that the court erred in not sustaining the pleas. The court in his decree finds, and we consider that finding, that appellee, the ward, became 21 years old on August 24, 1902. The application to the probate court in this case was filed in the probate court on May 22, 1907. Appellant contends that this is an action to which article 3358 of the limitation statute (Rev. St. 1895) would apply in bar. The application in this record on which the proceedings in this case were founded was under authority of article 2766, Rev. St. 1895, which provides: "Should the guardian fail to file his account for final settlement at the proper time, the court shall, upon its own motion, or upon the complaint in writing of any one interested in the estate, cause such guardian to be cited to appear at a regular term of the court and file such account." The order of the probate court was entered in accordance with article 2770, which says: "After citation has been duly served the court shall proceed to examine the account for final settlement, and to hear all exceptions and objections thereto, if any, and the evidence in support of and against such account, and if the same is found to be fair, just and correct an order shall be entered upon the minutes approving it and directing the guardian to deliver the estate remaining in his hands to the ward or other person legally authorized to receive the same, and upon compliance with such order the guardian shall be discharged, and such guardianship closed by an order to that effect upon the minutes." By article 3358, which appellant insists is applicable to these proceedings, it is provided: "Every action other than for the recovery of real estate, for which no limitation is otherwise prescribed, shall be brought within four years next after the right to bring the same shall have accrued, and not afterward." The "every action" in this article does not include nor mean the demand by the probate court of the guardian, as in these instant proceedings, for a final accounting of his transactions about the estate of his ward during his ward's minority. Such special proceeding by the probate court is not an action within the meaning of the article just quoted. All the limitation statutes employ the words "action" and "suit." As was said in Webb v. Allen, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 605, 40 S. W. 342, "Actions" and "suits," as generally used in these limitation statutes, are synonymous and interchangeable terms." "Suit" is defined in Ex parte Towles, 48 Tex., at page 433. The accounting "for final settlement" by the probate court arises from the trust relation of guardian, and is within and under the power and control of the probate court. Such proceedings constitute a process of returning a detailed statement of the accounts of the fiduciary relation, showing the balance of receipts and disbursements of the estate in his possession. The decree of the court in respect thereto operates as an account stated between ward and guardian, as well as the formal release from the trust upon such account. It is the duty of the guardian under the statute, when his ward arrives at 21 years of age, to render his account to the court for final settlement and discharge. It is within the power of the probate court to inquire into and determine whether the same as rendered be fair, just, and correct. Sheffield v. Goff, 65 Tex. 354. The probate court having the power to appoint the guardian, such court retains jurisdiction and control over him to terminate the appointment in the way provided by statute. Marlow v. Lacy, 68 Tex. 154, 2 S. W. 52; Logan v. Robertson (Tex. Civ. App.) 83 S. W., at page 397. The guardian is not entitled to an absolute discharge of his trust by the court until he has submitted his final account or settlement with the court. The fact that the ward has reached majority does not deprive the probate court of its jurisdiction over the guardian to compel and enforce an accounting of his guardianship about the estate during the ward's minority. This article (2766) continues the control and jurisdiction of the probate court over the guardian for final accounting during the ward's minority, and expressly authorizes the court either "upon its own motion, or upon the complaint in writing of any one interested in the estate," to cause the guardian to appear and at a regular term of the court file such account.

The article does not undertake to limit the length of time after the ward becomes of age that the court shall have power and control over the guardian as to the settlement of such account; neither does it provide that, where a guardian has failed in his duty to file such account immediately upon the ward's arriving at the age of 21 years, the lapse of any given period of time thereafter furnishes a bar to the enforcement of an accounting by the probate court. In the absence of express provision of law restricting the time when the probate court can exercise its power to inquire into and investigate the transactions of the guardian during the ward's minority after the ward becomes of age, the courts cannot rule that the probate court cannot so exercise its power within the time shown by the facts of this case. There is a provision of law that compels suits on the guardian's bond within four years after discharge by the court. Article 3357, Rev. St. 1895; Allen v. Stovall, 94 Tex. 619, 63 S. W. 863, 64 S. W. 777. This is the only provision of the statutes of limitation that has express relation to guardians, but the same has no application to the proceedings in this case. It is true that the statute provides that the ward may appear and file exceptions to the account of the guardian, and authorizes the probate court to hear evidence in support of or against such account; but such answer merely constitutes opposition to the account as rendered, requiring the scrutiny of the court as to the claim of the guardian. Such opposition, however, does not constitute the proceeding before the court an "action" in the sense of suit or case, within the meaning of the article of limitation above quoted. We are of the opinion that neither the four nor two years' statute of limitations, as insisted by appellants, would apply to this proceeding; and the first and second assignments of error are overruled.

The third, fourth, fifth, and sixth assignments cannot properly be reviewed in the absence of a statement of the facts. There is no statement of facts in the record that we are authorized to consider, except the findings and the decree of the trial court as far as made by him. It is required by the act of May 25, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 509, c. 24), that the original statement of facts, signed and approved in terms of the act, be the statement of facts to be considered in the case on appeal by the appellate courts. Garrison v. Richards (Tex. Civ. App.) 107 S. W. 863; Ry. v. Stoker (Tex.) 113 S. W. 3. The clerk is not authorized to certify to a copy; and unless the parties to the suit by agreement waive the original, and by agreement substitute a copy, the appellate court cannot assume that what purports to be a statement of the facts is a true copy of all the facts upon which the disposition of the case should be made to rest, or of the material facts in-involved. Bean v. Bird (Tex. Civ. App.) 115 S. W. 121.

The seventh assignment is overruled. The judgment of the district court, which it had power to render on appeal, for costs of the appeal from the county court against the guardian and his bondsmen, with execution therefor, was proper, the sureties having voluntarily become parties to the proceedings and made opposition thereto. Article 2785, Rev. St. 1895. The decree of the court establishing the amount of money the guardian should have on hand, and which was due as against the guardian and his sureties by name and before the court, is not error. Bopp v. Hansford, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 340, 45 S. W. 744. The order and decree of the court against the guardian upon a settlement of the accounts is conclusive against the sureties, without citation. Articles 2770, 2771, Rev. St. 1895; Honung v. Schramm, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 327, 54 S. W. 616. But in this case the sureties have made themselves parties without citation, and, having defended the account of the guardian, they cannot complain if they were named by the terms of the decree.

The case was ordered affirmed.

On Rehearing.

We concluded to and did grant the rehearing herein, in order to consider the statement of facts copied into the record. Royal Ins. Co. v. Ry. Co. (Tex.) 116 S. W. 46. We have no reason to change our views on the assignments of error disposed of in the original opinion. This leaves for consideration the assignments not heretofore disposed of. The following findings of fact were made by the court, and are sustained by the evidence: "I find that the guardian should be charged with insurance money as specified in his final account, $5,700, also with the value of jewelry as specified in his final account, $63; total, $5,763. I find that one-half of said $5,763 belongs to Eugenia G. Burrell, née Whitfield, amounting to $2,881.50. I find that said guardian should be credited with one-half of attorneys' fees paid W. D. Abney, $12.50, and to Lauderdale $25, and Bernard & Edwards, $152.50, and one-half of the expense in bringing minors from Washington, total $390, and leaving a balance of $2,491.50. I find that the guardian failed to invest said sum for the benefit of his ward's estate, but did use, invest, and convert same to his own use, and should be charged with 10 per cent. interest per annum on said $2,491.50 during his ward's minority, and with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. from the time she obtained her majority on August 24, 1902, until this time, which amounts to $3,874.25. I find that said guardian is entitled to a credit on said interest for expenses for maintenance of said ward during her minority, which is the reasonable sum of $100 per annum, amounting in all to $1,250."

By the third and fourth assignments it is contended that the court erred in not allowing the guardian credit for the $1,250 item for support and maintenance of the ward out of the corpus of the estate, instead of the interest from the corpus as was done. The amounts were not expended under order of the court, but by the guardian without such authority. We do not think there was error. The statute expressly provides, "but without such direction of the court the guardian shall not be allowed, in any case, for the education and maintenance of the ward, more than the clear income of the estate." Article 2630, Rev. St. 1895; Smythe v. Lumpkin, 62 Tex. 242; Jones v. Parker, 67 Tex. 82, 3 S. W. 223. By the finding of the court the interest per annum on the principal of the estate more than exceeded the amount per year expended for the maintenance and education.

By the fifth assignment it is contended that the court erred in allowing 10 per cent. interest upon the principal of the estate for the time indicated. By the finding of the court the guardian used, invested, and converted the principal of the estate shortly after receiving the same as such guardian to his own personal use, and failed to invest or loan the same. It is the duty of the guardian to loan the money of the ward (article 2639, Rev. St. 1895), and, if he neglects to do so when by use of reasonable diligence he could do so, is liable for the highest legal rate of interest upon the principal for the time he neglects to loan the same (article 2648, Rev. St. 1895). This statute was intended for the faithful administration of estates, and is imperative. Smythe v. Lumpkin, supra. See Reed v. Timmins, 52 Tex. 84. Having converted the estate to his own use and benefit shortly after receiving the same, the guardian was properly held liable for the highest legal rate of interest.

By the sixth assignment it is claimed that the court erred in refusing to allow the guardian the claim for $750. The court made the finding: "I find that the claim for $750 made by the guardian, to cover the expense of a trip to Washington, is not a proper legal charge against the estate of the minor." The court's finding is based upon the evidence that the trip was made for the mother of the children before he qualified as guardian, and not solely for or in the interest of the minors themselves. The court's finding is supported by the evidence, and we do not feel authorized to disturb such finding.

The eighth assignment is overruled. This, together with the original opinion, disposes of all the assignments presented.

The case was ordered affirmed.

EVIDENCE (§ 501*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—COMPETENCY OF WITNESS.

A witness cannot testify as to the value of an article, based on information derived from an unidentified and undescribed catalogue.

Appeal from Victoria County Court; T. R. Wood, Judge.

Action by Charles Hillman against the Galveston, Harrisburg & San Antonio Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Proctor, Vandenberg & Crain, for appellant. Dupree & Pool, for appellee.

JAMES, C. J. The case originated in the justice's court, and was tried in the county court on the following statement of the cause of action found in the citation: "That said galvanized roofing was placed in a car containing unslacked lime, and same permitted to be covered with lime. That, on arrival of said roofing at Telfner, the same was, by the defendant, placed upon the platform and not covered, and permitted to remain there without any notice to plaintiff, during which time the same became wet by reason of a rain and the falling of dew, causing the lime to slack, which destroyed the galvanizing and burned into holes the sheets of iron above referred to." Plaintiff recovered judgment for what he claimed, $128.81.

The first, second, and third assignments of error are overruled, because the pleading and evidence thereunder were sufficient to support the finding of the jury and the charge submitting the case.

We perceive no error in the matters complained of by the fifth, sixth, and seventh assignments.

The fourth assignment of error must be sustained. Appellee testified that this galvanized roofing, as damaged, "was not worth more to him than ordinary black iron would be. This black iron was worth—I got the price from the catalogue. It is worth $1.25 per square." This was objected to, upon the ground that the witness was not qualified to testify as to the market value of black iron at Telfner, which objection was overruled. The testimony was material, in that the amount of the verdict recovered was based upon it, in preference to the testimony of a tinner and cornice maker, who stated that ordinary black iron was worth $3.07 per square. We know of no case that has gone so far as to admit testimony of value based upon information derived from a catalogue, and in this instance it was an unidentified and undescribed catalogue. To hold the evidence proper would be to make a precedent which would be troublesome in the future.

Reversed and remanded.

HOUSTON LAND & IRRIGATION CO. v. BRADFORD.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. March 24, 1909.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 232*)—ACTION FOR RENT—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Where one, suing for the reasonable rent for land for three years, testified that the reasonable rent was $50 a year, a verdict for $45 rent per year was not excessive.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 233*)—ACTION FOR RENT—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for rent for land occupied by a canal dug across plaintiff's land by defendant's predecessor, instructions that the jury should find the reasonable rental value of the canal, and that if plaintiff, in renting the land, included the use of the canal, they should find nothing for him in that respect, did not make defendant liable for the rental value of the canal in addition to the land on which it was situated.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Dec. Dig. § 233.*]

Appeal from District Court, Harris County; Chas. E. Ashe, Judge.

Action by the Houston Land & Irrigation Company against Sam Bradford, in which defendant filed a cross-action. From a judgment for defendant on his cross-action, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Hogg, Gill & Jones, for appellant. Tharp & Whitehead, for appellee.

FLY, J. Suit was brought by appellant to try title to a strip of land extending across the homestead tract of appellee, claiming that it had acquired it by purchase from the Sheldon Canal Company; but after the trial had begun, and a certain written contract between that company and appellee had been introduced in evidence, which showed that it had no rights whatever in the land, appellant withdrew its claim against the land, and the cause was tried on appellee's cross-action for rent for the years 1905, 1906, and 1907.

Appellee swore that the reasonable rent for the land occupied by the canal, which was dug across his land by the Sheldon Canal Company, to whose rights and liabilities appellant had succeeded, was $50 a year; and it cannot be held that the amount of $45 a year for three years, found by the jury, is excessive, or without testimony to support the verdict.

The court did not charge the jury, as stated by appellant in its third assignment of error, "that appellant was liable for the rental value of the canal in addition to the land upon which it was situated." The jury was instructed that they should find for appellee "in such sum as you believe from the evidence to be the reasonable rental value of the canal in question for the years 1905, 1906, and 1907." In addition, at the request of appellant, the court charged the jury that if they believed that appellee, in renting the lands, "included the use of the canal," they should find nothing for him in that respect.

The judgment is affirmed.

BRADFORD et al. v. LEMBKE.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. March 17, 1909. On Rehearing, April 7, 1909.)

1. CHATTEL MORTGAGES (§ 150*)—NOTICE—EXECUTION IN WRONG NAME.

A chattel mortgage signed in a wrong name, or a name by which the grantor is not customarily known, imparts no notice.

2. CHATTEL MORTGAGES (§ 177*)—CONVERSION OF MORTGAGED GOODS—MORTGAGE UNDER ASSUMED NAME—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action by a mortgagee for conversion of chattels, where defendants, who had purchased them from the mortgagor under a name different from that under which he had executed the mortgage, defended as purchasers for value in good faith and without notice, having found no claims against the mortgagor in respect to the property under the name by which they knew him, the burden was upon them to show that the name under which the mortgage was given was the assumed name.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Chattel Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 352; Dec. Dig. § 177.*]

3. CHATTEL MORTGAGES (§ 150*)—EXECUTION UNDER ASSUMED NAME—BONA FIDE PURCHASER.

If a person should take a mortgage on chattels remaining in the mortgagor's possession, and without investigation allow the mortgage to be executed under an assumed name so that the records would show no mortgage given by the mortgagor in his true name, and the mortgagor should afterwards under his true name sell the property to a purchaser in good faith who had found no claim against the property on the records in the mortgagor's true name, the mortgagee, having been most instrumental in making the loss possible, would be liable for the loss, instead of the purchaser.

Appeal from Bexar County Court; P. H. Shook, Judge.

Action by W. C. Lembke against L. H. Bradford and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded on rehearing.

Will A. Morriss and Ernest H. Powell, for appellants. R. L. Watkins and C. C. Todd, for appellee.

FLY, J. This is a suit for $350, instituted by appellee against L. H. Bradford and the San Antonio Furniture Company, alleged to be due by reason of their conversion of certain personal property mortgaged to appellee by H. Odin and Ethel Odin, his wife, to secure him in a debt of $260, evidenced by a promissory note executed by said Odins January 2, 1907. Appellants claimed to be the purchasers in good faith of the property, without notice and for value. No jury was demanded, and after hearing the evidence the county judge rendered a judgment in favor of appellee for $314.75.

On January 2, 1907, a man claiming to be H. Odin borrowed $260 from appellee, and as security for the loan gave a promissory note and chattel mortgage signed by H. Odin and Ethel M. Odin, the latter being described in the mortgage as the wife of H. Odin. The property consisted of furniture, a sewing machine, stove, and cooking utensils, a roan horse 6 years old, single harness and phaëton, and a Jersey cow 4 years old. The mortgage was filed for registration on January 9, 1907, and remained on file, and an entry was made of it as required by law. On September 10, 1907, a man, claiming to be named H. Cowley, offered to sell L. H. Bradford, who was a member of the firm known as the San Antonio Furniture Company, certain secondhand furniture. The next morning he met the man Cowley, and bought some furniture and a sorrel pony and muley Jersey cow for $172, which he paid in a check. Bradford testified that he did not get any dining table or diningroom chairs. Cowley told Bradford that he had sold part of the furniture before Bradford bought. Bradford swore that he paid the reasonable market value of the property. He made diligent inquiry before he bought the property as to whether there was any claim against the furniture, and had the records of chattel mortgages examined to see if there was any instrument on record affecting the property. Bradford bought the property under the belief that there was no claim. The mortgage given by Odin and wife did not state where the property was situated on which the mortgage was given. The horse was not described except as "1 roan horse, 6 years old, 14 hands high." The horse bought by appellants was a "sorrel pony." The cow is described as "1 Jersey cow S. M. branded 4 years old." The cow bought by appellants was a "very old cow." The only property named in the mortgage that appellee attempted to show was in possession of appellant Bradford was a refrigerator, an iron bed, leather couch, and extension table. The only witness who tried to identify those articles was not positive about them. The witness again stated that he would not swear positively that any of the articles bought by Bradford were those named in the mortgage, except the sewing machine and the articles he saw in the store. He did not testify that he saw the sewing machine in the possession of Bradford; and there is nothing indicating that the latter got a sewing machine.

The evidence disclosed that the mortgagor of the property sometimes called himself Odin and sometimes Cowley, but his true name was not shown. He had been arrested about a year before this trial as H. Odin Cowley. Appellants knew nothing of the arrest or about the two names.

The case presented is one of a mortgage being taken from a man under an assumed name, or, at most, not in his surname, but in that of his given name. A mortgage in the name of H. Odin and Ethel M. Odin was not notice to a buyer of personal property from a man named Cowley that the property had been mortgaged by him under another name. When appellants investigated the records of Bexar county and found no mortgage given by H. Cowley to any one on personal property of which he held possession, they had done all they could so far as the records were concerned, and, when they followed that investigation up by seeking for information from other sources, they had done all that was required of them under the law.

We think the duty devolved upon appellee of ascertaining whether the party giving the mortgage bore the name in which he gave the mortgage when the property was to be left in the possession of the mortgagor. If the mortgagee was willing, without investigation, to trust an entire stranger, going under an assumed name, with mortgaged property, his trust should not work to the disadvantage of one who bought the property in good faith. It is indeed a hardship on appellee to lose the property, but it is also a hardship on appellants to lose it, and appellee, having assumed the position of placing others at a disadvantage by his trust and want of care should bear the penalty. This is a case where the application of the rule of equity should be made that he who trusts most, where one of two innocent persons is to suffer, shall lose most. If appellee was deceived by the mortgagor, or if the former was willing to take the risk of the latter being an imposter, he, and not others misled by him, should take the consequences, however innocent he may be. Kesler v. Zimmerschitte, 1 Tex. 50.

It does not appear which was the true name of the mortgagor, Odin or Cowley, although the testimony tends slightly towards the latter, and there is no evidence that the man was customarily known as Odin. A mortgage or other conveyance signed in a wrong name, or a name by which the grantor is not customarily known, imparts no notice. Jones on Mort. § 491.

If the mortgage had been executed in the name of the mortgagor, it was not sufficient to give notice because of the lack of description of the property. There was nothing to distinguish the property from that of like character, except the number on the sewing machine, and that was not shown to have been seen by appellants or to have come into their hands. The horse appellants bought was of a different color from the one described in the mortgage, and the cow of a different description. The mortgage did not locate the property by street number, city, or even state or county, although it might be assumed that the property was in Bexar county, where the mortgagors resided. There was nothing in the mortgage by which the property could be identified which was made clear by a failure to identify it on the part of witnesses.

The judgment is reversed, and judgment here rendered in favor of appellants.

On Rehearing.

While entertaining grave doubts as to the sufficiency of the description of the furniture in the mortgage to give any notice, even though the name in which the same was given had been the same given to L. H. Bradford, yet, in deference to the views of the other members of the court, the writer reluctantly consents to the proposition that the description was sufficient.

A reconsideration of the evidence convinces us that it fails to show that the mortgagor and seller went by any other name than that of Odin prior to the time that he sold the property to Bradford, or that Odin was not his real name. All the evidence as to his going under two names is to the effect that it was after the mortgage had been executed and sale made. The mortgagor's true name may have been Odin, so far as the record indicates. The burden was on appellants to prove that the mortgage was given under an assumed name, and not a real name. Had this proof been made, the writer would adhere to the original opinion filed herein, because it is well sustained by high authority. Mackey v. Cole, 79 Wis. 428, 48 N. W. 520, 24 Am. St. Rep. 723; Brayton v. Beall, 73 S. C. 308, 53 S. E. 641. Those cases disagree with the Nebraska case, Alexander v. Graves, 25 Neb. 453, 41 N. W. 290, 13 Am. St. Rep. 501, so confidently cited by appellee as decisive of this case.

There is evidence which tends to show that all the mortgaged property was not converted by appellants, but that some of it had been sold to other parties. The evidence indicates, also, that a different cow and horse from the ones described in the mortgage were sold to Bradford. The only testimony as to value was that the whole property was worth $600 to $800, and the value of all that Bradford received was $240. The testimony, therefore, does not sustain the amount of the judgment, which was for $314.75. The evidence being uncertain as to the property converted by appellants, and its value, this court cannot render the proper judgment, and it follows that the judgment of the lower court should be reversed and the cause remanded.

The motion for rehearing is granted, and the judgment reversed and cause remanded.

MISSOURI, K. & T. RY. CO. OF TEXAS et al. v. McLEAN.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. March 10, 1909. On Rehearing, April 7, 1909.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 134*)—CARRIAGE OF GOODS—DAMAGE—EVIDENCE.

Where, in an action against a carrier for damages to plaintiff's shipments of cabbages by failure to properly ice the cars, plaintiff testified that defendant's agents had positive instructions to ice all the cars, the fact that the records covering the movements of cars showed with one or two exceptions that the cars were ordered without ice, and the written requisition for the cars failed to contain an order for ice, did not tend to disprove a finding that ice was ordered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 588; Dec. Dig. § 134.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 117*)—CARRIAGE OF GOODS—REFRIGERATION.

A common carrier undertaking to carry perishable property in cars specially adapted to preserve it is responsible for any defect in the cars resulting in injury to the property, and the duty to provide suitable cars extends to proper refrigeration according to established custom.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 510; Dec. Dig. § 117.*]

3. CARRIERS (§ 134*)—CARRIAGE OF GOODS.

Evidence that plaintiff's cabbages had just been cut, were sound, firm, and hard when shipped, but decayed in transit, and were badly damaged on reaching their destination, was of itself sufficient to warrant a finding that defendant railroad's cars were either not properly constructed or not refrigerated.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 588; Dec. Dig. § 134.*]

4. CARRIERS (§ 121*)—CARRIAGE OF GOODS—INJURIES IN TRANSIT—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

Though a shipper may discover before loading or the departure of the car that it is not suitable for carrying perishable goods, he will not thereby be deemed guilty of contributory negligence, or to have assumed the risk, where he has no means of relieving himself of the situation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 531; Dec. Dig. § 121.*]

5. CARRIERS (§ 135*)—CARRIAGE OF GOODS—INJURIES IN TRANSIT—DAMAGES.

Defendant railroad was not liable for special damages where it had no notice that plaintiff's shipments of cabbages were made to fill a contract of sale at any special price.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 599; Dec. Dig. § 135.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1054*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Where, in an action against a railroad for damages to plaintiff's shipments of cabbages, the case was tried by the court without a jury, and the damages were estimated from the market value of the goods at destination, and not for a price bargained for in advance of the shipments, defendant was not prejudiced by the erroneous admission of evidence as to the amounts for which the shipments were bargained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 485; Dec. Dig. § 1054.*]

7. CARRIERS (§ 133*)—CARRIAGE OF GOODS—INJURIES IN TRANSIT—DAMAGES—EVIDENCE.

In an action against a railroad for damages to plaintiff's shipments of cabbages, testimony that the amount realized from the sale of the cabbages at destination was the cash market price in their damaged condition, and that they were sold for the best market value obtainable, was admissible on the issue of damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 583; Dec. Dig. § 133.*]

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1073*)—HARMLESS ERROR—JUDGMENT.

Though, in an action against a railroad for damages to plaintiff's shipments of cabbages, the judgment was for what the cabbages were worth at the point of shipment, and not for their market value at destination had they not been damaged, defendant was not prejudiced, it appearing that they would have been worth at least that much and probably more on the market at destination had they arrived there in the condition they would have been in but for defendant's negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4245; Dec. Dig. § 1073.*]

On Rehearing.

9. CARRIERS (§ 131*)—ISSUES, PROOF, AND VARIANCE.

In an action against a railroad for damages to plaintiff's shipment of cabbages, there was a variance between an allegation that the damage was caused from delay in transportation and proof that it arose from lack of refrigeration, which was not alleged.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 574; Dec. Dig. § 131.*]

Appeal from District Court, Jefferson County; W. H. Pope, Judge.

Action by Marrs McLean against the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company of Texas and another. From a judgment for plaintiff against the first-named defendant, it appeals. Affirmed.

F. J. Duff, Coke, Miller & Coke, and Thomas & Rhea, for appellant. W. D. Gordon and Thos. J. Baten, for appellee.

NEILL, J. This suit was brought by Marrs McLean against the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company of Texas and the Gulf & Interstate Railway Company of Texas to recover damages to nine shipments of cabbage made by the firm of McLean Bros. from various points on the line of the Gulf & Interstate Railway Company to various destinations; some being intrastate and others interstate shipments, and are numbered from 1 to 9 in plaintiff's petition.

The plaintiff alleged that he had succeeded to the rights of McLean Bros., a firm composed of himself and Jack McLean; that all the cabbages in the several shipments were in good condition when shipped, and were transported on through bills of lading, with instructions thereon to ice the cars at Galveston, and to re-ice them whenever it was necessary; that defendants failed to ice the cars in shipments numbered 1 to 8, and that by reason thereof the cabbages arrived at destination in a damaged condition, to plaintiff's damage, etc.; that as to shipments numbered 3 and 7, in addition to the cars not being properly iced, the cars in which the shipments were made were not properly constructed, and that plaintiff thereby suffered loss. The petition alleges, as to each of the several shipments, that, when made, the cabbages had been bargained to the respective consignees at a stipulated price, and then avers the difference in the value in their damaged condition at destination and the price at which they had been bargained to be sold. It then avers: "That the prices at which the above-mentioned lots and parcels of produce were bargained as above alleged were the respective cash market prices of such produce respectively at the times and places aforesaid, and that the same could have been sold but for the deterioration and damage caused as aforesaid at such prices in the open market; and that the amounts received therefor in the damaged condition of the respective cars of produce was the full market price therefor as alleged in respect to each specific shipment." The damages prayed for were $2,145. The Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company answered by a general denial, and pleaded specially that the shipment originated on the line of its codefendant; and that the bills of lading issued by it provided that each line should be responsible only for damages occurring on its own line, and in no event would it be liable for any damages except those done in its possession. It also pleaded contributory negligence. The case was tried without a jury, and resulted in a judgment in favor of plaintiff for $2,046.80 against the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company, and against plaintiff in favor of the other railroad company.

The trial judge filed conclusions of fact and of law, which are as follows:

"Findings of Fact.

"I find that McLean Bros. (Marrs McLean, the plaintiff, being now the successor in interest of said firm) shipped the nine car loads of cabbages, substantially as alleged in the plaintiff's petition in this case, from the points on the Gulf & Interstate Railway Company's line running between Beaumont and Bolivar, making deliveries of each car after being loaded to the said Gulf & Interstate Railway Company, which transported the same across the bay to Galveston, where said cars were delivered to the connecting carrier, Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company of Texas, for transportation to the points of destination, as alleged in each specific shipment.

"(2) I find that the plaintiff, and said firm of McLean Bros., made requisitions on the defendants for suitable refrigerator cars to be iced before loading, and that when said requisitions were made the defendant Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company undertook to furnish the same to be promptly transported to the loading station to receive the cargo. That the said McLean Bros. thereupon notified the growers from whom said cabbages were obtained to have said cabbages cut and ready to be loaded as soon as the train coming from Galveston in the afternoon, leaving Bolivar at about 4 p. m., brought said cars, and that said cabbages were so cut and prepared to be loaded in said cars immediately upon arrival at loading station.

"(3) I find that said McLean Bros. loaded each car with first class quality of cabbage, hard, green, and firm, and that each car was turned over to the defendants with the cabbages in first-class condition, with instructions to the defendants written in the bills of lading to ice at Galveston and re-ice when necessary.

"(4) I find that said cars, after being loaded in a proper manner, were expeditiously transported by the Gulf & Interstate Railway Company of Texas, and delivered to and received by its codefendant, the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company of Texas, at Galveston.

"(5) I find that the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company of Texas failed to keep said cars properly iced from the time it received the same to their destination, and that this caused the produce to rot and decay in quantity and manner as set up in the statements of each shipment in the plaintiff's petition, and that the Missouri, Kansas & Texas cars described in the petition were not properly constructed so as to keep the contents in proper refrigeration even if the same had been kept iced in transit, and that the plaintiffs were not at fault in using said cars, and that this failure of refrigeration on the part of the defendant Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company of Texas caused the produce to decay as described in plaintiff's petition.

"(6) I find that the cabbages were all the property of McLean Bros. while in transit, and that the prices f. o. b. shipping point were simply a price basis at which said produce was to be delivered to the consignee, subject to the right of the latter to receive or reject the same upon inspection.

"(7) I find that the market prices of each respective shipment at the point of destination was in excess of said price basis f. o. b. shipping point, and if said produce had arrived at the respective points of destination in good condition, which it would have done if it had been properly refrigerated by the defendant Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company, that it would have brought upon the market in excess of the amounts specified as the market price in such condition in each specific shipment. On the contrary, the amounts realized, as stated in said plaintiff's petition, were all that said cabbages were worth upon the market in the condition in which said cars arrived respectively as detailed in said petition.

"(8) With reference to shipment No. 9, I find that four or five days was a reasonable time within which to transport said produce from the shipping point to its destination at Kansas City, Mo., and that the loss on said shipment, amounting to about 3,900 pounds in shrinkage, occurred as therein alleged, and I find that the value of said shrinkage is as alleged in said petition, but I find that said car No. 9 was kept properly refrigerated en route by the defendant, and that such shrinkage was not due to any fault of the defendant in the refrigeration.

"Conclusions of Law.

"(1) I conclude, as a matter of law, that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover of the defendant Gulf & Interstate Railway Company of Texas, but that the plaintiff is entitled to recover of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company of Texas, by reason of its negligence, the sum of $2,046.80, with 6 per cent. interest from August 14, 1907, until paid.

"(2) I conclude, as a matter of law, that there is a variance between the allegations and proof concerning shipment No. 9, and that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover for that shipment.

"(3) I conclude, as a matter of law, that the plaintiff, or the firm of McLean Bros., was not guilty of contributory negligence, but that the defendant, Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company of Texas, was guilty of negligence which resulted in the damages to the shipments of cabbages as alleged in plaintiff's petition, except as to shipment No. 9."

The Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway excepted to all the findings of fact and of law, and the plaintiff to the refusal of the court to award him damages to shipment No. 9.

The first assignment complains of the second finding of fact, in finding that defendants ordered refrigerator cars to be iced before loading, on the ground that it is contrary to the evidence, in that the written requisition and the records covering the movements of the cars in Galveston to the Gulf & Interstate Railway Company show indisputably that the cars, with one or two exceptions, were ordered without ice. The fact that the records referred to in the assignment show that the cars were sent out without ice does not tend to disprove the finding of the court, nor does the failure of the written requisition for the cars to contain an order for ice tend to show that ice was not otherwise ordered to be sent out with them. The testimony of the plaintiff is to the effect that he instructed appellant's commercial agent at Galveston to ice the cars before sending them out to be loaded. His testimony is: "He" (Fontaine, appellant's commercial agent) "had positive instructions from us that we wanted the cars sent out with ice, and not sent without it at all—not to send them at all unless he could send them with ice." Besides, the appellant knew that the cars were ordered for the shipment of cabbages, and it was its duty to furnish cars, where they were required, suitable and in proper condition for the transportation of such goods. 2 Hutch. Car. (3d Ed.) § 505; Davis v. Houston Oil Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 111 S. W. 219.

The second assignment assails the fifth finding of fact in finding that the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company failed and refused to keep the cars iced, and that such failure caused the produce to rot; in finding that cars 3,143 and 3,135 were not properly constructed so as to keep the cabbages in proper refrigeration, even if said cars had been properly iced in transit; and in finding that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence in loading cars as he did.

If a common carrier undertake to carry perishable property in cars specially adapted to preserve it, he will become responsible for any defect in the cars resulting in the injury of the property. And under modern methods, in the case of carriers by rail, the duty of a carrier, where he accepts perishable property for transportation, to provide suitable cars, extends to proper refrigeration according to established custom. Johnson v. Railway, 133 Mich. 596, 95 N. W. 724, 103 Am. St. Rep. 406; Railway v. Cromwell, 98 Va. 227, 35 S. E. 444, 49 L. R. A. 462, 81 Am. St. Rep. 722. The facts that the cabbages had just been cut from their stalks, were sound, firm, and hard when shipped, and decayed in transit, and badly damaged when they reached their destination, are circumstances tending to show either that the cars were not properly constructed for the carriage of such goods, or that they were not properly refrigerated. These circumstances were of themselves sufficient to warrant the court in finding, at least, the cars were either not properly constructed or refrigerated. A finding of either would be sufficient to render appellant liable for the damage to the produce.

Although a shipper may discover before loading of the departure of the car that it is not suitable for carrying cabbages, or other like perishable goods, he will not on that account be deemed guilty of contributory negligence, or of having assumed such risk, where he has no means or opportunity of relieving himself of the situation. In a case like this, where the cabbages had been purchased and gathered by the shipper from various farms in view of immediate shipment on cars the defendants had agreed to furnish suitable for the purpose, the shippers, even though they may have known the cars were not of the proper kind or iced as required, had either to ship them at the risk of their decaying in transit, or to let them lay and rot at the place where they were carried for shipment; for, as they had no means of preserving them, the cabbages would certainly decay if they were not shipped. This condition of things was brought about by the railroad's breach of its obligation to furnish suitable cars properly refrigerated. And it, rather than plaintiff, should be held liable for the damages consequent on loading the goods upon the cars it furnished for that purpose.

As the assignments just disposed of are the only ones that attack any of the trial judge's findings of fact (and only the second and fifth), we adopt and make such findings our own.

The fourth assignment complains of the trial court's first conclusion of law, upon the ground that it is wholly unsupported by the evidence. The court's seventh finding of fact, which is unassailed by any assignment of error, furnishes a complete predicate for the conclusion of law questioned by this assignment. The correctness of the principle of law involved in the conclusion not being assailed by the assignment, and it being based upon an unquestioned finding of fact, the assignment of error is overruled.

The fifth assignment of error complains of plaintiff's counsel having been permitted to ask him this question: "Now, I will ask you whether or not you know of your own knowledge as to the amounts for which these cars, set up in the petition, were bargained as alleged?" over defendant's objection that it was incompetent, in that plaintiff had not alleged that the defendant had notice that the shipments, or any of them, were made to fill a contract of sale at any special price, and that, in the absence of such notice, defendants were not liable for special damages. The objection to the question embodies a correct principle of law, and evidence countervailing it should not be received. But as the case was tried before the court without a jury, and it is apparent from its findings of fact and conclusions of law that the damages were estimated from the market value of the goods at destination and not from a price bargained for in advance of the shipment, it is evident that defendant was not prejudiced by the question. This also disposes of the sixth assignment, which complains of a similar question.

The testimony of the witness R. B. Cochran that $158.15, realized from the sale at destination of a certain car load of the cabbages, was the cash market price in their damaged condition, and that they were sold for the best market value obtainable, was certainly admissible on the issue of damages. St. L. I. M. & S. Ry. v. Boshear (Tex. Civ. App.) 108 S. W. 1032; Id. (Tex.) 113 S. W. 7. While the "best price obtainable" is not necessarily the "market price," which ordinarily is to be taken in measuring the damages, yet when it is shown in a case where the consignee or owner sells the goods at destination at their market price, and that such price was the best price obtainable, we cannot perceive any reason for the carrier's complaining. If the price actually obtained for the sale of the goods had been in excess of their market value, the carrier would be entitled to have the price so received considered in estimating the damages, rather than the market value. Hence it was proper to show that the sale was not only at their market value, but for the best price obtainable, in order to negative the idea that a better price could have been obtained than the market price. This, however, though proper, was unnecessary. All required was proof that the price obtained was the market value.

The ninth assignment is based upon the erroneous assumption that the court based its judgment on the market price of the goods at the point of origin of the shipment, and not for the market value of the goods at destination had they not been damaged by defendant's negligence. Though the judgment may have been for what the goods were worth at the point of origin, yet, as the finding of the trial court shows that they would have been worth at least that much, and probably more, on the market at destination had they arrived there in the condition they would have been in but for defendant's negligence, the defendant has no ground to complain of the amount of damages awarded.

There is no error in the judgment, and it is affirmed.

On Rehearing.

In this motion it is urged that we erred in not sustaining appellee's cross-assignment of error, which complains of the trial court's second conclusion of law.

The variance consisted in this: that the allegations charged that the damage was caused from delay in transportation, while, according to the court's finding of fact, there was no such delay—four or five days being a reasonable time for transportation to destination, the shipment having arrived there within that time—consequently no damage could accrue from the alleged cause; but it arose from defendant's failure to keep the car properly refrigerated, which was not alleged. Therefore, the motion is overruled.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Feb. 27, 1909. Rehearing Denied March 18, 1909.)

1. INJUNCTION (§ 145*) — APPLICATION FOR TEMPORARY WRIT—INSUFFICIENT AFFIDAVIT.

Act April 16, 1907 (Gen. Laws 30th Leg. p. 206, c. 107), provides that applications for writs of injunction made to another judge than the one before whom the writ is made returnable shall be accompanied by an affidavit setting out fully the facts showing that the resident judge is inaccessible, and the efforts made to communicate with him, and the result thereof. Held, that an affidavit in such a case that the petitioner was at the time unable to reach the judge having original jurisdiction in time to secure the relief sought was not sufficient.

2. EXECUTION (§ 171*)—INJUNCTION AGAINST SALE.

Where the amount of an execution as stated in the advertisement of sale exceeds the judgment by only 20 cents, the difference, on an application for injunction against the sale, should be disregarded as too trifling to be considered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Dec. Dig. § 171.*]

3. EXECUTION (§ 171*)—INJUNCTION AGAINST SALE.

The failure of the advertisement of sale to state that the execution provided for collection of interest affords no ground for injunction.

4. INJUNCTION (§ 145*)—TEMPORARY WRIT—NECESSITY OF SWORN APPLICATION—EVALUATION OF REQUIREMENT.

Where the only grounds relied on for a temporary injunction granted were stated in an unsworn petition, a copy of which was made an exhibit to the petition for injunction, and the affidavit did not pretend to state that the petition was true, the matters therein stated could not be considered, in the face of the requirement of Rev. St. 1893, art. 2992, providing that no injunction should be granted except on a sworn application.

Appeal from District Court, Liberty County. Action by John H. Broocks against R. I. Lee and another. From an order granting a temporary injunction, defendants appeal. Reversed.

See, also, 111 S. W. 778.

G. H. Pendarvis, for appellants.

REESE, J. This is an appeal from an order of the district judge of the Fifty-Eighth district granting a temporary injunction restraining R. I. Lee, plaintiff in execution, and Lee C. Cherry, sheriff of Liberty county, from enforcing an execution, or order of sale, issued by the district clerk of Liberty county, upon a judgment of the district court of said county in favor of R. I. Lee and against John H. Broocks, appellee. The appeal is prosecuted under the provisions of the act of 1907, allowing appeals from such interlocutory orders. Acts 30th Leg. p. 207, c. 107.

The petition for injunction was presented to Hon. W. H. Pope, judge of the Fifty-Eighth district, by whom the temporary writ was granted, returnable to the district court of Liberty county, which is in another district. To satisfy the requirements of the act of April 16, 1907 (Gen. Laws 30th Leg. p. 206, c. 107), there was attached to the application the following affidavit: "Your petitioner, John H. Broocks, plaintiff herein, relying on the Constitution of the state of Texas, as well as other rights granted by the government, and being at this time unable to reach the Hon. L. B. Hightower, the judge having original jurisdiction hereof, in time to secure the relief sought by reason hereof, brings this his petition and alleges," etc.

The first objection made by appellant to the order of the judge is that this affidavit was not sufficient, under the act aforesaid, to authorize the judge of the Fifty-Eighth district to act. This contention must be sustained. The act referred to was intended to cure what had become an intolerable evil in procuring temporary injunctions from district judges remote from the court where the case was to be tried, instead of making application to the judge of said district, under which practice it was not infrequent that parties desiring such suit started out on a roving quest over the state for some district judge who would listen favorably to their plea, to which the resident judge was not favorable, thus securing temporary injunctions, which were promptly dissolved by the judge of the court to which such writs were returnable. To put a stop to such practices, it was provided by the act that such applications, when presented to a judge other than the judge of the court to which, under the law, such writ was required to be made returnable, should be accompanied by an affidavit "setting out fully the facts showing that the resident judge is inaccessible, and the efforts made by the applicant to reach and communicate with said resident judge, and the result of such efforts in that behalf." It was not considered sufficient that the applicant should merely make affidavit that the resident judge was inaccessible or that he could not be reached, but, in order that the purpose and intent of the act should not be evaded, it was required that the facts showing such inaccessibility, and the efforts made to reach him, should be fully stated, in order that the judge to whom the application was presented might determine whether a fair and reasonable effort had been made, in good faith, to reach the resident judge, without which it is positively declared by the act that "no non-resident judge shall have the power to hear said application upon the ground of inaccessibility of the resident judge." The act goes further, and provides that "should any non-resident judge hear said application upon the ground of inaccessibility of the resident judge, and should grant the writ of injunction prayed for, said injunction so granted should be dissolved upon motion, upon its being shown that the petitioner has not first made a reasonable effort to procure a hearing upon said application before the resident judge." The effect of this is that even if a proper affidavit, as required by the statute, is made, of the inability to reach the resident judge, and an injunction granted, upon motion to dissolve under the statute, it may be shown that reasonable effort had not in fact been first made to invoke the action of the resident judge, and this alone should authorize a dissolution of the injunction, notwithstanding the statements of the affidavit. The purpose of the act is clear and its language plain. Such an affidavit as made in this case, if held sufficient, would enable an applicant for injunction in every case to evade the plain requirements of the statute. The district judge of the Fifty-Eighth district had no authority to grant the temporary writ, and, for the reasons indicated above alone, the order must be set aside.

Upon other grounds, also, the injunction should not have been granted. The only ground stated in the application, as sworn to, for the injunction, is that there was a discrepancy between the amount of the judgment as stated in the advertisement of the sale and as stated in the judgment of $1,000. The judgment, as shown by the application, is for $17,316.88, with interest thereon at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum from the date of judgment—August 17, 1904. The amount of the execution as stated in the advertisement is $17,316.88, without stating the interest. It will be seen that there is a difference of 20 cents, which may be and should have been disregarded as too trifling to be considered. The failure of the advertisement of sale to state that the execution provided for collection of interest afforded no ground for the injunction. It was an utterly immaterial matter.

The only grounds relied upon for the injunction are stated in an unsworn petition filed in the district court of Liberty county, a copy of which is made an exhibit to the petition. In the affidavit to the application presented to the district judge, appellee does not pretend to state that the statements of this petition are true, nor can the affidavit be so construed, and, so far as the allegations of said petition are concerned, they cannot be considered as grounds for the injunction. The statute provides that no injunction shall be granted except upon a sworn application. Rev. St. 1895, art. 2992. This requirement cannot be evaded as was done in this case, in so far as the temporary injunction rests upon the allegations of the petition referred to.

For the reasons indicated, the order of the district judge granting the temporary injunction is reversed, the order set aside, and the injunction dissolved.

Where, in an action against a railroad company for the destruction of timber, grass, and hay by fire set by sparks from an engine, a witness testified that the market value of the land before the fire was a specified sum per acre and that just after the fire it was worth half that amount, and, on cross-examination, testified that the land had the same value after the fire as it had before, but that the grass and timber were damaged, the sustaining of an objection to the question whether, if the fire reduced the value of the land, grass, and timber one-half, two fires would not entirely destroy the value, was not erroneous.

9. RAILROADS (§ 481*)—DESTRUCTION OF PROPERTY BY FIRE—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In an action against a railroad company for the destruction of property by fire set by an engine, evidence of the inspection of a designated engine and the result thereof with reference to its spark arrester was properly excluded, in the absence of proof that such engine was the one setting the fire, or of proof that such engine had run on the road on the day of the fire.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 1717; Dec. Dig. § 481.*]

10. RAILROADS (§ 485*)—FIRES—ACTION FOR DESTRUCTION OF PROPERTY—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where, in an action against a railroad company for the destruction of property by fire set by an engine, the evidence showed an ineffectual effort of the company's employees to stop the fire, that plaintiff's son aided in the effort, that a strong wind was blowing, and that the fire had gained such headway that any effort to put it out would have been fruitless, etc., the refusal to charge on the issue of contributory negligence was proper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 1755; Dec. Dig. § 485.*]

11. RAILROADS (§ 454*)—FIRES—CARE REQUIRED OF RAILROAD.

A railroad company must equip its engines with the most approved spark arresters, and must exercise ordinary care to keep the same in good repair, and a company is liable for damages from fires proximately caused by its negligent failure to exercise such care in the equipment and maintenance of its engines.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 1668-1671; Dec. Dig. § 454.*]

12. RAILROADS (§ 485*)—FIRES—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where fire injuring plaintiff's land originated in some grass on a rock quarry at a point within 20 feet of the railroad track, and it appeared that the quarry containing only a few acres was fenced in with the right of way, an instruction that it was negligence for a railroad company to allow grass and combustible material to accumulate on the land inclosed in its right of way was proper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 1754; Dec. Dig. § 485.*]

13. TRIAL (§ 194*)—INSTRUCTIONS—INVADING PROVINCE OF JURY—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

An instruction, in an action against a railroad company for the destruction by fire of timber and grass, that the jury, on finding that the timber and grass was injured, should assess plaintiff's damages at the difference between the reasonable value of the land immediately before and immediately after the fire, not taking into consideration any value of the grass burned on the land, was not on the weight of the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 465; Dec. Dig. § 194.*]

14. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 739*)—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR—GROUPING PROPOSITIONS OF LAW.

A single assignment of error complaining of the refusal to give special charges not germane to each other, but presenting distinct propositions of law, will not be considered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3034; Dec. Dig. § 739.*]

Appeal from Williamson County Court; T. J. Lawhon, Judge.

Action by John Neiser against the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company of Texas. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Spell & Nickels, for appellant. Wilcox & Graves, for appellee.

RICE, J. On the 7th day of June, 1906, appellee owned a tract of land through which appellant's railway ran, 90 acres of which was situated just north of and adjoining appellant's right of way, 68 acres of which was in pasture and timber, and 22 acres thereof was used as a meadow, and upon which said entire tract there was growing a luxuriant, well-matured, and valuable crop of native grass, which grass was being used as pasture and for the purpose of making hay, and that said 68 acres was partially covered with a growth of native timber, from which plaintiff obtained wood for his own use and for market. On said day, immediately after the passage of one of appellant's trains, a fire occurred, burning over a part of said tract of land, destroying the grass growing thereon, killing some and injuring many of the trees thereon, and likewise injured the turf. This suit was instituted by appellee to recover damages therefor, predicated negligence on the part of the defendant in permitting grass and other inflammable material to grow and collect upon its right of way, as well as in maintaining and operating its engines without proper appliances to prevent the escape of sparks and coals of fire; that, by reason of such negligence, sparks and coals of fire escaped from its said engine on the day named, setting fire to said combustible material upon its right of way, which was communicated to the grass upon plaintiff's land, thereby occasioning the injury complained of. Appellant answered by general demurrer, general denial, and a plea of contributory negligence, to the effect that, if the plaintiff suffered injury, the same was proximately caused by reason of the exposure of his property to danger of destruction by fire escaping from defendant's passing locomotives. There was a verdict and judgment for plaintiff in the sum of $300, from which this appeal is prosecuted.

On direct examination, Martinka, a witness for plaintiff, had testified that the market value of the land just before the fire was $50 per acre, and just after it was worth half that amount. On cross-examination, as shown by its bill, appellant asked this witness: "If the fire reduced the value of the land and grass and trees to one-half, would not two such fires entirely destroy its value?" The court sustained plaintiff's objection to said question, of which appellant complains, claiming in his bill that, if said witness had been allowed to testify, his answer would have been "Yes" or "No," either of which would have had a tendency to impeach him. We do not think any error was shown in this ruling of the court, because it appears from the record that on cross-examination, when first asked this particular question, this witness replied that he did not understand the question. Upon its being repeated, he answered that the land had the same value as it had before, but the timber and grass were damaged. Besides this, it was immaterial what might be the effect of another fire on the same land, as this was not an issue involved in this case. We therefore overrule this assignment.

We overrule appellant's second assignment, because we do not think the question therein complained of was leading. It is apparent from the record that the witness had answered under a misapprehension of the meaning of the question, and certainly there was no error in allowing counsel for plaintiff to ascertain what the witness in fact meant by the answer given.

We overrule the third assignment of error, because we do not think there was any error in permitting the witness to answer the question objected to, since his testimony showed that he had experience in putting up hay, knew how much the land in question would likely produce, the cost of baling the same, as well as what the hay would be worth after it was baled.

We overrule the fourth assignment of error, wherein it is insisted that the court erred in permitting the plaintiff to testify that the pasturage land had a real value and was worth about $1.50 per acre. The objection thereto was predicated upon the idea that the witness had not qualified to testify in this regard. The record discloses that the witness testified that he had never sold any pasture grass by the acre, did not know of any selling that way, and had never tried to sell it, but knew that it was worth something. Another witness upon the same subject had testified that grass used for pasture purposes had no market value in that community, but that it had a real value, to wit, $1.50 per acre. It was alleged in the petition that the pasture had both a market and real value, which were the same. Hence we overrule this objection. See Railroad Co. v. Searight, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 593, 28 S. W. 40.

We do not think there is any merit in the fifth assignment of error, and overrule the same. The objection therein to testimony could not be urged against its admissibility, but would go simply to its weight in this respect.

We overrule the sixth assignment of error, complaining of the action of the court in permitting the witness Zurowitz to testify as to the reasonable market value of the land immediately before and immediately after the fire, because we understand the law to be that the plaintiff would have the right to show its market value in this way, and that the measure of damages in this respect is the difference between its value just before and just after the fire, and the witness in this connection testified to facts showing that he lived in the immediate vicinity of the land, and that he was familiar with and knew the injury resulting from the fire, and that he knew the market value of land in that community, which authorized him to speak relative thereto. See Railway Co. v. Knapp, 51 Tex. 592; Railway Co. v. Wallace, 74 Tex. 583, 12 S. W. 227; Railway Co. v. Hogsett, 67 Tex. 687, 4 S. W. 365.

We do not think the court erred, as urged by appellant in its seventh assignment, in refusing to allow the witnesses Coffee, Miller, and Page upon plaintiff's objection to testify what in their opinion was the fair reasonable cash value at the time of the fire of the damages, if any, that the burning off of the land occasioned to plaintiff, because the bill fails to show any injury resulting to plaintiff therefrom, for the reason that it fails to show what said witnesses or either of them would have testified to in this respect; and, before error can be predicated upon the ruling in reference thereto, it must be made to appear from the recitation of the bill what the testimony of said witnesses would have been in answer to the question asked, and it must appear therefrom that said witnesses would have testified to matters beneficial to appellant. This assignment is therefore overruled.

By its eighth assignment of error appellant complains that the court erred in excluding certain interrogatories to and answers of the witness Black, as well as the answers of the witness Muller, relative to the inspection of engine No. 215 and the result of said inspection with reference to the spark arrester thereon and other parts thereof; the objection to said testimony on the part of the plaintiff being that no evidence had been offered identifying the engine as the one causing the injury, nor had it been shown that said engine 215 had run on the road from Austin to Granger by Neiser's place on the day of the fire. We think this was a valid objection to the admissibility of said testimony, because, unless said engine had been identified as the one setting out the fire or that it likely did, the evidence offered was immaterial.

The court did not err in refusing to charge the jury on the issue of contributory negligence upon the part of plaintiff. While this issue was raised by the pleadings, there was no evidence whatever to justify its submission. It was shown that there was an ineffectual effort on the part of the railway company's employes to stop the progress of the fire while plaintiff knew of the fire; still it is shown that his son aided the employes to put it out, and it appears a strong wind was blowing from the south, and the fire had gained such headway that any effort to put it out would have been fruitless; that some of the trees left burning might have been extinguished if they had had water, but none was near. We therefore overrule this assignment.

We do not think the objections made to the charge wherein it defines the terms "ordinary care" and "negligence" are well taken. The charge seems to be in accord with the decisions upon the subject.

By appellant's eleventh assignment of error it is insisted that the court erred in the fourth paragraph of its charge to the jury, because the same is upon the weight of evidence, and placed a greater burden upon the defendant than was required of it by law. The paragraph complained of is as follows: "A railway company in running its trains over its road is required to exercise ordinary care to equip its engine or locomotive drawing such train with the most approved appliances in general use to prevent the escape of sparks and fire therefrom, and to exercise ordinary care to keep such appliances in good repair to prevent such escape of sparks and fire, and to exercise ordinary care to keep the land included within its right of way sufficiently free of combustible and inflammable material as to prevent same catching fire from sparks or fire emitted from passing engines, and communicating such fire to adjacent property, and a railway company is liable for damages from fires directly and approximately caused by its negligent failure to exercise such ordinary care in the keeping of its said right of way, or to exercise such ordinary care in the equipment and maintenance of its said engines, as above instructed. But a railway company has complied with the requirements of the law when it has exercised such ordinary care in the equipment and maintenance of its engine alleged to have set out said fire, and has exercised such ordinary care in the so keeping of its said land inclosed in its said right of way, and, when a railway company has exercised such care in the above-named respects and particulars, it is not liable for any damages from fire set out by its said engines." By his counter proposition appellee insists, first, that a railway company must use ordinary care to equip its engines with the most approved appliances in general use to prevent the escape of fire. We think the charge in this respect is an admirably clear and correct presentation of the law, and is supported by decisions of our courts. See Highland v. Railroad Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 65 S. W. 649; Railroad Co. v. Goode, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 245, 26 S. W. 441; G., C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Johnson, 92 Tex. 591, 50 S. W. 563. By his second counter proposition appellee asserts that it is negligence for a railway company to allow weeds, grass, and combustible material to accumulate on the land inclosed in its right of way. It is shown from the testimony that the land which was burned over lies immediately north of and adjoining the right of way and the rock quarry belonging to defendant. There is evidence going to show that the fire originated in some grass growing on what is termed the rock quarry, but at a point within 20 feet of the railroad track; and we must conclude from the evidence that the point of its origin, therefore, was on the right of way. The quarry was fenced in with the right of way, contained only a few acres, and, so far as the evidence goes to show, may have been at this point a part of the right of way. We think the charge in this respect was proper. Railway Co. v. Hogsett, supra; Railway Co. v. Connally (Tex. Civ. App.) 93 S. W. 207.

As the twelfth and thirteenth assignments of error virtually raise the same question as involved in the eleventh, it will be unnecessary to consider the same.

By its fourteenth assignment of error appellant complains that the following charge is upon the weight of evidence, and places a greater burden upon defendant than was required by law: "If you find from the evidence under the above instructions that plaintiff's said grass or any part thereof was burned, and if you further find from the evidence that the turf and land upon which said grass was growing was injured thereby, as alleged by plaintiff, and if you further find under the above instructions that plaintiff's said timber on his said land, or any part thereof, was burned, killed, and injured by said fire, as alleged by him, and if you further find that the land upon which said killed or injured timber, if any, was growing was injured thereby, then you will find for plaintiff as to these items of injury, if any, and assess his damages, if any, that may have directly and proximately accrued to said land by reason of the injuries, if any, to said turf and said timber, at the difference, if any, in the reasonable value of said land immediately before and immediately after said fire, not taking into consideration, however, in arriving at this item of damage, if any, any value of the grass, if any, that you may find was burned on said land." As we understand it, this charge is not open to the objection urged against it, and the assignment is therefore overruled.

Appellant's fifteenth assignment complains of the refusal to give special charges Nos.

3 to 10, inclusive, an examination of which shows that these charges are not germane to each other, but present distinct and several propositions of law. Wherefore we are not required to consider them, because only matters germane can be so grouped.

The remaining assignment questions the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict, which we overrule, because in our judgment this assignment is not sustained.

Finding no error in the proceedings of the trial court, its judgment is affirmed.

Affirmed.

GREEN v. HEWETT.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Feb. 17, 1909. On Rehearing, March 24, 1909. On Motion to Certify to Supreme Court, April 14, 1909.)

1. WILLS (§ 300*)—PROBATE—PROCEDURE.

Since an application to probate a will is a proceeding in rem, the provisions of Rev. St. 1895, art. 1904, requiring certain facts to be established before probate, cannot be waived.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 300.*]

2. WILLS (§ 321*)—PROBATE—RIVAL WILLS—OPENING AND CLOSING.

In determining which of two wills should be probated, the right to open and close ought to be given to him having the burden to establish the only issue in the case, and hence, where two wills were offered for probate, and the only issue was whether the second was a forgery, the party offering it had the right to open and close.

On Rehearing.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 392*)—AFFIDAVITS IN LIEU OF APPEAL BONDS—DEFECTS—EFFECT.

If an affidavit in lieu of an appeal bond is void or was made before an officer not authorized to administer an oath or attest such documents, the defect is jurisdictional, but if it is merely defective, or there is an omission of some fact which can be waived or which can be established by evidence, the objection must be taken within a reasonable time to be available.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 392.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 389*)—AFFIDAVITS IN LIEU OF APPEAL BONDS—BEFORE WHOM PROPERLY MADE.

The statute authorizing an affidavit in lieu of an appeal bond to be made before the county judge of the county where appellant resides does not comprehend county judges of other states.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2075; Dec. Dig. § 389.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 389*)—AFFIDAVITS IN LIEU OF APPEAL BONDS—BEFORE WHOM PROPERLY MADE.

Where there is no contest and the trial court is not in session, an affidavit in lieu of an appeal bond made before an officer authorized to take the affidavit is sufficient if approved by the county judge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 389.*]

6. EVIDENCE (§ 80*)—PRESUMPTIONS—LAWS OF SISTER STATE.

The laws of a sister state will be presumed to be similar to the law of the forum, unless the contrary is shown.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 392*)—AFFIDAVITS IN LIEU OF APPEAL BONDS—DEFECTS—WAIVER.

Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 7, subd. 2, authorizing clerks of foreign courts of record having a seal to take affidavits, etc., an affidavit in lieu of an appeal bond taken before the clerk of a county court in Tennessee is not void for failing to show affirmatively that he was a clerk of a court of record, nor because it was not verified and approved by the county judge, where the affidavit shows that he was the clerk of a court having a seal, and the affidavit and jurat were in proper form, officially signed and with seal affixed, and the defects were waived by appellant's failure to raise them until after reversal of the judgment appealed from.

Appeal from District Court, Brown County; John W. Goodwin, Judge.

Samuel Green and J. W. Hewett, executor, applied for the probate of different instruments as Ed. Green's will, and the proceedings were consolidated in the county court. From a judgment probating the instrument offered by Hewett, Green appeals. Reversed.

Jenkins & McCartney and E. J. Miller, for appellant. E. C. Harrell, for appellee.

FISHER, C. J. Appellee, Hewett, filed in the county court an application to probate the will of Ed. Green, deceased, dated January 22, 1906. Thereafter the appellant, Samuel Green, filed an application in the county court to probate what is purported to be the last will of Ed. Green, deceased, dated May 7, 1906. Both of these applications were filed as separate proceedings in the county court. In that court the two proceedings were consolidated, and upon trial the first will—that is, the one propounded by appellee—was probated. Upon appeal to the district court the two causes were again consolidated over the protest and objection of appellant, and upon trial there judgment was rendered as in the county court probating the will of January 22, 1906. Appellee in the court below attacked the instrument propounded by appellant of date May 7, 1906, as a forgery. Upon a trial of the case in the district court appellant insisted that he had the right to open and close, which privilege was denied him by the trial court, and upon which ruling he has based an assignment of error.

Article 1904 of the Revised Statutes of 1895 states what facts must be proven to entitle a will to be probated. Owing to the fact that an application to probate a will is a proceeding in rem, and as the provisions of the statute mentioned require certain facts to be established, they cannot be waived in the court below, but in the court below in establishing these facts, the evidence may be so satisfactory that there can be no controversy about the force and effect of the evidence by which it is sought to establish the facts; and in a contest such as this, in determining which of two wills should be established, the right to open and conclude ought to be given to the party upon whom rests the burden of proving and establishing the only controverted issue that remains in the case. So far as the will propounded by the appellee is concerned, there is absolutely no question. It appears that the testator was of sound mind, 21 years of age; that the court had jurisdiction of his estate; that the process had been served; that the will was executed with the formalities required by law, and that it had not been revoked by the testator, provided the will of May 7th propounded by appellant was not genuine, and which was attacked by the appellee on the ground that the testator never executed it—or, in other words, that it was a forgery. If the latter will was executed by the testator, and was his last will, undoubtedly it should have been probated, and that, as said before, was the only controverted issue in the case, and was so regarded by the trial court in its charge to the jury. There was no other objection offered to that will. There existed all of the facts that entitled it to probate required by the statute, except the controverted issue of fact whether it was executed by the deceased, Ed. Green. As to this issue, we are of the opinion that the burden of proof was upon the appellant, and, this fact being the turning point in the case, he should have been accorded the privilege of opening and concluding the argument to the jury. On this question this case can be distinguished from Kennedy v. Upshaw, 66 Tex. 442, 1 S. W. 308.

We have examined the remaining assignments of error, and are of the opinion that they are not well taken.

For the reasons stated, the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded.

Reversed and remanded.

On Rehearing.

In this case judgment was rendered in the court below against the appellant on January 20, 1908, and the motion for new trial was overruled and notice of appeal given on February 1, 1908. In lieu of appeal bond, the record contains two affidavits made by appellant in Bedford county, Tenn., where he resides, both in the form of the statute, one of date February 10, 1908, made before the clerk of the county court of Bedford county, and the other of date February 17, 1908, made before the judge of the county court of Bedford county. These affidavits were made after the court trying the case had adjourned. The appeal to this court was perfected on these affidavits, and they were never questioned or contested before the case reached this court. The case was submitted during the present term, and on February 4, 1909, the appellee filed in this court a motion to dismiss the appeal on the ground that notice of appeal was not given in the time required by the statute, and that the affidavit in lieu of an appeal bond was not filed within the time required by law. We overruled the motion for the reason that the motion for new trial was overruled February 1, 1908, and that the notice of appeal then given was in time, and that the time for perfecting the appeal would commence from that date, and that, therefore, the affidavits were filed in time. This motion was acted on the same day (February 17, 1909) that this court entered a judgment reversing and remanding the case to the court below.

On February 24, 1909, the appellee filed a motion for rehearing, questioning the disposition made of the case, as well as the motion, and in addition, for the first time, presented to this court the following objection to our judgment: "This court erred in reversing the judgment of the court below and in remanding said cause, for the reason that this court never acquired jurisdiction thereof, because the appellant has neither filed an appeal bond herein nor made proper proof of his inability to pay or secure the costs of this suit." This objection is very general and does not point out any specific objections to the affidavits upon which the appellant perfected his appeal; but appended to the motion is a written argument which attacks the affidavit made before the county judge of Bedford county on the ground that he was not an officer before whom the affidavit could be made. On March 3, 1909, he filed what he called a supplemental motion for rehearing, in which for the first time he objects to the affidavit made before the clerk on the ground that he was not an officer before whom an affidavit can be made, and, if he is, the affidavit alone, without the approval of the county judge, is not sufficient, which approval he contends was not made. It is contended by the appellant that the affidavits are sufficient, and that the objections thereto come too late, and that the failure to object and contest operated as a waiver. On the other hand, the appellee insists that the affidavit must be made before the proper officer and in the terms of the statute to confer jurisdiction upon this court, and that a jurisdictional question can be urged at any time. If it be true that the affidavits are void, or that they were made before an officer not authorized by the laws of this state to administer oaths and attest such documents, then there would be force in appellee's contention; but if merely defective, or there is an omission of some fact which can be waived, or which could be established by evidence, the objection should be made within a reasonable time, which question is fully passed upon and discussed in Stewart v. Heidenheimer, 55 Tex. 648. The case of Harvey v. Cummings, 62 Tex. 187, is to the effect that, while the statute authorizes an affidavit if the court is not in session to be made before the county judge of the county where the appellant resides, this power is intended to be conferred upon the county judges of Texas, and not upon the county judges of other states. There is nothing upon the face of the statute that indicates such a limitation. It broadly says that the affidavit must be before the county judge of the county where the party resides, and the affidavit made in this instance is a compliance with the literal terms of the law. The appellant resided in Bedford county, Tenn., and the affidavit was made before the county judge of that county. The narrow reasons given by the court in that case for restricting the operation of the statute should yield to the broader view that such statute with reference to the manner and method of perfecting appeals applied alike to nonresident litigants, as to those residing within the state; that the same privileges and the same methods of acquiring the benefit of the statute was intended, unless the contrary is made to appear from the express language of the law. But, however dissatisfied we may be with this decision, we feel constrained to follow it. But the appeal can in our opinion rest upon the affidavit made before the clerk.

It has been held that, if the court that tried the case is not in session, the affidavit may be made before any officer authorized to take the affidavit of parties. Smith v. Buffalo Oil Co., 99 Tex. 77, 87 S. W. 639; Hearne v. Prendergast, 61 Tex. 628. And, where there is no contest, this is all that is required if the affidavit is approved by the county judge. The statute does not in terms require this approval, but there are cases holding that this should be done. Hearne v. Prendergast, supra; Wooldridge v. Roller, 52 Tex. 452. Subdivision 2 of article 7 of the Revised Statutes of 1805 authorizes clerks of a court of record having a seal residing in other states to administer oaths and to take affidavits, etc. It does appear from the affidavit that the clerk is a clerk of a court having a seal, and the affidavit and jurat is in the proper and usual form, and that it was officially signed and the seal affixed. It was signed by the appellant and sworn to before the clerk. This would be a good and sufficient affidavit if made before a county clerk, and would be good and effectual in Texas by force of the article cited if made before a like officer of another state, if he has a seal of office and is clerk of a court of record. Now, there are only two things that can be suggested against the sufficiency of this affidavit. The first is that it does not affirmatively appear that he is the clerk of a court of record. A sufficient answer to this might be that appellee's supplemental motion for rehearing that alone attacks this affidavit does not raise this question; but, if it did, is it essential that it should appear from the face of the affidavit or the jurat that the court of which he was clerk was a court of record. It might be the fact that the court was a court of record, and by oversight or otherwise he omitted to state that fact, and, if attention had been called to this omission and objection made thereto, it could have been cured. Furthermore, it appears that the designation given to the Tennessee court is the same as the county courts of this state, and that it has a clerk and seal, such as in this state; and, such being the case, we by no means are certain but that we should presume that the Tennessee county court is similar to our county court, which is a court of record. And we are inclined to the opinion that the presumption that the laws of a sister state will, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, be held similar to our own, should be given application in this instance.

The next objection and the one urged in the supplemental motion for rehearing is that the affidavit made before the clerk is of no effect because it was not verified and approved by the county judge. As said before, there was no contest below. Therefore there was nothing for the county judge to pass upon so far as demanded by the express terms of the statute. But there are decisions which, as before said, hold that, when the affidavit is made before some other officer than the county judge, it must be approved by the latter. This requirement was by these decisions read into the law, just as the county judges out of the state were read out of the law by the opinion in Harvey v. Cummings, all of which illustrates the evil of courts undertaking to subtract or add to legislative enactments. But, however, we will yield again as we did to Harvey v. Cummings, and see how the matter stands with reference to this objection. Just how the approval of the county judge should be made and preserved we do not know. It may be that he did approve the affidavit, and that might be made to appear in some other document or in some other way than by an indorsement on the affidavit. All that we know is that there is nothing in the record upon this subject nor are there any affidavits filed or proof made in this court relating to that question. If it is a fact that the affidavit was approved, although no record is made of it, we are inclined to the opinion that we would have jurisdiction, and on appeal could determine and ascertain that fact in this court. Smith v. Buffalo Oil Co., supra. The appellee has permitted without objection or raising this question this affidavit to be acted upon as perfecting the appeal and the case submitted in this court and decided, and the first time we hear from him on this subject is in his second or supplemental motion for rehearing, relying merely upon the fact that the record does not contain a certificate of approval of the county judge, without any affidavit or proof of the fact that such approval was not in fact made.

On the two grounds considered the affidavit is not void. Therefore the objection thereto coming at this late day should be held to be waived. Stewart v. Heidenheimer, supra.

The motion for rehearing complaining of the disposition made of the case, as well as the motion for rehearing on the action of the court in refusing to dismiss and the motions to dismiss filed since the judgment was rendered, are all overruled.

Motions overruled.

On Motion to Certify to Supreme Court.

It is claimed by appellee, in his motion to certify the question decided in our opinion of March 24, 1909, overruling the motion to dismiss the appeal, that our opinion conflicts with the decision of the Court of Civil Appeals of the Fifth District in the case of Sidoti v. Rapid Transit Ry. Co., 79 S. W. 827, and the case of Sanders v. Benson, 114 S. W. 435, by the Court of Civil Appeals of the Second District. The principal reason given in the Sidoti Case why the affidavit in lieu of the appeal bond was not sufficient, and why the law had not been complied with, was approved in the case of Smith v. Buffalo Oil Co., in 85 S. W. 482, by the Court of Civil Appeals of the First District, where the Sidoti Case was expressly cited with approval, and the appeal was there dismissed for the same reason as stated in the first case. Smith v. Buffalo Oil Co. went to the Supreme Court on writ of error, and will be found reported in 99 Tex. 77, 87 S. W. 659, where the rule announced in the two cases noticed was disapproved, and the Supreme Court in its opinion substantially held that the statute should not be given such a rigid construction as to defeat the right of appeal.

The case of Sanders v. Benson, which it is claimed we are in conflict with, in part relies upon the two first cases cited as a basis for its decision. The court, in deciding the case and preparing its opinion, evidently overlooked the case of Smith v. Buffalo Oil Co., by the Supreme Court; but, as before said, it cites with approval the Sidoti Case and Smith v. Buffalo Oil Co., by the Court of Civil Appeals, in 85 S. W. 481; which was overruled by the decision of the Supreme Court.

We have not conflicted with any settled decision upon the question passed upon in our opinion. We expressly yielded to decisions which we did not approve. In reaching the conclusion expressed in our opinion, we in the main relied upon the fact that those objections pointed out in the opinion to the affidavit could be waived, and that, by reason of the long delay upon the part of appellee, he waived the objections to the affidavit that we discussed.

Motion overruled.

ROBERSON v. FIRST STATE BANK.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Feb. 27, 1909.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 512*)—RECORD—JURISDICTION—DISMISSAL.

An appeal from the county court in a case brought in justice court must be dismissed, where the record does not show that the case was prosecuted to final judgment in justice court and that an appeal was taken to the county court, since no jurisdiction in the county court nor in the Court of Civil Appeals is shown in the record.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2326; Dec. Dig. § 512.*]

Appeal from Hill County Court; N. J. Smith, Judge.

Action by the First State Bank against George E. Roberson, brought in justice court. From a judgment of the county court, defendant appeals. Appeal dismissed.

W. E. Spell, for appellant.

TALBOT, J. This suit was instituted by appellee in the justice court for precinct No. 1 of Hill county, as appears by what purports to be a copy of the citation issued by that court contained in the record, to recover of appellant an amount less than $200, alleged to be due on a promissory note. The transcript sent to this court contains nothing to show what was done with the case in the justice court. If prosecuted in that court to a final judgment, and an appeal taken to the county court, it is not shown. Hence there is nothing in the record before us showing that the county court ever acquired jurisdiction of the case, and without such jurisdiction this court has none. We have heretofore held that the facts necessary to confer jurisdiction upon this court must affirmatively appear in the record, and if they do not so appear the appeal must be dismissed. Railway Company v. Jordan (Tex. Civ. App.) 83 S. W. 1106; Penn Fire Ins. Co. v. Pounders (Tex. Civ. App.) 84 S. W. 666.

The record failing to show jurisdiction, the appeal is dismissed.

GREEN v. KEGANS et al.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Feb. 27, 1909.)

1. TRIAL (§ 237*)—INSTRUCTIONS—BURDEN OF PROOF.

An instruction that the burden of proof is on plaintiff to establish to the jury's reasonable satisfaction by a preponderance of the evidence the allegations in his petition is erroneous, because imposing on plaintiff a greater burden than the establishment of his cause by a preponderance of the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 551; Dec. Dig. § 237.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 253*)—INSTRUCTIONS—IGNORING ISSUES.

An instruction in an action for the possession of mules, requiring a verdict for de-defendant unless defendant authorized his son to enter into an agreement with plaintiff whereby the latter retained title to the property for the security of a debt, was misleading, because ignoring the issue of ratification, of which there was evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 613; Dec. Dig. § 253.*]

Appeal from Taylor County Court; T. A. Bledsoe, Judge.

Action by W. L. Green against J. H. Kegans and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Wagstaff & Davidson, for appellant. Hardwicke & Hardwicke and W. H. Clett, for appellees.

SPEER, J. Appellant instituted this suit to recover from appellees the title and possession of two certain mules, and from an adverse decision has appealed.

The cause will be reversed for the error of the court contained in the following charge on the burden of proof: "The burden of proof is upon the plaintiff to establish to your reasonable satisfaction by a preponderance of the evidence the material allegations of his petition, and a failure to do so will entitle the defendants to your verdict." It is quite well established that the use of any expressions fairly imposing upon the plaintiff a greater burden than the establishment of his cause of action by a preponderance of the evidence is erroneous. The use of the words "satisfy" and "satisfaction" in this connection has been especially condemned. Prather v. Wilkins, 68 Tex. 187, 4 S. W. 252; Baines v. Ullmann, 71 Tex. 529, 9 S. W. 543; Wallace v. Berry, 83 Tex. 328, 18 S. W. 594.

We are also inclined to the view that the charge complained of in appellant's first assignment of error, requiring a verdict in appellees' favor unless the jury found from the evidence that appellee Kegans authorized his son to enter into the arrangement with appellant whereby appellant retained the title to the mules for the security of the amount due to the Belcher Land Mortgage Company, was misleading, in that it tended to exclude from the consideration of the jury the effect to be given to appellee Kegans' acceptance of the services of his son—i. e., the issue of ratification.

In reversing the case, however, we call attention to Crews v. Harlan, 99 Tex. 93, 87 S. W. 656, wherein a transaction in no essential respect different from the one under consideration was held, under article 3327, Rev. St. 1895, to create a chattel mortgage, rather than a conditional sale.

For the error above indicated, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for another trial.

ESTES et al. v. ESTES et al.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. March 24, 1909.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 387*) — FAILURE TO PERFECT APPEAL—BONDS.

Where parties fail to execute their bond on appeal within the time required by Rev. St. 1895, art. 1387, they are not entitled to the benefits of the statute authorizing the Court of Civil Appeals to permit a party to file a new bond in lieu of a defective one.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2068; Dec. Dig. § 387.*]

Appeal from District Court, Bell County; John M. Furman, Judge.

Action between J. W. Estes, Margaret Murphy, W. G. Murphy, and others and Mrs. Florence Estes and others. From the judgment, the first-named parties appeal. On motion to dismiss appeal. Appeal dismissed as to certain appellants.

Saunders & Saunders and Woodward & Baker, for appellants. Tyler & Tyler and A. L. Curtis, for appellees.

FISHER, C. J. The clerk of the court below fixed the probable costs of the court below and of this court and Supreme Court at $150. The appeal bond is only for the sum of $150, and therefore not double amount of the probable costs as fixed by the clerk, as required by article 1400, Rev. St. 1895. There are also some objections to the bond in that it does not correctly describe the judgment appealed from and in some particulars misdescribes same. This will doubtless be corrected in the new bond to be given by the appellant, who is allowed by our order to file same.

The district court of Bell county, from which this case is appealed, may remain in session more than 8 weeks, and did in fact remain in session at the term at which case was tried about 13 weeks. Consequently the time in which the appeal should be perfected, is governed by the latter part of article 1387, Rev. St. 1895, which is to the effect that, when court may continue in session more than 8 weeks, the bond shall be filed within 20 days after notice of appeal if the party taking the appeal resides in the county, and within 30 days if he resides out of the county. Notice of appeal by appellant was given on March 31, 1908, and the appeal bond was filed and approved April 21, 1908. This statement shows that the appeal bond was not filed within the time required by law by those appellants residing in the county, who from the pleadings are shown to be appellants J. W. Estes, Margaret Murphy, and her husband, W. G. Murphy, but was filed in time by appellant C. P. Estes, who resides in Coleman county; and he is allowed 20 days from this date in which to execute and present to this court a new bond, in double the amount of costs fixed by the clerk, with a certificate of the clerk to the effect that the sureties are good for the amount and have property sufficient to secure bond subject to execution over and above all exemptions. It is suggested that bond correct the other defects pointed out in the motion. As to appellants J. W. Estes, Margaret Murphy, and her husband, W. G. Murphy, the appeal will be dismissed, as requested by appellees in their motion. Failing to perfect their appeal within the time required by law for executing a bond, they are not entitled to the benefits of statute that authorizes this court to permit a party to file a new bond in lieu of one that is defective.

Appeal dismissed as to J. W. Estes, Margaret Murphy, and W. G. Murphy. C. P. Estes is given 20 days from this day to file new bond; otherwise, appeal will be dismissed.

TEXAS CENT. R. CO. v. WATSON.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. March 20, 1909.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 177*)—INJURY TO FREIGHT—LIABILITY.

A carrier of freight is only liable for injury thereto resulting from its own negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 775-803; Dec. Dig. § 177.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 185*)—INJURY TO FREIGHT—SUCCESSIVE CARRIERS.

Where freight transported by successive carriers is injured en route, the presumption is that the injury occurred on the line of the last carrier.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 835-842; Dec. Dig. § 185.*]

3. CARRIERS (§ 137*)—INJURY TO FREIGHT—MEASURE OF DAMAGES—INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction, in an action against a carrier for injuries to freight, that the measure of damages is the difference in the value of the goods in the condition in which they were delivered and their value if delivered in good order, is erroneous, as leading the jury to include injuries necessarily incident to the shipping of the goods, while the carrier is liable only for the injury resulting from its negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 137.*]

4. CARRIERS (§ 135*)—INJURIES TO FREIGHT—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

The measure of a shipper's damages for injuries to freight is the difference in the value of the goods in the condition in which they were delivered at their destination and the condition they would have been in had there been no negligence of the carrier, and in determining these values the values at the point of destination must be used.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 599-604; Dec. Dig. § 135.*]

Appeal from Jones County Court; Jas. P. Stinson, Judge.

Action by J. B. Watson against the Texas Central Railroad Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Thomas & Chapman, for appellant. Arnold & Arnold, for appellee.

SPEER, J. Appellee recovered a judgment against appellant for damages to certain household goods shipped by him over the line of appellant and a connecting carrier from Llano to Stamford. At Stamford the goods, or a portion of them, were received by appellee and again shipped over another line of railroad to Anson. The damages recovered covered certain articles of the goods that were lost and damages for injuries to the balance.

Complaint is made of the following paragraph of the court's charge: "You are therefore charged that if you find, from a preponderance of evidence before you in this case, that J. B. Watson, plaintiff, shipped over the line of railway of defendant, Texas Central Railroad Company, the household goods alleged to have been shipped, and you further find that said goods, or any of them, were damaged, lost, or destroyed, if they were damaged, lost, or destroyed, you will find for plaintiff such sum as you may believe him entitled, if any, not exceeding the amount sued for; and unless you so believe, you will find for defendant." It will be seen from this charge that the jury were authorized to find for appellee if the goods were shipped over the line of appellant and were subsequently lost or damaged, regardless of whose fault caused such loss or damage, or, indeed, whether the loss was caused through the fault of any one. Appellant, of course, would only be liable for damages resulting from its own negligence. Besides, as already stated, the goods were transported over the line of another carrier before they finally reached the hands of appellee, and as to the damaged goods delivered to him the presumption is that the last carrier was liable. F. W. & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Shanley, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 291, 81 S. W. 1014; Tex. & Pac. Ry. Co. v. Capper, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 61, 84 S. W. 694.

The charge also imposed too great a burden on appellant with respect to the measure of damages; the language used being as follows: "And in case of damage to goods the measure of damages is the difference in the value of the goods in the condition in which they are received and the value of such goods if received in good order." This charge is calculated to cause the jury to include in their estimate of damages injuries necessarily incident to the shipping of the goods, while the carrier would be liable only for those injuries resulting from its negligence. Tex. & Pac. Ry. Co. v. Stewart (Tex. Civ. App.) 114 S. W. 414.

The measure of appellee's damages will be the difference in the value of his household goods in the condition in which they were delivered to him at Stamford, and the condition they would have been in had there been no negligence on the part of appellant; and in determining these values the Stamford values should be used, and not those of Llano.

For these errors, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for another trial.

ALLEN v. FLECK.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. March 20, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 216*)—INSTRUCTIONS—OBJECTIONS WAIVED.

A party failing to request an instruction on a particular point supported by evidence cannot complain of the failure of the court to give such an instruction.

3. PARTNERSHIP (§ 216*)—FIRM CLAIMS—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE.

Appeal from District Court, Wichita County; A. H. Carrigan, Judge.

Action by Frank Fleck against R. S. Allen. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

J. T. Montgomery, for appellant. L. H. Mathis and Huff, Barwise & Huff, for appellee.

DUNKLIN, J. Frank Fleck recovered a judgment against R. S. Allen for $2,006.57 as commissions earned in negotiating sales of lands for Allen. Plaintiff alleged in his petition that Allen employed the partnership firm of Fleck & Ehlers, composed of plaintiff and T. M. Ehlers, to sell lands owned by Allen situated in Wilbarger and Wichita counties, and that the sales made, for which commissions were claimed, were made by said partnership; that the members of said firm were equal partners; that T. M. Ehlers had transferred to plaintiff all his interest in the commissions claimed, thus vesting in plaintiff the entire interest therein; but, upon the trial, no evidence was offered to prove such transfer. Both members of the firm of Fleck & Ehlers resided in Little Rock, Mo., and the sales for which commissions were sought were made to emigrants from Missouri. Plaintiff came with the purchasers and the negotiations conducted in Texas on the part of the firm were by him exclusively.

Appellant contends that for lack of proof of a transfer to plaintiff of Ehlers' interest the judgment of the trial court should be reversed. Plaintiff's failure to make this proof was made one of the grounds of defendant's motion for new trial, which was overruled by the trial court, and in this ruling we think there was error which requires a reversal of the judgment. Appellee contends that the record shows that the trial of the case was upon the assumption that Fleck alone owned the claim which was made the basis of the suit, and that, as appellant failed to request a charge to the jury to find in his favor on account of plaintiff's failure to prove the transfer to him of Ehlers' interest, appellant has waived his right to complain of such omission of proof. To support this contention numerous cases are cited, collated in 1 Green's Digest, col. 354, § 235, announcing the familiar rule that a party failing to request instructions to the jury on a particular theory supported by evidence cannot complain on appeal of a failure of the court to give such an instruction, but we think these authorities are not applicable. Neither do we think that appellee's contention is sustained by the cases of Pierson v. Tom, 10 Tex. 145, and People's Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Dalley, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 38, 42 S. W. 364. In the case of Pierson v. Tom, supra, plaintiff recovered judgment for certain personal property, and proof of a certain judgment in his favor rendered in another case was necessary to sustain that judgment. The records of the former case showing the judgment therein rendered were introduced in evidence, but the judgment itself was not read to the jury; and this failure was assigned as error by the appellant in the case. Affirming the judgment, the court, in discussing the plaintiff's failure to prove that he had such a judgment, said: "Had it been questioned, a reference to the record, a part if not all of which was in evidence, would have conclusively settled the question." In the case of People's Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Dalley, supra, the association, a foreign corporation, was plaintiff and failed to make proof that it had a permit to do business in the state. It was held that defendants, who did not assign such failure of proof as error in their motion for new trial, and who failed to request a special instruction to the jury based thereon, could not complain. But this contention was by cross-assignment of error by the defendant in the court below in whose favor the judgment was rendered and which judgment was, on appeal, affirmed, thus rendering the decision of the question unnecessary to a disposition of the case. It is well settled by the authorities that in a suit to collect a debt due a partnership firm all the partners in interest, except dormant partners, are necessary parties plaintiffs. In the case at bar, plaintiff having alleged that his former partner Ehlers had transferred to him all his interest, and that he alone owned the claim, one-half of which was formerly owned by Ehlers, to sustain a recovery by him for the full amount of the claim acquired by the firm, proof of such transfer to him of Ehlers' interest was as necessary as proof of the validity of the claim itself. Ricker v. Schadt, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 460, 23 S. W. 907; Speake v. Prewitt, 6 Tex. 252; 15 Ency. Pl. & Pr. pp. 854, 855, and notes.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Other questions presented in appellant's brief will not likely arise upon another trial, and a discussion of them is therefore unnecessary.

For the error above noted, the judgment of the trial court is reversed, and the cause remanded for another trial.

HARGROVE v. COTHRAN.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Feb. 13, 1909. Rehearing Denied March 20, 1909.)

1. NEW TRIAL (§ 119*)—MOTION—TIME TO MAKE—DISCRETION OF COURT.

Though the statute provides that a motion for a new trial shall be filed within two days after judgment, the judge trying the cause has the discretion to consider a motion filed after that time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. § 243; Dec. Dig. § 119.*]

2. NEW TRIAL (§ 86*)—GROUNDS—ABSENCE OF PARTY AND COUNSEL.

Where, in support of a motion for a new trial on the ground that defendant and his counsel were unavoidably absent at the trial, it appeared that the absence of the counsel was excusable and that defendant, who had been ill before the date set for trial, could not have employed other counsel and prepared for trial, the denial of a new trial was erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. § 173; Dec. Dig. § 86.*]

Appeal from District Court, Montague County; Clem B. Potter, Judge.

Action by T. J. Cothran against Walker Hargrove. From an order denying a new trial after judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Judgment reversed, and cause remanded.

Graham & Williams, for appellant. J. A. Templeton and W. S. Jameson, for appellee.

DUNKLIN, J. From a judgment in favor of T. J. Cothran against Walker Hargrove, rendered by the district court of Montague county, the defendant has appealed. During an altercation between the defendant and John Adams, city marshal of Bowie, the defendant's pistol was discharged, the bullet therefrom wounding T. J. Cothran in the foot, and the judgment rendered was for damages for this injury. The case was tried without a jury, in the absence of defendant and his counsel, whom he had employed to represent him, and who had filed an answer to the plaintiff's petition. On the third day after rendition of the judgment, defendant filed his motion for a new trial, and later amended the motion. The grounds upon which the motion was based were that defendant and his counsel were both unavoidably prevented from being present at the trial by illness, and the motion alleged facts which it appeared he could prove, and which constituted a meritorious defense to plaintiff's suit. The excuse given for the defendant's absence was controverted by plaintiff, and the motion was overruled by the court, who filed findings of fact and conclusions of law in support of the ruling, and upon this ruling appellant has assigned error. The trial was in Montague, the defendant resided in Ft. Worth at the time, while his counsel resided in Amarillo.

The court found that the absence of defendant's counsel was caused by the serious illness of one of his family, and was excusable. A further finding by the court, however, was that prior to the date set for the trial defendant had been ill, but on that day he could have been present at court, and that he did not use that care he should have used to obey the process of court. The affidavit of the defendant in support of the motion was to the effect that he was too ill to make the trip to Montague to attend court, and attached to the motion was a certificate to the same effect, signed by his attending physician in Ft. Worth, but plaintiff introduced evidence showing that defendant went from Ft. Worth to Weatherford the day before the trial, and this evidence was the basis of the court's finding that defendant could have been present at the trial. If defendant had reached Montague in time for the trial, after learning that his attorney would not be present, it would have been too late to employ other counsel and duly prepare for trial on the day set, and doubtless the court, after learning of the cause of the attorney's absence, would have granted a new trial.

Appellee contends that, as the motion for new trial was not filed within two days after the judgment, the same should not have been considered; but this contention is overruled. While the statute provides that a motion for a new trial shall be filed within two days after rendition of the judgment, it is well settled by the decisions of our Supreme Court that the judge trying the case has the discretion to consider a motion filed after the expiration of that period, and in this instance it does not appear that this discretion was improperly exercised. George v. Taylor, 55 Tex. 99.

We think the court erred in overruling appellant's motion for a new trial, and for this error the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

KEYSTONE MILLS CO. v. CHAMBERS.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. March 17, 1909. Rehearing Denied April 14, 1909.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 180*)—"RAILROAD."

The word "railroad," as used in Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 4560h, prescribing what railroad employes are fellow servants with each other, includes a logging railroad operated by a corporation solely to carry its own lumber from the woods to its sawmill.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 289*)—LOGGING RAILROADS—INJURY TO EMPLOYE—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—JURY QUESTION.

Whether one employed by a lumber company to cut and scale timber was guilty of contributory negligence in being on the engine of a logging train when injured in a collision held, under the evidence, a jury question.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 742*)—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR—PRESENTATION—TECHNICAL INSUFFICIENCY.

Appeal from Montgomery County Court; S. A. McCall, Judge.

Action by George W. Chambers against the Keystone Mills Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

C. W. Nugent and W. N. Foster, for appellant. Williams & Reid, for appellee.

NEILL, J. This suit was brought by appellee against appellant to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. The plaintiff alleged that in September, 1907, the defendant, in connection with its sawmill, operated a tram railway for the purpose of hauling logs to its mill and carrying its employes, engaged in cutting and scaling timber, to and from their work; that plaintiff was one of such employes; that he was on the train used by the company for so carrying its employes to and from their work, when several cars of a logging train on an upgrade beyond were, by defendant's servants operating such train, negligently cut loose and permitted to come in violent collision with the one plaintiff was on, whereby he was injured, etc. The plaintiff recovered a judgment for $750.

Appellant urges by a number of assignments that neither the allegations nor the evidence show a right of recovery, because it appears therefrom that plaintiff's injuries were caused by a fellow servant. We cannot sustain the contention. Article 4560h, Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, provides who of the servants of those operating a railroad are fellow servants with each other, and that those who do not come within the provisions of the article shall not be considered fellow servants. The word "railroad," as used in the article, includes a logging railroad operated by a corporation solely for the purpose of carrying its own lumber from the woods to its sawmill. Lumber Co. v. Taylor (Tex. Civ. App.) 87 S. W. 359; Cunningham v. Neal (Tex.) 107 S. W. 539, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 479. It is clear that plaintiff and the servant of defendant who cut from the train the cars which collided with the train plaintiff was on were not in contemplation of the article referred to fellow servants. We therefore overrule all the assignments of error under which such contention is urged. Whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in being on the engine at the time of the collision was purely a question of fact, to be determined by the jury from the evidence and attending circumstances.

Upon the ground that it permits a double recovery, complaint is made of this paragraph of the court's charge: "The court erred in paragraph 13 of his general charge, wherein the jury was instructed: 'If you find for the plaintiff, it will be your duty to assess his damages at such sum as you believe will be a fair and reasonable compensation to him for such physical injuries, if any, and such physical and mental suffering, if any, as the plaintiff received or sustained by reason of being run upon or against by the log cars of said defendant; and in estimating such damages, if you find any damage, which the plaintiff has sustained, if you find any, you will consider bodily and mental pain endured by plaintiff, if any, and probable future loss that will result to him from such injuries, if any, and, if you believe from the evidence that the plaintiff received injuries of a permanent character, you can, in determining what amount of damages you will assess, take that fact into consideration, as well as the time it took to recover, if he has recovered, or may probably take time to recover therefrom, if you find he has not already recovered; and in addition thereto, if you find for plaintiff, you will find for such sum as plaintiff was compelled to spend, not to exceed $100, as you believe to be fair and reasonable, for such medical treatment, if you find that such medical treatment was necessary, and such charges reasonable; and if you find that plaintiff necessarily lost any time from his business by reason of his injuries, if any you find, then you will also find such further sum as you believe will be a fair and reasonable compensation to plaintiff for time so lost or that may hereafter be lost, if any, provided that the whole amount of damages you so find and assess, if any, shall not exceed the amount of $1,000.* It was conceded by appellee's counsel on oral argument that the charge is obnoxious to the objection, in that it authorizes compensation for the time it might take plaintiff to recover, and also for the time he might hereafter lose from his business. But he contends that the assignment should not be considered because the point is not presented in appellant's brief by such a proposition as is contemplated by the rules; and, if considered, it is apparent from the small amount of damages awarded that it did not affect the verdict. We cannot sustain either contention. It would be carrying a purely technical objection to its extremity to uphold the first; and presuming against the presumption that such an error must be regarded as prejudicial, unless it clearly appears to the contrary, to sustain the second.

On account of the error indicated, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

TEXAS & N. O. R. CO. v. GEIGER.†

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Feb. 24, 1909. On Rehearing, March 31, 1909.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 471*)—ADMISSIBILITY—OPINIONS.

Witness' statement that he was using a revolving saw in "the usual and customary manner" was a statement of fact and not of opinion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Dec. Dig. § 471.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 293*)—INJURY TO EMPLOYÉ—INSTRUCTIONS—CONFORMITY TO PLEADING.

In an action for injury to a minor employé while operating a revolving saw, allegations of dangers in using the saw connected with specified defects, that though inexperienced he did not know of the defects and dangers, that the employer by using ordinary care would have known thereof, that the employer knew of the employé's youth and inexperience and failed to warn him of the defects and dangers, justified an instruction that the employer was bound to use ordinary care to instruct an employé as to the particular perils of the employment and the means of avoiding them, and where the employer knows, or by ordinary care ought to know, that the same are unknown to the employé, and where the means of avoiding them would not be obvious to an inexperienced person of ordinary intelligence without such instruction, that if, in such circumstances, the employer fails to use ordinary care so to instruct an inexperienced employé, and such failure proximately causes injury to the employé, the employer is liable, unless the employé has otherwise become informed of such perils and how to avoid them, or unless he has in some manner negligently contributed to the injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 293.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 293*)—INJURY TO EMPLOYÉ—INSTRUCTIONS.

The instruction was not erroneous as basing the employer's negligence on its failure to use ordinary care to warn the employé, regardless of knowledge or means of knowledge of the danger, since the clause "in such circumstances" makes the preceding part of the instruction the basis for what follows.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 293.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 882*)—INVITED ERROR.

Error, in a personal injury action against an employer, in authorizing recovery on a theory not pleaded, is not ground for reversal, where defendant induced, or contributed to, the error by requesting charges embodying such theory.

5. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 293*)—INJURY TO EMPLOYÉ—INSTRUCTIONS—CONSISTENCY.

In an action against an employer for injury to an employé caused by a revolving saw, an instruction that if plaintiff was not inexperienced at that work and ignorant of its perils and how to avoid them, or defendant did not know that such perils were unknown to plaintiff, or ought to have been unknown to him in using ordinary care, or if defendant's agent did not fail to use ordinary care in not instructing him of such perils and how to avoid them, or if the jury did not believe that but for such failure the injury would not have happened, plaintiff could not recover, was not inconsistent with an instruction that if plaintiff was injured at the time and place and substantially in the manner as alleged, if the machine was defective in a specified respect producing the injury, and if permitting the machine to remain in such condition was negligent, and such negligence proximately caused the injury, plaintiff could recover, unless he assumed the risk or was guilty of contributory negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 293.*]

6. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 108*)—INJURY TO EMPLOYÉ—DEFECTIVE MACHINERY—LIABILITY OF EMPLOYER.

Any employé, regardless of his experience, can recover for damages caused by defective machinery given him to use, if the defect was due to the employer's negligence and proximately causes the injury, if it was not an assumed risk, and there was no contributory negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 208; Dec. Dig. § 108.*]

7. TRIAL (§ 260*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REFUSAL—MATTER COVERED.

An instruction covered by the charge is properly refused.

† Writ of error denied by Supreme Court May 5, 1909.

8. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 234*)—DEFECTIVE MACHINERY—CONSTRUCTIVE KNOWLEDGE.

An employé is not chargeable with knowledge of defects in machinery merely because the use of ordinary care would disclose them.

9. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 293*)—INJURY TO MINOR EMPLOYÉ—INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction, in an action against an employer for injury to a minor employé, that an employer need not furnish absolutely safe machinery, being merely required to use ordinary care to provide safe machinery, and that hence if a part of the machine in question had lost motion, but that it was necessary in the operation of the machine and could not have been avoided by defendant in the use of ordinary care, plaintiff could not recover, was properly refused for ignoring the theory of his youth and inexperience.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 293.*]

10. DAMAGES (§ 130*)—PERSONAL INJURY—EXCESSIVE RECOVERY.

A recovery of $10,000 for injury to the right hand of a minor employed as a chisel mortiser, caused by his hand being caught by a revolving saw, was excessive by $4,000.

Where an employé sued for injury caused by a revolving saw on the theory that it was caused by dangers arising from defects in the machine, the employer had the right to plead specially and to have the jury instructed that, if plaintiff's injuries resulted from risks and dangers incident to the operation of the saw, he could not recover.

Appeal from District Court, Harris County; Norman G. Kittrell, Judge.

Action by Jacob Gelger against the Texas & New Orleans Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed on condition remittitur is entered; otherwise reversed and remanded.

Baker, Botts, Parker & Garwood and Lane, Jackson, Kelley & Walters, for appellant. Lovejoy & Parker, for appellee.

JAMES, O. J. Jacob Gelger, a minor, by next friend, alleged: That he was in the defendant's employ as a worker at a chisel mortiser, when he was ordered away from same by his superior and put to work at a rip saw. That, while in the act of ripping a small piece of timber, the rip saw caught in front of the same with the back teeth thereof throwing same back, over, and around, and dragging and throwing plain-tiff's right hand into the saw and injured it, without fault or negligence on plaintiff's part. That said injuries were caused by defendant's negligence in these respects: That the guide to the rip saw and its connections were defective and unsafe and improperly fastened, in that the piece or rod of iron to which the guide was attached, and which moves and operates in a slot or groove in the table, did not fit close enough, but had lost motion, by reason of which defect the guide was permitted to get out of plumb and square, and the piece of timber was caught and bound in the back teeth of the saw. That said saw and the table, through the top of which it was operated, were negligently permitted to get out of level and remain out of plumb. That the false table, through which the saw operated and protruded upward, was negligently permitted to be in an unsafe condition, in that it was warped, and the defendant negligently attempted to keep the same level and plumb by putting underneath a piece of wood, or by driving a wedge in the side. That plaintiff was a minor, and his regular work was at the mortiser. That he was unaccustomed to said machine and inexperienced in operating it. That defendant, by the exercise of ordinary care, could and would have known of its defects and the danger thereof, and could and did know of the youth and inexperience of plaintiff. And that, as a direct and proximate result of said negligence, plaintiff's hand was drawn into said saw by the binding and catching of said timber, and he thereby received the injuries he specifies. Defendant pleaded general denial, assumed risk, and contributory negligence. There was a verdict for plaintiff in the sum of $10,000.

The first assignment complains of plaintiff being allowed to testify, in reference to the question as to whether or not the manner plaintiff was shoving the plank in was an unusual manner, or a usual and customary manner, that "it was the usual and customary manner I was doing it." The objection to this was it was the expression of his opinion. It was the statement of a fact, and not of an opinion.

The rule of law, stated in the charge complained of by the second assignment, was correct, and had application to the case. That portion of the charge was devoted to stating rules of law applicable to the case and undertook to submit nothing. The portion of the charge which submitted the issues explained clearly that the negligence of defendant, if any, must have been the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries in order for him to recover.

The third assignment complains of this paragraph of the charge: "It was the further duty of the defendant to use 'ordinary care' to instruct or inform an employé of the particular perils of the employment, and how to avoid them, where the employé is inexperienced and in ignorance of such perils and the means of avoiding them, and where the defendant knows, or in the exercise of ordinary care ought to know, that the same are unknown to the employé, and where the means of avoiding them would not be obvious to an inexperienced person of ordinary intelligence, without such instruction or information. In such circumstances, if the defendant fails to use ordinary care so to instruct or inform an inexperienced employé, and such failure is the proximate cause of the injury to the employé, then the defendant is liable, unless the employé has otherwise become informed of such perils, and of how to avoid them, or unless he has in some manner, by his own negligence, contributed to the injuries complained of, in which event he could not recover." The point made by appellant's proposition is: "That there was no claim or allegation that the operation of the rip saw was a perilous employment, and that defendant was negligent in failing to warn him of its dangers and how to avoid them. Therefore, under plaintiff's pleading, in order for defendant to have been guilty of negligence in failing to warn plaintiff of the danger of operating this machine, it must have actually known, or in the exercise of ordinary care should have known, that said defects existed and failed to warn plaintiff thereof; whereas, this charge bases the negligence of defendant on its failure to use ordinary care to warn plaintiff of the perils of operating the saw, regardless of whether it knew, or in the exercise of ordinary care should have known, of such defects or not."

The petition does contain allegation of dangers in the use of the saw connected with certain alleged defects, that plaintiff was a minor and inexperienced in the use of the machine, because of which he did not know of its said defects and dangers, that defendant by the exercise of ordinary care could and would have known of said defects and dangers, and could and did know of plaintiff's youth and inexperience, and failed to warn him of such defects and dangers. The charge complained of correctly expressed rules of law applicable to the allegations. The real complaint regarding it appears to be that the court based the negligence of defendant on its failure to use ordinary care to warn plaintiff, without regard to its knowledge or means of knowledge of the existence of the danger; but the latter part of the paragraph, where this alleged defect occurs, begins by saying, "In such circumstances," thereby incorporating into it what had preceded, and making that the basis of what the latter part of the instruction says.

The fifth assignment involves alleged error in the eleventh and twelfth paragraphs of the charge read in connection with each other:

"On the other hand, if you do not believe from the evidence that plaintiff was injured at the time and place, and substantially in the manner alleged, or do not believe that the guide to the rip saw got out of square, on account of lost motion in the slot or groove in which the guide as attached was operated, or do not believe that such condition of said guide, if it existed, caused the piece of timber to catch or bind in the back teeth of the saw, producing the injuries complained of, or do not believe that said condition of the guide, if it existed, was negligence on the part of the defendant, or do not believe that said condition of the guide was the 'proximate cause' of plaintiff's injuries, then in any, each, or all of said alternative events you will find for the defendant, unless you find for plaintiff under the instructions submitted to you in the next and following paragraph of this charge.

"If you believe, from a preponderance of the evidence, the following group of facts, and each and all of them, to wit, that said plaintiff was injured substantially in the manner alleged, and that he was inexperienced in the work at which he was hurt, and ignorant of its perils, if such there were, and how to avoid them, and that the defendant's authorized agent knew, or in the exercise of ordinary care ought to have known, same were unknown to plaintiff, and that such perils, if any, and the means of avoiding them, would not be obvious to an inexperienced person of ordinary intelligence, without instruction or information, and that defendant's authorized agent, in putting plaintiff to work at the rip saw where he was hurt, failed to instruct or inform him so as to enable him to comprehend the particular perils, if such there were, in operating and feeding said machine, and that such failure so to instruct or inform plaintiff, if any, was a want of 'ordinary care' on the part of such agent of defendant, as before defined, and that but for the want of such ordinary care plaintiff would not have undertaken to do said work in the manner he did, and would have avoided the injury, then you will find your verdict for plaintiff, unless you further find from the evidence that plaintiff assumed said risks, or that he was guilty of contributory negligence."

Appellant has two propositions, in substance: First. That the eleventh paragraph, taken in connection with the twelfth, to which it refers, authorized the jury to find for plaintiff upon a state of facts and upon grounds wholly independent and different from those set up; in other words, authorized a recovery upon a different case from that sued on. In support of this proposition, appellant says: That there was no allegation that the rip saw was a dangerous machine, nor that any perils were involved in its use apart from the defects alleged, nor that defendant's agent failed to instruct plaintiff how to operate it and to warn him of its dangers; that plaintiff's case, as alleged, was negligence of defendant in permitting the defects in the machine and failing to warn him of such defects and the danger connected with such defects; and that plaintiff by reason of his youth and inexperience was not aware of such defects and their dangers, but defendant knew, or should have known, of them and of plaintiff's youth and inexperience and were negligent in failing to warn him in respect thereto. In other words, the point which appellant makes is that, there being no allegation that the operation of a rip saw machine is in itself a dangerous employment, it was error to allow any recovery upon the theory of failure to warn plaintiff, in case the jury should have found for defendant under the eleventh paragraph. This goes upon the idea that, if there was no negligence of defendant in reference to the construction of the machine, there was no liability claimed under plaintiff's pleading, because the dangers referred to in the petition were solely those arising from defects in the machine.

The petition, after alleging the defects in the machine, contained these allegations concerning negligence in regard to warning plaintiff: "That defendants and each of them, their agents, servants, and employés, respectively, failed and omitted to use ordinary care to warn plaintiff of the defects in said rip saw and the dangers thereof and how to avoid them; that by reason of his youth and inexperience, plaintiff did not know of said defects and of their dangers, but the defendants, their agents, servants, and employés, respectively, by the exercise of ordinary care could and would have known of said defects and their dangers, and could and did know of the youth of plaintiff and of his inexperience." The petition did not state a case for recovery upon the theory that the operating of a rip saw machine was dangerous, and that defendant was negligent in not instructing or warning the boy, when he was put to work upon it, in respect to dangers ordinarily involved in its use. The only danger alleged was that attending certain specified defects therein. It appears that the only alleged defect of which there was proof was the one that the guide to the rip saw was out of square on account of lost motion in the slot or groove in which the guide operated. This appears from a later paragraph of the charge which eliminated all the other alleged defects.

Now, in the eleventh paragraph, above quoted, it will be seen that the jury were told to find for defendant if they did not believe that the guide to the rip saw got out of square on account of lost motion in the slot or groove in which the guide, as attached, was operated. If the jury found this to be the fact, we think it should have been the end of the case as the same was pleaded by plaintiff, for the reason that the only danger alleged and proved by plaintiff, and the only negligence alleged by him, were those which had reference to such defect. Yet under the twelfth instruction the jury were authorized to go ahead and find for plaintiff upon the theory of peril incident to the operation of the machine and the duty to warn in respect thereto. It is claimed that the error committed in said paragraphs was invited, because defendant, at the trial, proceeded upon the theory that the court did, that a case was stated of negligence in not warning plaintiff of the general danger incident to the use of a dangerous machine, and asked charges which would have been applicable upon that theory. If the court was led into the error by such requests, or they contributed to it, we think that defendant would not be heard to ask a reversal on such ground of a verdict which might after all have been found on the theory that was properly involved. Donk Bros. v. Stroetter, 229 Ill. 134, 82 N. E. 251; Railway v. Matthews, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 306, 79 S. W. 71; Ellis v. Marshall (Tex. Civ. App.) 95 S. W. 680.

Defendant requested a number of charges, all of which were marked "Refused." Upon the first one is written: "Refused because, in so far as it is correct, it is covered by the general charge, and the reason will be taken as applying to all charges refused." This might be taken to indicate that they were requested after the court had prepared its charge. Tel. Co. v. Bowen, 97 Tex. 623, 81 S. W. 27. But there is unmistakable evidence that all the special charges which were numbered 1 to 10, consecutively, were asked before the court had finished the preparation of its charge, in the fact that five of them are found incorporated in the charge precisely in the terms asked, and the nature and wording of some of them are such that it is inconceivable but that the court placed them in the charge in response to the requests. Not only this, but we find that while the petition, carefully construed, does not allege that there were dangers incident to the operation of such a machine, as a dangerous machine, the defendant pleaded to such a case as follows: "And for further plea and answer the defendants aver that plaintiff is not entitled to recover for the alleged injuries to the said Jacob Geiger for the reason that the same resulted from risks and dangers which were incident to the service in which plaintiff voluntarily engaged as an employé," etc. Thus we see that defendant construed the petition as embodying the issue. It appears, therefore, from its pleading, that defendant itself considered that the issue of dangers ordinarily incident to the operation of such machine, apart from defects, was involved, and, upon the idea that this was so, tried the case and asked instructions which were not relevant

Requested charge No. 2 stated: "If you believe from the evidence that the danger from operating the saw upon which plaintiff got hurt was patent and obvious to a person of plaintiff's age, experience, and understanding, * * * then no duty devolved upon defendant to give any warning to plaintiff of such danger, and on the allegation of failure to warn and instruct plaintiff of such danger you will find for the defendants." The danger which this charge had reference to was not the danger growing out of the defects, but those generally incident to operating the saw. Requested charge No. 4 states: "You are charged that if it was a fact that the circular saw with which plaintiff was injured was a piece of dangerous machinery and likely to injure any one coming in contact with it, * * * then he cannot recover for his injuries sustained by coming in contact with this saw, * * * and under such circumstances your verdict should be for the defendant." This charge refers to the machine as a 'dangerous one, without any reference to defects, and authorized a verdict for the defendant upon that theory. Requested charge No. 6 was based upon the same theory of dangerous machine, of danger connected with the employment, and failure to warn in reference thereto. These charges all went bodily into the main charge, and it seems to us that appellant cannot complain that the court's charge dealt with the case and submitted it upon that theory. The adoption by the court of that, as one of the theories in the case, appears to have been contributed to, if not caused, by the defendant, and as already stated, having participated in introducing an improper issue, it ought not to be heard to say that the verdict which could stand, and may have been found, upon another proper issue, should be, for that reason, set aside.

There is no merit in the second proposition under the fifth assignment of error if both of said theories of recovery are treated as having been in the case. What has been said disposes of the fifth and sixth assignments and the first proposition under the seventh.

The seventh assignment has an additional proposition, complaining of the thirteenth paragraph of the charge, which was as follows: "On the other hand, if you do not believe that plaintiff was inexperienced in the work in which he was engaged at said rip saw, and was ignorant of the particular perils of such service, if such there were, and how to avoid them; or do not believe that the defendant's authorized agent knew that such perils, if they existed, were unknown to plaintiff, or ought to have been known to him by the exercise of ordinary care; or do not believe that such agent failed to use 'ordinary care' in not instructing or informing him of such perils, and how to avoid them, if you find he did not warn or instruct him; or do not believe that but for such failure, if any, the injuries complained of would not have happened—then in any, each, or all of said alternative events you will find for the defendant, unless you find for the plaintiff under instructions submitted to you in the first group of facts."

The tenth paragraph of the charge, the one to which the above refers, reads as follows: "If you believe, from a preponderance of the evidence, the following group of facts, and each and all of them, to wit, that plaintiff, Jacob Geiger, was injured at the time and place and substantially in the manner as alleged, and that the guide to the rip saw at which he was working got out of square on account of lost motion in the slot or groove in which the rod to which the guide was attached was operated, and that this caused the piece of timber to catch and bind in the back teeth of the saw, producing injuries as alleged, and that permitting the guide to be and remain in said condition, if you so find, was 'negligence' on the part of the defendant, Texas & New Orleans Railroad Company, and that said negligence, if any, was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury, then you will find for the plaintiff, unless you further find from the evidence that plaintiff assumed the risks, or that he was guilty of 'contributory negligence' in some respect as alleged in defendant's answer."

The point is that these charges, read together, told the jury that although plaintiff was experienced in the use of the machine, and knew the particular perils connected with it, and although defendant was not guilty of negligence in not warning and instructing him concerning its perils, still defendant would be liable according to the tenth paragraph, if lost motion was in the guide, and defendant had been negligent in permitting such lost motion, and such negligence was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury. We see no conflict in them. Plaintiff may have been experienced in the use of such machine, and may have known the dangers incident to its operation. In fact, he might have been a mature man and familiar with such dangers, and may have needed no instruction on the subject, yet it would not follow that he could not recover. Any servant is entitled to recover for damages arising from defects in machinery given him to use, if the presence of the defect is due to the master's negligence, and it is the proximate cause of the injury, conditioned, of course, as charge No. 10 states, that it was not an assumed risk, or not due to contributory negligence. The charge No. 13 and charge No. 10 treat of different subjects. The former deals with the perils incident to the service, and the latter with the peril due to a certain defect. Under the former the jury may have seen fit to find for defendant, but nevertheless there was still the other theory of liability to consider.

The eighth assignment is overruled for the reason that the refused charge is embodied sufficiently in the charge given.

The ninth is overruled because the requested charge was erroneous, as ignoring the issue based on plaintiff's youth and inexperience.

The tenth is overruled because the charge requested was erroneous, in this: that it charged the employé with the consequences of a defect in the machine of which he knew "or in the exercise of ordinary care would have known." An employé is not charged with knowledge of defects in machinery, because the exercise of ordinary care would disclose them, as the duty to exercise care to discover them does not rest upon him.

The eleventh complains of the refusal of the following charge: "You are instructed that an employer is not bound to furnish absolutely safe machinery or appliances for the use of his employés, but all that is required of him is to use ordinary care in providing safe machinery for the employé. Therefore, if you believe from the evidence that the guide in question had lost motion, but that same was necessary in the operation of said machine, and could not have been avoided by defendants, by the use of ordinary care, then you will find for defendants on the issue of their liability by reason of said lost motion." The charge was properly refused because it also ignored the theory of the youth and inexperience of plaintiff.

We sustain the assignment as to excess in the verdict, and shall affirm the judgment, provided a remittitur is filed within seven days of $4,000, reducing the amount to $6,000; otherwise the judgment will be reversed, and the cause remanded.

On Rehearing.

The discussion of the fifth assignment of error in this motion makes a further opinion appropriate. It is earnestly contended that the answer, and the requested charges which are mentioned in the original opinion, under this assignment were not interposed because defendant considered that the petition involved the theory of dangers ordinarily incident to the operation of the machine, as a theory of recovery; but, on the contrary, that they proceeded upon the idea that no such theory of recovery existed, and the matter was pleaded as a sufficient defense in itself, and the charges were asked in order to present the defense, because it cannot be denied that, if no case was pleaded by plaintiff involving dangers inherent in the use of the machine as a dangerous instrument, he would not be allowed to recover at all upon that theory, and defendant would have had a good defense by merely establishing that the danger which led to plaintiff's injury was one incident to the use of a dangerous machine. In other words, if plaintiff stated no case upon the theory of dangerous machine, he would be defeated by proof that his injury was due to the danger ordinarily involved in its use. Defendant undoubtedly had the right to plead specially, as it did, that, if plaintiff's injuries were the result of risks and dangers which were incident to the operation of a rip saw, he could not recover. He also had the right, in the state of plaintiff's pleading, to have the court charge the jury to find for defendant outright if plaintiff's injury was caused by dangers that were incident to the use of such machines, for the simple reason that plaintiff had asked for a recovery upon the theory that the injury was caused by dangers arising from defects in the machine.

But it seems to us that defendant's charges Nos. 4 and 6 show upon their face that they were not drawn with any idea that, if the injury occurred by reason of dangers ordinarily incident to the use of such a machine, defendant was ipso facto entitled to a verdict. The wording of said two special charges, mentioning various considerations not at all material to the above theory, negatives the position now taken by counsel. If plaintiff had pleaded that the machine, without defects, was dangerous, he could have recovered if there was a duty to warn plaintiff and it had not been performed. The questions of warning, plaintiff's intelligence, and equal opportunity of knowing, were questions which would have been material upon the issue of dangers incident to the use of such a machine, if plaintiff had pleaded such a case. However, as the pleading was, these questions were immaterial if the jury should have found that the injury was the result of dangers incident to the service, as distinguished from dangers arising from defects. All that defendant had to do, in the state of the petition, in asking a charge appropriate to that theory, was to say that if the injury was caused by dangers incident to the use of such machines, or incident to the service in which plaintiff was engaged, to find for defendant. Instead of this, two of the special charges, which defendant now claims referred only to such theory, included mention of matters not at all material to it, and which would not have incumbered the charges had counsel had the idea at the time that the mere fact that the injury occurred from dangers inherent in the service was sufficient to defeat a recovery. We think the requested charges Nos. 4 and 6 as they were framed indicate: That defendant considered that it was called on to meet a case for recovery, based upon dangers incident to the use of a rip saw machine; that it tried the case and asked instructions upon that theory; and that the court probably was led to consider and submit the case upon that theory, by the course pursued by counsel at the trial, including counsel for the defendant.

The motion calls attention to the fact that we have not passed on assignment 4. There was no error in the charge it attacks. The charge deals with the question of negligence of defendant in permitting the guide to be and remain in a defective condition. The term "permitting" presupposes the idea of knowledge.

Motion overruled.

Appeal from District Court, Bexar County; J. L. Camp, Judge.

Action by Martin Keller against August Toudouze and John Legler. Judgment in favor of plaintiff against defendant Toudouze, and in favor of defendant Legler, and defendant Toudouze appeals. Reversed as to defendant Toudouze, and judgment rendered, and affirmed as to defendant Legler.

W. P. Finley, for appellant. Sallaway & McAskill, for appellee.

JAMES, C. J. Keller, as owner of a certain lot No. 8, block 4, fronting 50 feet on the south side of Keller street in the city of San Antonio, sued Toudouze, alleging that the latter had come upon his lot, threatening to tear down his fence, and to fence off a portion of said lot, and asking for an injunction against Toudouze. Toudouze answered by general denial, etc., and pleaded in reconvention, claiming that a parcel of land in controversy, viz., about 12 feet of land located on the south side of Keller street, was in fact a part of lot No. 9 in said block owned by him; that plaintiff's fence was an obstruction to his enjoyment of said strip; and prayed that plaintiff take nothing by his suit; that defendant have a permanent mandatory injunction directing that said fence, in so far as it interfered with defendant's use of his said property, be removed and taken away; and that the division line, a true line for the said fence between the lots 8 and 9, be fixed, etc. By supplemental petition Keller pleaded that on August 16, 1906, he bought the land in controversy from John Legler and wife by general warranty deed, for the consideration of $250, and took possession of the said lot, and built a fence around same at a cost of $12, and asked that, in the event defendant recovered the lot, or a portion of it, he have judgment over against Legler. At the request of the parties the court submitted this issue: "Is the location of the boundary line between lots Nos. 8 and 9, in controversy in this suit, that claimed by plaintiff, Martin Keller, or as contended for by defendant August Toudouze?" The finding was in favor of Keller. The correctness of this verdict depends upon the testimony.

The testimony is that the block No. 4, in which both lots in question are situated, is a part of a tract of land formerly owned and subdivided by Thomas J. Devine. Block 4 is a long block lying between Nogalitos street on the east, and what is now known as Marty street on the west, and is bounded on the north by Keller street. What appears to be the first subdivision of this tract of land was made by G. Freysleben, a surveyor in San Antonio, who died about 1885 or 1886. According to his plat of this subdivision, block 4 was composed of 12 lots, numbered from 1 to 12, beginning on the east end at Nogalitos street for lot No. 1, and running consecutively west to a street unnamed on the plat, but where what is known as Marty street now is. As platted upon that map, the 12 lots (except lot 1) appear to have been 20 varas front on the south side of the street, which was also unnamed on it, but now known as Keller street. What appears to be a later subdivision, or resubdivision, by Devine of the same territory is a plat found on file in the city engineer's office in San Antonio, bearing the date November 25, 1885, styled "Subdivision of Property of T. J. Devine." This plat or subdivision shows 12 lots carved out of said block No. 4, numbered from 1 to 13 consecutively, from Nogalitos street westward to Marty street, lot 1 represented as having 83.3 feet front on south side of Keller street, lot 2 as fronting 55.6 feet thereon, and the rest of the lots as fronting 50 feet thereon, with one exception hereinafter noted. This plat is unmistakably of a subdivision of the same tract later than Freysleben's, because it gives Marty and Keller streets names, which the latter does not, and the width of Marty street is increased. In addition to this the Freysleben map has the date of April 20, 1885, marked upon it, though it is not certain that this was intended to represent its date, and the other bears date November 25, 1885. The exception above referred to is lot No. 3, which is the only lot that has no frontage designated upon it; and its lines, compared with the lines of the other lots calling for 50 feet, show perceptibly that it was of a less width than the others. We annex a sketch of block 4 according to this later plat.

The evidence shows that the Marty street corner and the Nogalitos street corner of said block are undisputed; also that, taking the lots 1 and 2 having the front assigned them in said sketch, and giving all the other lots a front of 50 feet, there is a shortage of about 12 feet in the width of the block.

The controversy is the locality of the division line between lots 9 and 10. Measuring from the northwest corner of the block on Marty street giving lots 13, 12, 11, and 10, 50 feet front each on Keller street, would fix lot 9, and said division line, where Toudouze claims it to be, but to run from the northeast corner on Nogalitos street westward according to the frontage shown on the sketch, giving lot 3 a frontage of 50 feet, would place this line about 12 feet to the west, where Keller claims it to be. To do the latter, however, lot No. 3, which has no stated frontage on the plat, and which is plainly of less width than the others which call for 50 feet, must be given 50 feet. The decree fixes the division line in question in this manner by going west from the Nogalitos street corner, crediting lot No. 3 with 50 feet front. If, however, lot No. 3 was not entitled to a frontage of 50 feet, but to about 12 feet less, then, whether we measure from the Marty street corner, or the Nogalitos street corner, Toudouze would be right in his contention. The trouble between these parties grew out of an early sale by Devine of lot No. 3, in 1889, to Theo Heisser, the deed describing the lot thus: "Lot No. 3 in block No. 4 city lot, having a front of fifty feet on the south side of Keller street and running southwardly for depth 147 feet more or less, between parallel lines; said lot No. 3 being situated between lots 2 and 4 in said block 4, and said block 4 being situated west of Nogalitos street, reference being made to plat of G. Freysleben for a more complete description of said lot." We may assume, for the purposes of this appeal, that Devine intended to sell this lot as it appears on the Freysleben map, and mistook it as having 50 feet front, when according to that map it had 20 varas, or about 56 feet. Heisser, it seems, claimed and took under it only 50 feet. The difficulty before us arises from the fact that sales of lots in the block were subsequently made by the representatives of Devine according to the later map. Lot 4, and the two lots in controversy were shown to have been so sold, and probably so all of the lots in the block west of lot 3. We say, according to the later map or plat, although none of these deeds mentions any plat. While this is so, the descriptions in the subsequent deeds, so far as they are in evidence, are not reconcilable with any other plat than this one, they calling for 50-foot lots, and this is the only plat giving the lots that frontage. We regard it as unmistakable from the evidence, and we so hold as a fact, clearly apparent, that the sales of lots 4, 8, and 9 were made with reference to the second plat of the subdivision from which the attached sketch is taken, because they are totally inconsistent with the other. This being so, the grantees of lots 8 and 9 took their respective lots in the position they occupied on that plat.

As both plats appear to have been in existence when Heisser bought lot 3 by the Freysleben map, such sale of 50 feet front to him might have involved a sale of a part of

No. 4, as the lots are represented upon the later plat, if on this later plat lot 3 had a less frontage than 50 feet. Therefore, upon this theory, when subsequently lot 4 was sold in accordance with the later plat, there was a strip twice sold. The purchaser of lot 4 would, under such circumstances, have had a claim against his grantor on the warranty for that part of lot 4 which had been previously sold to Helsser. The purchaser of lot 4, however, did not have the right to go over on lot 5 to make up his full 50 feet, for the reason that he had no deed for lot 5, or any part thereof. The conflict caused by these circumstances would be between lots 3 and 4, and the trouble would be located there, and confined there. Because the purchaser of lot 3 may have gone over on lot 4, and the purchaser of lot 4 may have gone over on lot 5, and so on, for quantity, would be no reason why Toudouze, who bought lot 9, should yield to this practice, and allow Keller, who took deed to lot 8, to come over and take 12 feet from lot No. 9, which he had not bought. The right of Keller to do this must be authorized by the plat according to which he bought lot 8, or it does not exist at all.

This plat, from which the annexed sketch is taken, calls for a specific number of feet frontage (50 feet) on Keller street for all said lots, except lot 3, where no frontage is shown, except that it appears upon the plat as being of less width than the others. The legal effect of this failure to designate any frontage for one of the lots is to make any deficiency in the width of the block fall upon lot No. 3. The surveyors who testified stated that the proper way to ascertain the width of lot 3 was to measure from the Marty street corner of the block as far as the lots had stated fronts, which would bring them to the west line of No. 3, then to measure from the Nogalitos corner the given frontage of lots 1 and 2, and the intervening space would constitute lot No. 3. This has been judicially declared to be the legal and proper way, under the circumstances, to ascertain the appropriate width or frontage of No. 3, as the lots are represented upon the sketch. In Pereles v. Magoon, 78 Wis. 31, 46 N. W. 1049, 23 Am. St. Rep. 389, the Supreme Court of Wisconsin says: "Had the plat given the specific dimensions of each of the several lots fronting on Jefferson street except lot 1, and given no dimensions of that lot, then such absence of the dimensions of that lot would have evinced the intention that it should include whatever should be left after setting off the several lots of which the specific dimensions had thus been given, whether the same should be more or less." In Pereles v. Gross, 126 Wis. 128, 105 N. W. 220, 110 Am. St. Rep. 901, the same court says: "This is a complete perversion of the rule, founded on both reason and authority, that, when, in subdividing a line or space the surveyor declares the dimensions which he has given to each except the last, and there leaves an irregular space without designating the dimensions, he will be presumed to have thrown the remainder, much or little, into that irregular and unmeasured portion." We take it that, when the plat, of which the annexed sketch is a part, and by which plaintiff and defendant undoubtedly acquired their lots, designated all the lots in the subdivision except one by a specific number of feet front, the lots so designated were intended to have that frontage, to take that frontage, if there was enough of land to give it to all such lots, as there was in this case. There was something over, and whatever was over (about 39 feet) constituted what appertained to lot 3, as that lot is represented upon the plat.

If we begin at the Marty street corner, and measure east along Keller street, giving 50 feet to each lot, lot 9, belonging to Toudouze, is found where he claims it to be. If we begin at the Nogalitos street corner, and measure west, giving each lot what the plat calls for, but giving to lot 3 its width as above stated, instead of 50 feet as the trial court considered it, we arrive at the same result. The trouble in this block was a conflict between lot 3 as represented on the Freysleben map and lot 4 as represented on the Devine map; and the lots 8 and 9 in question were not concerned in said conflict. They were described and conveyed in accordance with the latter map. Their descriptions fit no other map. They can readily be located on the ground in accordance with their own descriptions, when the only map or subdivision to which the descriptions conform, or point to, is considered; and, under these circumstances, it is not admissible to look to descriptions or conflicts in other lots in the block to show that something else was conveyed. As stated in Thompson v. Langdon, 87 Tex. 258, 28 S. W. 935, the rule is: "If there is no conflict in the calls, found in the field notes of a survey, there is no room for construction, and the calls must speak for themselves."

For the foregoing reasons we conclude that appellant is entitled to judgment, and therefore the judgment of the district court is reversed, and judgment will be rendered here accordingly.

Appellee brought in his warrantor, Legler, who answered. The deed to appellant was simply a conveyance of lot 8. So far as this record shows, there has been no breach of the covenant of warranty. Appellant testified that when he bought, the lots 7, 8, and 9 were vacant property. It is a case where he, without warrant of law, entered and fenced a strip belonging to lot 9.

The judgment in favor of the warrantor will be affirmed.

1. TRIAL (§ 133*)—IMPROPER ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL—INSTRUCTIONS—NECESSITY.

In an action against a corporation for a personal injury, the refusal to instruct to disregard the improper argument of plaintiff's counsel, referring to the respective conditions of the parties as to riches and thereby prejudicing the jury, was ground for reversal.

2. TRIAL (§ 120*)—IMPROPER ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL.

Appeal from District Court, Rains County; R. L. Porter, Judge.

Action by A. L. Taylor against the Southwestern Telegraph & Telephone Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

A. P. Wozencraft, W. S. Bramlett, and B. M. McMahan, for appellant. O. H. Rodes, for appellee.

RAINEY, O. J. The appellee sued to recover for injuries alleged to have been caused by reason of the horse he was riding stepping into a hole dug by appellant's agents and falling, throwing him to the ground; said hole being in or near the public road. On the trial of the case the counsel for the appellee in his closing argument used the following language: "We could prove that this defendant was responsible for the injured condition of plaintiff if we had money, like this defendant corporation, to bring the witnesses as it has done; but we are not rich, and we cannot bring them here, so we can make this proof," and, further, "I know, and the defendant's attorneys know, what plaintiff's condition is, and that he is in the condition he says he is in, and that he has hernia, and, if they doubt it, let them have him examined. We will submit to it, and I dare them to do it; and if he has not now got hernia I will ask this jury to find for the defendant, and if he has let the jury find for the plaintiff the amount that he is entitled to. They won't do it." This language was excepted to by the appellant, and the court requested to instruct the jury not to consider it; but this request the court refused.

We think the use of this language was very improper. It referred to the respective conditions of the parties as to riches in a manner that was calculated to prejudice the jury against the appellant. The statement of counsel as to his knowing, and defendant's counsel knowing, that plaintiff had hernia, was improper. The jury should be governed alone by the evidence adduced, and counsel should not state in his argument to the jury his knowledge of facts, unless he has testified to such facts as a witness on the trial. Ordinarily a case will not be reversed on account of improper remarks made in argument to the jury, unless it appears that it is probable injury resulted to the losing party. The evidence in this case is such we do not feel authorized to say that no injury resulted to appellant from the use of said language. The issue, whether or not the plaintiff was injured, was sharply drawn, and the effect the remarks counsel made had upon the jury cannot be determined. The court should, by an appropriate instruction, have withdrawn from the jury the improper language of counsel, and for failing to do so the judgment will be reversed.

The assignments of error relating to the charge of the court and refusal of special charges are not well taken.

The judgment is reversed, and cause remanded.

1. TAXATION (§ 648*)—JUDGMENT—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

A judgment for delinquent taxes, rendered on service by publication regular in all respects, and reciting that citation had been duly had by publication, and decreeing a lien with foreclosure thereon for the taxes in favor of the state against all persons claiming any interest in the land, and directing the sale of the land, cannot be collaterally attacked by one failing to show that he was in possession of the land when the foreclosure suit was filed and citation issued.

2. JUDGMENT (§ 490*)—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

A judgment reciting service of citation without identifying the precise writ on which the court acted is not subject to collateral attack for lack of proper service.

Appeal from District Court, Hartley County; J. N. Browning, Judge.

Action by Mrs. Sallie A. Gibbs against John A. Scales and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

James & Yeiser, for appellant. Turner & Boyce and Webb & Joiner, for appellees.

DUNKLIN, J. This suit was instituted by Mrs. Sallie A. Gibbs against John A. Scales and W. Boyce in the district court of Hartley county to recover the Joseph Welsh survey of 177 acres of land, and from a judgment in favor of the defendants the plaintiff has appealed.

The plaintiff's original petition was in the usual form of trespass to try title. To this petition defendants filed general denial, plea of not guilty, and special answers, in which both defendants pleaded a judgment in favor of the state against the unknown owners of the land in controversy of date May 10, 1890, rendered by the district court of Hartley county, foreclosing a lien for taxes due the state and said county, and a deed of conveyance of date July 4, 1899, executed by the sheriff of said county to defendant W. Boyce under and by virtue of an order of sale issued on said judgment, and defendant Scales further pleaded a deed of conveyance from W. Boyce to himself for a valuable consideration paid to Boyce by Scales. The evidence introduced upon the trial established a regular chain of title to the land from the state down to J. W. Haynes, plaintiff's father, who by will in due form and duly probated devised the land to the plaintiff, and the judgment and deeds of conveyance pleaded by defendants were also established by proof. The judgment was for taxes due the state and county on the property for the years 1892 to 1896, both inclusive. The land was assessed for taxes for the year 1891 on the nonresident tax rolls of the county in the name of plaintiff's husband, Barnett Gibbs, who then resided in Dallas county and who died in 1896, and Dallas county was the place of plaintiff's residence at the date of the institution of the suit and at the date of the judgment. W. Boyce was the county attorney of Hartley county, and in that official capacity represented the plaintiff in the institution of the suit and in its prosecution to final judgment. He was likewise county attorney of Hartley county when he purchased the land under the foreclosure sale by the sheriff. The judgment was upon service by publication, was regular in all respects, specifically reciting that citation had been duly had by publication, and decreed a lien with foreclosure thereof for the taxes due for the years 1892 to 1896, inclusive, and was in favor of the state against all persons (said persons being unknown) owning, having, or claiming any interest in the land, and directed the clerk to issue an order of sale to sell the same for the purpose of satisfying said taxes and costs of suit, subject to the right of the owner to redeem the same within two years. The affidavit for the issuance of the citation was made by W. Boyce as attorney for the state, was in statutory form, affiant stating therein that the owners of the land in controversy were unknown to him, and after inquiry could not be ascertained. By supplemental petition duly filed plaintiff alleged that this affidavit of the county attorney was fraudulently made, and that by reason thereof the judgment of foreclosure was void. The trial court sustained general and special exceptions to this pleading on the ground that it was a collateral attack on the judgment, and in this ruling we think there was no error. This was clearly a collateral attack upon the judgment, based upon alleged facts dehors the judgment and all other records in the suit, which could not be sustained in view of the affidavit for citation by publication and recitals of service in the judgment, above noted. Crawford v. McDonald, 88 Tex. 626, 83 S. W. 325; Kenson v. Gage, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 547, 79 S. W. 605; Scudder v. Cox, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 416, 80 S. W. 872. The evidence failing to show that appellant was in possession of the land when the foreclosure suit was filed, and when citation was issued therein, the cases of Hollywood v. Wellhausen, 28 Tex. Civ. App. 541, 68 S. W. 329, and Bingham v. Matthews, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 41, 86 S. W. 781, relied on by her, are therefore not applicable. Other authorities cited by appellant, such as Babcock v. Wolfarth, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 512, 80 S. W. 642, Stoneman v. Bilby, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 293, 96 S. W. 51, and Earnest v. Glaser, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 378, 74 S. W. 605, are applicable only in cases where the judgment assailed fails to recite service of citation.

Appellant calls our attention to the decision of our Supreme Court in Martin v. Burns, Walker & Co., 80 Tex. 679, 16 S. W. 1072, and Fowler v. Simpson, 79 Tex. 617, 15 S. W. 682, 23 Am. St. Rep. 370, to the effect that, when the judgment recites the precise character of service upon which it is rendered, then proof is admissible to show that the service was not as required by law; and upon these authorities the contention is made that, in view of the recital in the judgment of foreclosure in question that citation was by publication, the trial court erred in sustaining defendant's exceptions to the allegations in plaintiff's supplemental petition that the citation was not addressed to all persons owning or claiming any interest in the land in controversy, that it was not addressed to the sheriff or any constable of Hartley county, and that it failed to state that the taxes claimed in the petition constituted a lien on the land. In the case of Martin v. Burns, Walker & Co., supra, the judgment assailed failed to recite any service of citation, and the only authority therein cited to sustain the announcement above noted, which was not necessary to a decision of that case, was Fowler v. Simpson, supra; and in the latter case the court said: "The judgment now in question identifies by referring to its date the return of the officer and the writ upon which the court's conclusion of lawful service is based. Instead of relying upon a presumption, it points out the proof upon which its validity depends. It would be doing violence to the recitals of the judgment itself to doubt upon what evidence of the service of its process the court was acting." If the judgment recites service of citation, then, in the absence of some recital identifying the precise writ upon which the court acted, such as was contained in the case last cited, we do not believe the judgment is subject to a collateral attack for lack of proper service. However, irrespective of this view, the citation offered by appellant in support of these allegations is contained in a bill of exception appearing in this record, and we think the same was in substantial compliance with the statutory requirements. It is not addressed to the sheriff or any constable, but is addressed directly to the defendants, and the affidavit of the publisher of the newspaper publishing it shows publication thereof as required by law. We find no statute requiring such citations to be addressed to any officer, nor requiring any officer to make return thereof. We therefore overrule appellant's contention last noted. Young v. Jackson (Tex. Civ. App.) 110 S. W. 79.

That portion of the judgment decreeing that the order of sale to be issued thereon should have the force and effect of a writ of possession, and that the officer making the sale of the land by virtue thereof should place the purchaser in possession, was improper, but it did not invalidate the judgment in its entirety, and should be treated as surplusage only. Masterson v. State, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 94, 42 S. W. 1003. Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 5232g, provides that when land is offered for sale by the sheriff under a judgment foreclosing a lien for taxes, if there be no bidder for such land, the county attorney shall bid the same off to the state for the amount of all taxes, penalties, interest, and costs adjudged against the property. Appellant insists that, W. Boyce being the county attorney of Hartley county at the time he purchased the land in controversy under the foreclosure sale, he should have bid the property off to the state, and that, therefore, his purchase of same for his own use and benefit was contrary to public policy and void. In support of this contention, appellant cites Edwards v. Estell, 48 Cal. 194, and Clute v. Barron, 2 Mich. 192. In the case first cited a purchase by a surveyor of public land, and in the second case cited a purchase by a tax collector of lands he sold for taxes, were both held to be contrary to public policy, and therefore void. But in these cases and others we have examined, where sales of like character were likewise held void, the purchasers were the officers making the sales and selling to themselves, or else were charged by law with some duty relative to making the sale, the performance of which was necessary to a valid sale. It will be noted that the statute quoted above requires the land to be bid in for the state only when there are no bidders for the same, thus evidencing the policy of the state to become the purchaser only when it is necessary to do so in order to collect the taxes due. It is not made the duty of the county attorney to sell the land, that being the official duty of the sheriff, and, in the absence of allegations of fraud in making the purchase, we do not think that it can be said that the purchase by W. Boyce was contrary to public policy and therefore void. Walcott v. Hand, 122 Mo. 621, 27 S. W. 333. In the case last cited a tax collector was the purchaser under a tax sale by the sheriff, and the contention was made that the transaction was void as being contrary to public policy, but the Supreme Court of Missouri, rendering the decision, held the deed valid, citing Dillinger v. Kelley, 84 Mo. 565, and Briant v. Jackson, 99 Mo. 585, 13 S. W. 91, and saying: "A careful examination of each and every case cited by plaintiffs discloses that in every instance in which the sale was held void or voidable it was under a tax law in which the collector himself made the sale, and either by himself or deputy purchased the land, or, if sold by a sheriff or constable, he purchased at his own sale." See, also, 1 Blackwell on Tax Titles, § 604.

Finding no error in the record, the judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

Appeal from Houston County Court; John Spence, Judge.

Action by J. W. Hall against A. W. Phillips and others, in which the First National Bank of Crockett was interpleaded. Judgment for plaintiff against defendants, and for defendants over against the bank, and defendants appeal. Reversed and rendered.

Adams & Adams, Nunn & Nunn, and J. W. Madden, for appellants. Moore & Adams and L. A. Sallas, for appellee.

NEILL, J. On the 30th of April, 1907, J. W. Hall sued A. W. Phillips and the sureties on his official bond as constable of precinct No. 1, Houston county, Tex., to recover damages for negligently taking a defective claim bond to property which he had levied upon, on November 4, 1904, by virtue of an execution issued on a judgment owned by the plaintiff, Hall, and for delivering the property to the claimant, the First National Bank of Crockett, on the day of the levy. Phillips' answer contained a special exception to plaintiff's petition, upon the ground that it shows upon its face that the action was barred by the two-year statute of limitation, and a special plea in bar of the two-year statute. The bank was also interpleaded, and judgment was asked by Phillips and the sureties on his bond over against the bank, in the event plaintiff recovered against them. The case was tried before the court without a jury, and judgment rendered in favor of the plaintiff against Phillips and his sureties in the amount shown to be due upon the execution up to the time the cause was tried, and also rendered in favor of Phillips and his bondsmen over against the bank.

In the view we take of the case, we need only consider the assignment which complains of the court's holding that plaintiff's action was not barred by the statute of limitation. The undisputed facts, as well as the allegations in plaintiff's petition, show conclusively that the suit was not brought until two years after the right of action against Phillips accrued. Unquestionably the two-year statute of limitation is applicable to a case of this character. Woods v. Huffman, 64 Tex. 98. This is founded on the principle that an official bond is simply a collateral security for performing the officer's duty, and, when suit is barred for breach of his duty, action is also barred on the bond. State v. Conway, 18 Ohio, 235; State v. Blake, 2 Ohio St. 147; Dawes v. Shed, 15 Mass. 6, 8 Am. Dec. 80; Ryus v. Gruble, 31 Kan. 767, 3 Pac. 518; Com'rs v. Van Slyck, 52 Kan. 622, 35 Pac. 299; Spokane Co. v. Prescott, 19 Wash. 418, 53 Pac. 661, 67 Am. St. Rep. 733; Davis v. Clark, 58 Kan.

455, 49 Pac. 685. As is said in Ryus v. Gruble, supra: "The bond does not give the cause of action. The wrongs or delicts do; and the bond simply furnishes security to indemnify the persons who suffer by reason of such wrongs or delicts. And while the statute cited by plaintiff operates to bar every action brought upon the bond to enforce a cause of action which accrued more than five years prior to the commencement of the action, yet such statute does not operate to suspend the operation of the other statutes of limitation, or to continue in force or revive a cause of action which had already been barred by some one of the other statutes of limitation. Whenever a cause of action is barred by any statute of limitations, the right to maintain an action therefor upon a bond, which simply operates as a security for the same thing, must necessarily cease to exist."

From this it follows that the court erred in not holding that the action was barred, and in failing, for that reason, to render judgment in favor of defendants against the plaintiff. Wherefore the judgment of the county court is reversed and set aside, and judgment is here rendered for defendants.

WRIGHT v. HARTFORD FIRE INS. CO.†
(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Feb. 13, 1909. Rehearing Denied March 13, 1909.)

1. INSURANCE (§ 282*)—FIRE INSURANCE—ENTIRE, UNCONDITIONAL, AND SOLE OWNERSHIP.

A purchaser of real estate who receives a deed retaining a vendor's lien for the unpaid part of the price acquires the entire, unconditional, and sole ownership within an insurance policy stipulating that it shall be void on the interest of insured being or becoming other than entire, unconditional, and sole ownership.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 613; Dec. Dig. § 282.*]

2. INSURANCE (§ 282*)—FIRE INSURANCE—UNINCUMBERED "INTEREST."

A fire policy stipulating that it should be void on the interest of insured becoming other than unincumbered was with the consent of insurer, subject to its conditions, assigned to a purchaser whose deed of the property retained a vendor's lien for the unpaid part of the price. Insurer had no notice of the lien. Held, that the policy was void.

Action by J. G. Wright against the Hartford Fire Insurance Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

L. A. Dale, for appellant. Wm. Thompson and Jno. B. Littler, for appellee.

CONNER, C. J. Appellant sued upon a policy of insurance acquired by him for damages in the sum of $1,950 done to his dwelling by lightning. The policy by its terms was to become "void" if, among other things, "the interest of the assured be or become other than the entire, unconditional, unincumbered, and sole ownership of the property." Appellee, in addition to the general denial, pleaded the quoted provision of the policy in defense, and, it appearing upon the trial from the undisputed proof that at the time of the alleged destruction of the property there existed thereon, an unsatisfied, valid vendor's lien to secure the aggregate sum (excluding interest and attorneys' fees) of $1,650, the court peremptorily instructed a verdict for appellee, and upon the return of such verdict judgment was entered accordingly.

The undisputed evidence shows that the policy which contained the provision we have quoted above was made to one S. E. Davis on the 1st day of November, 1906, insuring the said Davis for the period of three years against loss by fire or lightning upon the property in controversy; that on July 29, 1907, S. E. Davis, joined by his wife, conveyed the property to appellant for a total consideration of $5,000, of which $1,650 was evidenced by two promissory notes, each for the sum of $825, executed by appellant, payable to the order of S. E. Davis on or before April 23, 1908, and 1909, respectively, each bearing interest from date until paid at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, stipulating that all past-due interest should bear interest from maturity until paid at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, and that a failure to pay either note or any installment of interest when due should at the election of the holder mature both notes; that, if placed in the hands of an attorney for collection, collected by suit, or through the probate court, 10 per cent. additional on the principal and interest should be paid as attorneys' fees. To secure the two notes thus described, the vendor's lien upon the property conveyed was expressly retained in the deed. The deed was duly acknowledged by S. E. Davis on August 14, 1907, and by his wife on the 9th day of September, 1907, upon which last-named day the deed was duly recorded. Davis assigned the policy to appellant with appellee's consent given in the following terms, as appears by indorsement upon the policy: "The insurance company within named hereby consents that the interest of S. E. Davis in the within policy be assigned to J. G. Wright, subject to all the terms and conditions therein mentioned and set forth. Dated at Big Springs, Texas, the 3d day of August, 1907. George D. Lee, Agent."

There is no evidence that appellee had notice of the lien so shown, and the only material question presented on this appeal is whether the facts invalidated the policy and authorized the peremptory instruction. Numerous authorities have been cited to the effect that a policy of insurance is not voided by a lien on the subject-matter of the insurance by reason of a provision that "if the interest of the assured be or become other than the entire, unconditional, and sole ownership of the property." See Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. v. Ricker, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 264, 31 S. W. 248; Hamburg-Bremen Fire Ins. Co. v. Ruddell, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 30, 82 S. W. 826; Queen Ins. Co. v. May (Tex. Civ. App.) 35 S. W. 831; Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Nowlin (Tex. Civ. App.) 56 S. W. 198; Fire Association of Phil. v. Calhoun, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 409, 67 S. W. 153; De Arnaud v. Home Ins. Co. (C. C.) 28 Fed. 603; Ellis v. Ins. Co. (C. C.) 32 Fed. 646; Dolliver v. Insurance Co., 128 Mass. 315, 35 Am. Rep. 378; Franklin Fire Ins. Co. v. Crockett, 75 Tenn. 725; Dohn v. Farmers' Joint-Stock Ins. Co., 5 Lans. (N. Y.) 275. These authorities proceeded on the theory that such condition has reference alone to the status of the title, and that the title or ownership, whether legal or equitable, is none the less "entire, unconditional, and sole" merely because of an incumbrance on the subject-matter of the insurance. None of the cases, however, that we have examined construe a provision of a policy which, as here, inhibits an incumbrance, and we fail to find any just ground upon which to avoid the force of a contract of insurance as the parties saw fit to make it. It was not shown, as in one of the cases cited, that at the time of appellee's consent to the transfer its agent had notice, either actual or constructive, of the existence of the lien. On the contrary, such consent was expressly made "subject to all the terms and conditions" of the policy as made to Davis. If the provision under consideration could be construed as a representation merely, it can hardly be said that the representation was immaterial to the risks contemplated by the policy, and that, therefore, the policy should be upheld. In 1 Wood on Fire Ins. (2d Ed.) § 345, it is said that: "Where the policy specially provides that any 'incumbrance' shall invalidate it, of course, a mortgage operates as a breach." And in the case of Curlee v. Texas Home Fire Ins. Co., 31 Tex. Civ. App. 471, 73 S. W. 831, it was held in an opinion by Judge Key, of the Third Supreme Judicial District, that a vendor's lien avoided a policy of insurance which contained a provision to the effect "that this entire policy shall be void if the subject of insurance, or any part thereof, be or become incumbered by mortgage or otherwise. A writ of error was refused in this case by our Supreme Court, and it would seem to be conclusive here, save that appellant insists that in the policy before us the condition is against an incumbrance of the "interest" of the assured instead of the "subject" of insurance, as in the case cited. It seems difficult, however, to make the distinction urged available here. Appellant's "interest" in the property insured, considered in the sense of title or ownership merely, was constituted by the property itself. It might be entirely extinguished by successive alienations of the several estates that might be carved out of the property, or might be wholly lost by excessive or successive mortgages. Within the meaning of the policy, as shown by the authorities first cited by us, appellant had the entire, unconditional, and sole ownership, notwithstanding the existence of the vendor's lien, but no method of incumbering such title or interest for the payment of debt occurs to us other than to incumber the property so owned. In Fire Ins. Co. v. Clarke, 79 Tex. 23, 15 S. W. 186, 11 L. R. A. 293, it was held that a mortgage on certain property constituted a conveyance of an "interest" therein within the conditions of the policy. In Hicks v. Farmers' Ins. Co., 71 Iowa, 119, 32 N. W. 201, 60 Am. Rep. 781, it was held that: "A condition in a fire insurance policy issued to a firm that property should not afterwards be in any manner incumbered was violated by the execution of a mortgage by one of the partners on his undivided one-third interest in the property, and by a judgment against him, which became a lien on his said interest." In other words, these decisions seem to treat the interest in property and the property itself as convertible terms, although we have been unable to find any case either for or against the precise distinction appellant has urged.

On the whole, we conclude that under the undisputed facts the court's peremptory instruction was proper, and that the judgment should be affirmed.

DIVORCE (§ 27*)—CRUEL TREATMENT—ABANDONMENT.

Under Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. art. 2977, providing that a divorce may be granted for cruel treatment, the act of a husband in stealthily abandoning the wife and taking from her an infant child is not cruel treatment, authorizing a divorce on that ground.

Appeal from District Court, Dallam County; J. N. Browning, Judge.

Action by Eloise Slaughter against Coney C. Slaughter. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Jno. W. Veale, for appellant. Wallace & Lumpkin and D. B. Hill, for appellee.

DUNKLIN, J. Eloise Slaughter recovered a judgment in the district court of Dallam county against her husband, Coney C. Slaughter, dissolving the marriage of the parties and awarding to plaintiff the custody and education of their minor child. The following were the only facts proven upon the trial to sustain the allegation in her petition that defendant had treated plaintiff so cruelly as to render their living together insupportable, and on account of which she sought a divorce:

Defendant left plaintiff without cause, and immediately went to the republic of Mexico, where he has resided ever since, taking with him, and keeping, a girl baby 11 months old, the fruit of the marriage. The child had been weaned by the mother at the time she was carried away. The parties were living in Dalhart at the time of the separation, but on or about December 15, 1906, defendant represented to plaintiff that he desired to move to Amarillo, and planned that they both make a trip there for the purpose of selecting a place to board. Plaintiff's mother lived in Amarillo, and plaintiff expected to stop with her on that trip. Defendant induced plaintiff to leave the child with his mother in Dalhart by representing to her that her mother had so requested, and this representation was false. When plaintiff boarded the train at Dalhart to go to Amarillo, the defendant, upon the pretext of returning to his room for some articles of wearing apparel, which he had forgotten and which he would need on the trip, left plaintiff to take the trip alone. Very early on the following morning he left with the child, and up to the date of the trial, April 2, 1908, plaintiff had never received any tidings of defendant or her child, and since he abandoned plaintiff defendant has never contributed anything to her support. Plaintiff loved her child, and her separation from the child has caused her grief.

Construing all these facts together, and giving them full force and effect, they do not warrant the decree of divorce rendered. Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. art. 2977, reads in part as follows: "A divorce by separation from the bonds of matrimony may be decreed in the following cases: (1) Where either the husband or wife is guilty of excesses, cruel treatment or outrages towards the other, if such ill treatment is of such a nature as to render their living together insupportable. * * * (3) In favor of the wife when the husband shall have left her for three years with the intention of abandonment, or where he shall have abandoned her and lived in adultery with another woman." And article 2979 requires the material facts alleged in a petition for a divorce to be sustained by full and satisfactory evidence before a divorce can be decreed. It will be seen from article 2977, quoted above, that simple abandonment of his wife by the husband cannot be a ground for divorce, unless it has continued for three years. This is a separate and distinct ground from cruelty, and cannot be considered, even in connection with failure to support the wife after abandonment, as constituting a ground for divorce under paragraph 1 of the article above quoted. Every abandonment of the wife by the husband within the meaning of subdivision 3 of article 2977 necessarily implies nonsupport by the husband during abandonment.

The act of the husband in taking from the mother the infant child, under the circumstances above enumerated, while reprehensible, is not in terms made a ground for divorce by the statutes, and cannot be construed as "cruel treatment or outrages" toward her "of such a nature as to render their living together insupportable," within the meaning of subdivision 1 of article 2977. In cases of separation of husband and wife, controversies over the custody of their minor children are of common occurrence, and to hold that for one to take the exclusive control of the minor children would constitute cause for divorce at the suit of the other spouse, we think, would extend our divorce statutes beyond the intention of the legislatures enacting them.

For the error of the trial court in decreeing a divorce between the parties upon the facts above recited, the judgment rendered is reversed, and the cause remanded, without passing upon any other errors assigned by appellant. However, the writer is inclined to the opinion that the venue of this suit was improperly laid in Dallam county. The separation occurred in December, 1906, and the suit was filed in August, 1907. Ever since the separation plaintiff has lived with her parents in Amarillo, Potter county, although at the time the suit was filed she owned a house and lot in Dalhart, Dallam county, which she and her husband had formerly occupied as their home, but which she afterwards sold, and at the time of trial she still claimed Dalhart as her home. See Michael v. Michael, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 630, 79 S. W. 74; Haymond v. Haymond, 74 Tex. 414, 12 S. W. 90; Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. art. 2978. But, as above said, this question is not decided; a decision of it being unnecessary, for the reasons already noted.

FISHER, C. J. We are inclined to agree with appellant, as stated in its first assignment of error, that the evidence does not show that the distance from Naples, Tex., to Gatesville, Tex., is 250 miles; but, however, this question is unimportant, and in no wise affects the other findings of fact complained of. There is evidence, or, in other words, the deductions that arise from the evidence justified the court in the other findings, which show that there was an unreasonable delay and improper and rough handling of the stock en route; and there is also evidence which justifies the conclusion as to the amount of damages awarded by the judgment.

We find no error in the record, and the judgment is affirmed.

Affirmed.

1. CORPORATIONS (§ 503*)—ACTIONS—VENUE.

Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 1194, exception 23, providing that suits against any private corporation may be brought in any county in which plaintiff's cause of action or a part thereof arose, where it appeared prima facie that a written contract on which suit was brought against a corporation was to be performed at least in part in a certain county, and that for a breach thereof by the corporation plaintiff had a cause of action in that county, a plea of privilege to be sued in the county of its residence was properly overruled.

2. EVIDENCE (§ 213*)—ADMISSIONS—OFFERS OF COMPROMISE.

In an action by a buyer against a seller for breach of the contract of sale, evidence that, after the buyer had bought other goods on the market, it offered by letter to waive claim to the difference in price if the seller would deliver the goods contracted for, and that the seller made no reply, was improperly admitted, over objection, as evidence of an offer to compromise a controversy.

3. EVIDENCE (§ 431*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—SHOWING NONEXISTENCE OF CONTRACT.

In an action by a buyer against a seller for breach of purported contracts for sale of cotton oil which were signed only by a broker, to show that they had been executed by the seller's authority and therefore binding on it, the broker testified that he had received over the phone from the seller an offer of the oil, and on the same day had notified it that he had sold it to the buyer, that the sales were confirmed on the day made over the phone, and that his firm was acting as the seller's broker, and testified on cross-examination that his firm was governed by a rule of an association of which both the buyer and seller were members that required such sales to be confirmed by the seller on the day made, and it appeared that the contracts of sale stipulated that the sales were governed by the rules of the association. It was error to exclude testimony of the seller's manager that the broker did not during the day of the sale report to the seller confirming the sale as required by the rules of the association; the testimony not tending to vary the terms of the purported contracts, but to show that they never became binding because of failure to comply with the condition.

4. PLEADING (§ 291*)—VERIFICATION—DENIAL OF AUTHORITY TO EXECUTE WRITTEN INSTRUMENT.

In an action by a buyer against the seller for breach of a written contract of sale signed by one purporting to act as defendant's broker, defendant may introduce evidence tending to show that the broker failed to report the sale to his principal for confirmation, as required by the rules of an association to which the parties to the contract were members, though defendant did not deny the execution of the contract under oath.

Appeal from District Court, Hunt County; R. L. Porter, Judge.

Action by the Texas Refining Company against the Floresville Oil & Manufacturing Company. There was a directed verdict for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

J. E. Canfield and J. S. Sherrill, for appellant. Geo. S. Perkins, for appellee.

TALBOT, J. Appellee brought this suit against appellant in the district court of Hunt county, Tex., to recover damages for an alleged breach of contract. It was averred: That on the 10th day of September, 1906, plaintiff was engaged in the business of buying crude oil and in refining such oil and selling the refined product. That on said date defendant was engaged in the manufacture and sale of crude cotton seed oil at the town of Floresville, in this state, and acting by and through its duly authorized agents, John Hamilton & Co., in the city of Dallas, Tex., called by phone plaintiff's manager at its office in Greenville, said Hunt county, Tex., and sold to plaintiff three tanks of 132 barrels capacity of new, prime, crude cotton seed oil, at the price of 28½ cents per gallon, f. o. b. Floresville, shipment to be made during the month of October, tanks to be furnished by the plaintiff, and to be loaded by the defendant to their capacity. That on same date and in the same manner the defendant also sold to plaintiff three tanks of 132 barrels capacity of new, prime, crude cotton seed oil at the price of 28 cents per gallon f. o. b. at the said town of Floresville, shipment to be made during the month of November, tanks to be furnished by plaintiff and loaded by defendant to their capacity. That said sales were duly confirmed by said brokers to plaintiff on the same day by phone message and telegraph message, and by mailing the plaintiff and defendant written copies of the contract in the usual form used by the brokers, as is usual and customary in such cases, and copies of those so mailed to the plaintiff are hereto attached, marked "Exhibit A" and "Exhibit B," and made a part hereof. Said written contracts were executed by authority of defendant. That, by the terms of said contracts, the defendant was to draw sight drafts on the plaintiff free from exchange payable at said city of Greenville with bill of lading attached for full amount of the invoices, defendant guaranteeing weight and quality of the oil at Greenville. That said contracts were by express terms subject to the Texas Cotton Seed Crushers' Association rules. It was further alleged that the defendant failed and refused to comply with the said contracts for the delivery to the plaintiff of the six tanks of oil, either in whole or in part, to plaintiff's damage $2,000; that on or about the 19th of October, 1906, plaintiff learned from the defendant that it would not comply with its contract or any part thereof, and on October 20th gave the defendant notice that the plaintiff intended to purchase and would purchase on open market for the account of the defendant six tanks of oil, three to be delivered in October and three in November to cover defendant's contract with plaintiff, and that defendant would be charged with the difference in price, if any, which plaintiff was authorized to do under and by virtue of the said terms of said contracts with the defendant; that plaintiff purchased for the account of defendant three tanks of prime cotton seed oil for October shipment on the 20th day of October, 1906, at the price of 28 cents per gallon f. o. b., two tanks at Cooper, Tex., and one tank at Lone Oak, 28 cents per gallon being then the lowest market price for which said oil for said shipment could be obtained, and on the 23d of October plaintiff purchased for the account of the defendant three tanks of oil for November shipment at the rate of 28 cents per gallon therefor f. o. b., two tanks from the Farmers' & Merchants' O. O. Mills, Mt. Pleasant, Tex., and one tank at Roxton, Tex., the price paid therefor being the then lowest market price for which said oil for said shipment could be obtained, said six tanks being of the grade and quality of the oil originally purchased from defendant; that the difference in price which the plaintiff had to pay for said oil which was the market price and the price at which defendant had so contracted to deliver the same to the plaintiff was $1,881, for which it prayed judgment. The defendant filed a plea of privilege to be sued in the county of its residence, namely, Wilson county, Tex., and pleaded general and special exceptions, a general denial, and special matters not necessary to state. The plea of privilege was overruled, and the case proceeded to trial upon its merits. When the evidence was closed, the court directed the jury to return a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, and from the judgment entered thereon this appeal is prosecuted.

The first assignment of error complains of the court's action in overruling defendant's plea of privilege to be sued in the county of its residence. This assignment is not in our opinion well taken. Exception 23, art. 1194, Rev. St. 1895, provides, among other things, that suits against any private corporation may be prosecuted in any county in this state in which the plaintiff's cause of action or a part thereof arose. The defendant was such a corporation, and, while it had no agent in Hunt county, yet the allegations of the petition and the evidence adduced were sufficient to support the court's conclusion that a written contract for the sale and purchase of the oil in question, and upon which this suit was founded, had been entered into between the plaintiff and defendant, which was to be performed at least in part in Hunt county, and that for a breach thereof by defendant a cause of action arose in favor of plaintiff in that county. Seley v. Williams, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 405, 50 S. W. 399. The evidence showing prima facie such a contract, we would not be warranted in reversing the case on this assignment. This also disposes of appellant's second and third assignments of error.

E. H. Tassey, a witness for the plaintiff, was permitted to testify, over the objections of defendant, as follows: "We notified defendant by wire on October 23d that we had purchased for its account six tanks of oil in question, charging them with the difference in price, and giving it the names of the mills from which we had purchased the six tanks of oil. We also stated in said wire that we would make no claim for this difference in price, provided they would answer by telegram on that date stating they would fill our contract, and referring to our letter of October 19th. We meant by this that, in the event the defendant would fill its contract with us, we would be willing to waive claim for the difference in the contract price and the price at which we had purchased the six tanks for their account, and receive the six tanks we had bought for their account for the account of ourselves. Said telegram, marked 'Exhibit U,' is a copy of the telegram dated October 23d, referred to above, and which we sent defendant on said date. We received no reply to it." This testimony was objected to on the ground that it showed an offer to compromise the matter in dispute between the plaintiff and defendant, and was irrelevant and improper to go before the jury. We think this contention correct. The testimony seems to fall within the well-established rule "that an offer to compromise a prospective suit, if expressly or impliedly made without prejudice, cannot be admitted in evidence when objected to." The reason of the rule is that the law favors the compromise and settlement of controversies without litigation, and, as the admission in evidence of such offers tends to discourage such settlements, they are against the policy of the law, and should be excluded. Railway Co. v. Ragsdale, 67 Tex. 24, 2 S. W. 515. But it is argued by appellee that, inasmuch as it appears that appellant made no reply to appellee's proposition, "the reason for invoking the rule in this instance did not exist, that the testimony could not possibly have operated prejudicially to the appellant, and there was no error in its admission." We do not regard this as a satisfactory answer to the contention. The testimony objected to did not tend to show the admission on the part of appellant of any material fact involved in the suit, but disclosed a mere proposition of settlement. In the case cited it is said that "numerous authorities may be cited to show that the admission of a fact pending a negotiation for compromise may be admitted; but we have found none that a proposition, which has not been accepted and become a contract, is legal testimony." Neither do we agree to the proposition that the testimony could not possibly have operated prejudicially to the appellant. On the contrary, we think it was clearly calculated to injuriously affect the rights of appellant.

We are also of the opinion that appellant's fifth assignment of error is well taken. After the witness W. C. Bruff had testified that he was manager for appellant on or about the 10th day of September, 1906, and that on said date he had a conversation with John Hamilton & Co., of Dallas, with reference to the sale of some cotton seed oil, and that he gave to said Hamilton & Co. an option on six tanks of oil to sell the same during that day and up to midnight of that night, and that he had other conversations with him on the same day, the appellant then offered to prove by said witness that nothing was said by said Hamilton & Co. in the second or third conversation with reference to the sale of said oil, except that in the second conversation he told him that he had not yet heard from the people to whom he expected to sell; that said Hamilton & Co. did not at any time during that day report to him or the defendant confirming the sale of any oil, and that he did not at any time receive any written notice of the sale of said oil or the letter or contracts called the confirmation of sale, as claimed by the plaintiff, and attached to plaintiff's petition; that said Hamilton & Co. did not on that day or at any other time confirm the sale of said oil, and that said Bruff did not hear anything of said sale until several days thereafter. This testimony, as shown by the bill of exception reserved to the court's action, was objected to on the grounds. (1) That it varied the terms of the written contract sued on; (2) that defendant had not denied under oath the execution of said contract; (3) that there were no pleadings to authorize the introduction of said testimony, and it was irrelevant and immaterial. Some one or all of these objections were by the trial court sustained, and the testimony offered excluded. This was error. It was not essential to the admissibility of the testimony offered that a denial under oath of the authority of John Hamilton & Co. to make the alleged contract in behalf of appellant should have been filed by it. The contract was not signed by either the plaintiff or defendant, but alone by John Hamilton & Co., as brokers. It was not sufficient without evidence aliunde to show that it had been executed by authority of appellant, and therefore binding upon it. The evidence was sought to be supplied by the testimony of John Hamilton. He testified in behalf of appellee, among other things, in effect, that he talked over the telephone at Dallas with the manager of appellant, who was at Floresville three times on the 10th day of September, 1906, the first time at 11:30 o'clock in the morning, the second time at 12:37 o'clock p. m., and the third time at 2:50 p. m.; that, according to the memorandum which his firm keeps of daily conversations with the different mills in the state, appellant gave to his firm in the first conversation an offer of three tanks of October oil at 23½ cents, two tanks of November oil at 23 cents f. o. b. cars at Floresville; that in the second conversation he advised appellant of the sale of the five tanks of oil to appellee, and at that time the two tanks of November oil were increased to three tanks. He further testified that, in making the sale of the oil to appellee, his firm was acting for appellant as brokers, and by the authority given them over the phone in the conversations stated; that said sales were confirmed the day made over the telephone, and by mailing the contracts sued on to appellant and appellee, and that such course was the usual custom in such transactions. On cross-examination of this witness he testified in this connection that the rule by which his firm was governed in making the sales of the oil to appellee required such sales to be confirmed by the seller on the day they were made, and, if not, they were not binding. The undisputed testimony further showed that appellant and appel-

lee were members of the Texas Cotton Seed Crushers' Association; that the sales to them of the oil in question were made under the rules of that association; and that said rules governing option sales, etc., stipulated that, unless such a sale is confirmed by 12 o'clock at night on the day the option is given, it is not binding upon either party. E. H. Tasse, appellee's manager, testified: "In the event that John Hamilton & Co. secured from the defendant on which there was no time limit (and there was none) an offer on the six tanks of oil at price and terms specified, and did not give the defendant their reply verbally or by phone or by telegraph on or before midnight of the day on which the offer is secured, the trade would be considered off." In addition to the foregoing testimony, the contracts upon which appellee's suit is founded stipulate, in effect, that the sales alleged are governed by the rules of the Texas Cotton Seed Crushers' Association. Clearly in this state of the evidence the testimony offered by appellant and excluded by the court was material and admissible. It was not offered with a view of merely varying the terms of the purported contracts declared on or to show want of authority in John Hamilton & Co. to make such contracts, but for the purpose of showing that said contracts, although signed by John Hamilton & Co., and by them delivered to appellee, did not take effect and become binding because an important condition upon which their completion and binding force depended, and which was well known to and understood by appellee to be essential to their vitality and efficacy, was not complied with. If the sale of the oil under the option given by the appellant to John Hamilton & Co. was not reported to appellant by or before midnight of September 10, 1906, as prescribed by the rules of the Texas Cotton Seed Crushers' Association, then the execution and delivery by the said John Hamilton & Co. of the instruments sued on were not the contracts of appellant. This was the issue tendered by the testimony excluded, and no denial of the authority of John Hamilton & Co. to execute in behalf of appellant said instruments or to make a sale of the oil was necessary to warrant the admission of said testimony. It follows that the testimony should have been admitted, and the question involved submitted for the determination of the jury by an appropriate instruction.

We are further of the opinion that the court erred in excluding the testimony of the witness J. E. Canfield as to the contents of a letter claimed to have been written by John Hamilton & Co. to appellant in reference to the matter involved in this suit. The loss of the letter was sufficiently established to authorize the admission of parol evidence of its contents, and it does not appear that its authenticity was questioned. It was material upon the issue upon which the testimony of the witness Bruff was offered as shown in a former part of this opinion, and, if we are correct in our holding that the testimony of Bruff was admissible, then for the same reasons the testimony of the witness Canfield was admissible.

The judgment of the court below is reversed, and the cause remanded.

FT. WORTH & D. C. RY. CO. v. LONGINO.
(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Feb. 20, 1909. Rehearing Denied March 27, 1909.)

1. RAILROADS (§ 369*)—INJURIES TO PERSON ON TRACK—CARE REQUIRED.

A railroad company reasonably chargeable with knowledge that persons are on the track, whether as trespassers or licensees or under a claim of right, must exercise ordinary care to discover their presence, and to avoid injuring them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 1261; Dec. Dig. § 369.*]

2. RAILROADS (§ 381*)—USE OF TRACK BY PEDESTRIANS—CARE REQUIRED.

One using a railroad track, either as a licensee or under a lawful claim of right, must exercise ordinary care for his own safety, and one exercising no care whatever is guilty of contributory negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 1286; Dec. Dig. § 381.*]

3. RAILROADS (§ 396*)—USE OF TRACK BY PEDESTRIANS—CARE REQUIRED—PRESUMPTIONS.

One struck by a train at a place long used as a footway by the public, and so injured as to be unable to recall anything connected with the accident, presumptively looked and listened for the approach of trains before entering on the track, especially where it appeared that he was familiar with the running of the trains, and where his companion to some extent looked for an approaching train before going on the track.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 1341; Dec. Dig. § 396.*]

4. RAILROADS (§ 400*)—INJURIES TO PERSON ON TRACK—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Whether one struck by a train at a place used by the public as a footway was guilty of contributory negligence is for the jury, unless the undisputed evidence shows that he exercised no care for his own safety.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 1377; Dec. Dig. § 400.*]

5. RAILROADS (§ 397*)—INJURIES TO PERSON ON TRACK—EVIDENCE.

One using a railroad track as a footway may show on the issue of contributory negligence the proximity of crossings, stations, and the like, and the custom of the company to give signals for such places.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 1354; Dec. Dig. § 397.*]

6. RAILROADS (§ 385*)—INJURIES TO PERSON ON TRACK—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—RELIANCE ON PRECAUTIONS.

One on a railroad track may in some measure depend on the company operating its trains in the usual manner, and may rely on the exercise of the usual precautions for the safety of those whose presence on the track is to be anticipated.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 1311-1313; Dec. Dig. § 385.*]

7. TRIAL (§ 260*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REFUSAL TO GIVE CHARGE COVERED BY CHARGE GIVEN.

It is not error to refuse a requested charge substantially embraced in the charge given.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 651; Dec. Dig. § 260.*]

Appeal from District Court, Tarrant County; Irby Dunklin, Judge.

Action by S. B. Longino against the Ft. Worth & Denver City Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Appellee recovered a judgment against appellant for the sum of $7,000 for personal injuries, and the latter has appealed.

The principle issue arising on the appeal is one growing out of appellant's plea of contributory negligence, and upon which it now insists the court should have instructed a verdict in its favor. The testimony which is claimed to necessitate such instruction is thus set out by appellant:

J. W. Finney testified as follows: "I remember the occasion of young Longino getting knocked off the railroad track there. On that day I was at home. I was right in the lot. * * * From the place where I was standing I could see the Denver track, both north and south; could see it north and south of the county road where it crosses. * * * I was looking there at the time he was knocked off the track. * * * There are two tracks there right together, about 50 feet off, maybe 100 feet apart. * * * My attention was first attracted by the Cotton Belt freight blowing—coming by on the Cotton Belt. The Cotton Belt track was farthest south. The Denver track was nearest to me. The Cotton Belt was coming out blowing northeast, and that attracted my attention, and I looked down there, and I saw the Denver coming into town, and there was a man coming this way and two men going the other way. I mean one man coming towards me, and two men going towards town on the Denver. * * * I have been on the track there along about where the young man was knocked off, and have made observations back up towards the northeast. You can see the track back towards the northeast for a quarter of a mile or further. You could see any one walking along on the track if they was on it—nothing at all to obstruct the view. * * * What first attracted my attention was the whistle or something on the Cotton Belt coming this way. When I looked at it, the passenger train was about maybe 100 yards above the crossing, something like that—above the county road crossing when I saw it. I saw it as it crossed the crossing, kept watching it come right up. I saw it until it got right at them. * * * It is true that as you go down that road from your (my) house, or the house where he (plaintiff) lived, go down the road to the south in the direction of the Ft. Worth & Denver track, that by looking up there to the right you can see that track all the way from Hodge clear down. * * * For a space of 100 yards there, as a man would travel towards that track, there is no reason in the world why he couldn't see a train coming down from Hodge south if he had looked. It is about a mile from my place up there to the old station of Hodge. * * * The Cotton Belt that I was speaking of was going in the direction of Hodge, and the passenger train that I speak of having struck this boy was coming from Hodge in the direction of Ft. Worth. * * * When my attention was drawn down there by the whistle of the Cotton Belt train, these two boys were just starting in on the Denver railroad. They had just about gotten to the track—to the Denver track—when my attention was drawn to the Cotton Belt train by its whistling, and I looked down there. The passenger train was about 100 yards, something like that, above the dirt road. It had not got to the dirt road crossing by about 100 yards. About that time these boys were just turning onto the railroad track. This boy and the boy with him went onto the railroad track there in broad daylight, with the passenger train about 100 yards off coming. They could have seen it if they had looked back up the track something like 300 feet. I couldn't say, but then it was not very far. * * * The boys were running. They were on a long run in the middle of the track. I reckon my attention was turned to what they were doing after that. They were running pretty lively. The never looked back from the time they got on that track until they were hit, that I saw. A man would have to go down there to get on the inside of that inclosure, walk over that cattle guard, if he got over that bridge, in order to travel that way to the packing houses. When they got down there, these 300 or 400 yards that I speak of, they walked out over another stock gap. * * * I do not know of any other way of fencing it so as to keep stock and people off of this track. Have never seen any other way for the railroads to keep them out. At the time I saw the Denver train, it was then approaching the boys, and they were going in the direction away from the train. They did not look back, or anything, check speed, or make any effort to get off while I was looking at them. At the time I looked up the train was about 100 yards north of the county road. They continued down the track."

A. C. Russell testified as follows: "I recollect the incident of a young man being hit by a passenger train beyond the Kolp elevator in December, 1904. We were going to work on the 27th of December. * * * At the time plaintiff was hit, I was helping to set the hand car off out of the way of the train, I suppose. * * * When we had our car on the track, we were going north, and the train was coming our way. * * * I suggested that some one go out and flag against the train, for we were running on the train time, and one of the men, Blakeley, got off, said he would go out and flag, and he went on and we kept going on slow and kept a lookout for the train, and, before we got a signal, I saw him stop. I saw the train coming. Just then it started to blow for the crossing, and we stopped then to set the car off. * * * I was looking up the track until I saw the train coming—until the train commenced to whistle. Just before I turned to take hold of the hand car, there was two men got on the track at that crossing, and turned coming south, coming in a long running walk, tolerably pert. I couldn't tell which way they come from. They just got on the track, just as I saw the train. I never noticed them until they stepped into the track. The train was then in my view. I was about 150 or 200 yards south of the public crossing. * * * That crossing whistle sounded just before I saw those boys on the track. I saw the train just, you might say, for a second before I heard the whistle. * * * When I first saw the man that got knocked off, I was about 200 yards from him, I suppose. * * * Immediately after the crossing whistle, these two men come on to the track. That is the first I saw of them. When I saw them, I had already heard the whistle for the crossing. It all occurred about the same time. * * * I heard the crossing whistle before I ever saw the men, and the crossing whistle was about at the whistling post. * * * I suppose the post is a quarter of a mile from the crossing."

Fred Blakeley testified by deposition as follows: "I was flagging ahead of a hand car, and was looking directly at the man just as he was struck, and had just told them to look out for the train. * * * The men got on the railroad track to the north of me some 200 feet, I suppose, and from there to the point where he was struck I suppose it was some 250 or 300 feet in a southerly direction from where he got on the track. There was another person with the party that was struck. * * * I saw both parties before they were struck by the engine. I saw them just before they got on the railroad track. They were then in the dirt road crossing the railroad track; that is, the road crossed the track. They were running along that dirt road. * * * They left the dirt road, and were running on the railroad track south. When these parties were even with me, or near me, I said to both parties: 'Look out for the train!' That was a short time before the train struck him."

The witness Hoard testified thus: "I went out with him [appellee] the evening before.

* * * Going out there, we went up around back of the packing house, and walked across there. We went across this road—the Denver road. This accident happened on the Denver road. The next morning after we started back we crawled through, I believe, the same place where I came along the next day after my suitcase. I went the same road that I went in the evening before, and that was up the Denver road. To get in the right of way we crawled through the fence where the fence wire— You might say we walked through it. The wire was down and up. It was a gap that we could walk through, bending so. We didn't have much trouble getting through. * * * Next morning I started to town with him. We came down the road until—there is a public road there—we came down the road until we got to the railroad, and then we walked up the gap just across, and got onto the railroad, and came down the railroad track. When I stepped on the track, I seen a train on the Cotton Belt, a freight train; but at this time on this road no train was heard nor seen by me. We started down the track. We were running along, you might say, in a trot down the track, and had gone at least something about 150 yards, * * * maybe a little further, and, while we were going down the track, this train on the Cotton Belt were going north, and I heard a whistle and seen the steam from the valve, and we were watching, and we were watching this train. * * * There was a man walking up the track—the track that I was on. He was off to the side of the track that I were on, and I spoke to him. * * * I spoke to him, and then I jumped. At the time I jumped there was a train coming up behind us. * * * Mr. Longino, I guess, was, I couldn't say, maybe eight or ten feet ahead of me as I called to him. The last I seen of him was as he made, when he turned his head this way. Why, he seen the train, and he made an effort to get off. * * * I jumped off, and, after I jumped, I called to him, and saw him look back to the left, and he made an effort to get off. He jumped out, caught him, and, I couldn't say, carried him I guess 50 yards, and he fell on the same side that I was on. * * * Before we got to the railroad track, we started in a slow trot. We were not exactly running. When we got to the railroad track, we crossed over the cattle guard onto the inside of the railway inclosure and onto the track. We were going in a slow trot down the track, just a slow trot. This fellow that I speak of as having met and holloed at me was coming towards us. * * * He was walking on the left side of the embankment. * * * It (the Cotton Belt train) was nearly opposite me by the time Longino got struck. The engine was somewhere near me by that time. I had been watching this. I had been watching it at the time. I was watching the engine and the train at the same time. Longino was running a little bit ahead of me. I had been watching this Cotton Belt train as I was going down there. * * * I hadn't looked back up there just at that time to see whether there was any train coming, but I looked up to the road near the house onto the track, and there was nothing that I could see. I didn't see any train up there about 100 yards. There was a small cut there, and I wouldn't say how far I could see. I did not stand there on the track and look at all. I looked just about the time we got on the track. I glanced up the track and down it to see if there was a train, and there was nothing I could see. I didn't make no stand. I don't say I turned and looked both ways for a train. I looked both ways."

Appellee himself testified as follows: "I remember leaving the house that morning. I remember after we got out of the yard. I remember of closing the front gate. I don't remember anything else that occurred that day. * * * I knew that that railroad track was used daily for running trains over it. I had seen trains going back and forth over that track. I knew that the railroad company had partly fenced its track. * * * I don't recollect going down that road to the railroad track that morning on which I was hurt. I don't know a thing after I closed the gate that happened that day. * * * At that time the condition of my eyes was good. I could see. I guess they were as good as any ordinary eye. I have my own ears, and I reckon they are as good as anybody's. That morning before I was hurt there was nothing wrong about me that I know of." It is undisputed that the track at the place of the accident had been long used as a footway by the public generally, and the evidence tends to show that this was the most practicable and most used route open to appellee, and the train was 30 minutes behind time.

The issues were thus submitted in the charge of the court:

"If you believe from the evidence that at the time of the accident in controversy, and for a long time prior thereto, that portion of defendant's track on which plaintiff was traveling on the occasion of the accident was and had been commonly and habitually used by the public as a pathway for travel by pedestritrains, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the defendant; and if you further believe from the evidence that plaintiff did not discover the approach of the train in time to avoid being struck by the engine; and if you further believe from the evidence that persons of ordinary prudence, filling the respective positions of engineer and fireman of said engine, would, under the same circumstances, have been on the lookout for pedestritrains on said track at the place where plaintiff was traveling before he was struck, and could and would have discovered that plaintiff was on the track sooner than defendant's said engineer and fireman made such discovery, and, after making such discovery, could and would have sounded signals of the bell and whistle or either at such time and in such manner as to warn plaintiff of the approach of the train in time to have enabled him to leave the track before being struck by the engine—then you will find that the failure of the engineer and fireman to make such discovery and to sound such warnings was negligence; and if you so find, and further believe and find that such negligence, if any, was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury, then you will return a verdict in favor of the plaintiff.

"The foregoing instruction, however, is given subject to the following instruction, to wit: If you believe from the evidence that at the time plaintiff went upon said track at the road crossing immediately prior to his injury he failed to look and listen, or to do either, to discover whether or not a train was approaching from the direction of Hodge station, and that by so looking and listening, or both, he could have discovered that said train was approaching, and in failing so to do he was guilty of negligence; or if you believe from the evidence that after starting down said track he was guilty of negligence in failing, if he did fail, to discover the approach of said train in time to have left the track before he was struck by the engine of said train; or if you believe from the evidence that, had plaintiff been traveling on the outside of the rails of said track instead of between the rails, he would not have been injured, and that he was guilty of negligence in traveling between the rails instead of on the outside thereof—then in any one or more of said contingencies you will return a verdict in favor of the defendant, independent of any findings you may make on any other issue submitted to you in this charge. If you do not believe from all the facts and circumstances in evidence that the engineer and fireman on the engine which struck plaintiff were guilty of negligence in failing to sound warnings of the approach of said train other than the warnings you believe were sounded, then you will return a verdict in favor of the defendant. If plaintiff's case has not been made out by a preponderance of the evidence, you will return a verdict in favor of the defendant."

Spoons, Thompson & Barwise and J. M. Chambers, for appellant. Capps, Cantey, Hanger & Short, for appellee.

SPEER, J. (after stating the facts as above). We take it to be well settled that railroad companies are charged with the duty of exercising ordinary care to discover the presence of persons on their tracks, and to avoid injuring them at those places where, under all the circumstances, they are reasonably chargeable with knowledge that such persons are liable to be; and in our judgment it can make no difference, so far as the duty of the railroad company is concerned, whether such persons are technically to be classed as trespassers, licensees, or persons using the company's tracks as of right. In all such cases the duty is imposed because of the broad rule of humanity that one engaged in so dangerous a business is required to exercise ordinary care to avoid injuring another when the presence of and danger to such other person is reasonably to be anticipated. That this rule extends to those places where the railroad company's track is commonly used as a footway has been too often held to enumerate. It is pointedly stated in G., C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Smith, 87 Tex. 357, 28 S. W. 524: "That there may be no mistake hereafter as to the effect of Railway v. Matula, 79 Tex. 577, 15 S. W. 573, we announce the rule that railroad companies at crossings and such portions of its track as may be commonly used as footway or crossing, which is known to the company and at which persons may be expected, must use ordinary care to discover their presence and to avoid inflicting injury upon them (Railway v. Croasnoe, 72 Tex. 79, 10 S. W. 342), and that, in the exercise of that degree of care, they must use such an amount of vigilance and caution as a man of ordinary prudence would use under like circumstances." Indeed, appellant does not controvert in the least this proposition; but the insistence is that, notwithstanding its negligence in this respect, the appellee cannot recover because of his own contributory negligence. The very recent case of Texas Midland R. R. Co. v. J. W. Byrd (not yet reported) 115 S. W. 1163, is pressed upon us in support of this contention. In the opinion in that case the Supreme Court quotes Mr. Justice Williams' language in G., C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Matthews, 100 Tex. 63, 93 S. W. 1068, as follows: "An implied permission, such as is claimed, to use a railroad track as a footpath, may relieve the person enjoying it of the imputation of being a trespasser, but it does not relieve the place of its inherent dangers, nor exempt the traveler from the duty to act with ordinary prudence. When he voluntarily chooses the dangerous pathway, instead of a safe one beside it, we can see no escape from the conclusion that he is guilty of negligence if there be no justifying or excusing circumstances." In the case under review the facts show that the plaintiff while walking over the bridge of the defendant, which was 195 to 200 feet in length, discovered a train approaching, and, in order to escape being struck thereby, attempted to jump off the bridge, and in doing so was injured, and it was held that it was "apparent from plaintiff's own testimony that there were other ways of going to his destination by which the crossing of the bridge might have been avoided, and, he having selected a way he knew to be dangerous, his conduct must be considered negligence on his part. Giving all the effect of implied license to use the bridge as is claimed for it in this case, it could hardly be said that it implied a license to use the structure to the obstruction of the defendant's business." While as we read the case of G., C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Matthews, supra, the latter part of the quotation above made, upon which is based the decision in the Byrd Case, is wholly a dictum, in that the court expressly there found that there was not a safe place to walk beside the track, yet the dictum of yesterday has become the decision of to-day, and we are confronted with the question whether or not the holding in the Byrd Case is decisive of the present appeal. It is not quite clear from the report of that case either by the Supreme Court or the Court of Civil Appeals (Texas Midland R. R. v. Byrd [Tex. Civ. App.] 110 S. W. 199) just what were the "other ways of going to his destination by which the crossing of the bridge might have been avoided by the deceased Byrd"; yet, however that may be, we think it is quite clear the trial court could not summarily have instructed a verdict for appellant in this case upon the theory that there was a safe way alongside of the track by which appellee could have traveled, and thus have averted the injury. That there was such a way at all is but an inference deducible from the evidence, and the same cannot in any wise be said to be an undisputed fact requiring such an instruction. The Supreme Court further say in the decision of the Byrd Case: "We think that the doctrine upon which the license of the railroad company is implied by the use which persons put to it by using it as a footpath has been pushed far enough in this state, and we are not inclined to let it go any further." But we, in view of the long and unbroken line of decisions in this state, to the effect generally that contributory negligence is a question of fact for the determination of the jury under all the circumstances, are not inclined to push the doctrine of that decision any further than we are required to do so. It would perhaps be an injustice to say that the Supreme Court meant that the doctrine should be carried further than announced by it in that case, but clearly, in our judgment, if the Supreme Court meant to announce the broad doctrine as now contended for by appellant that a licensee upon a railroad track is necessarily guilty of contributory negligence because he has gone into a place of danger and been injured in consequence, then the case ought speedily to be overruled.

We are aware of the rule announced in I. & G. N. Ry. Co. v. Edwards, 100 Tex. 22, 93 S. W. 106, to the effect that, while persons using a railway crossing have the right to expect that the law requiring signals will be obeyed, yet this is not a substitute for the duty of exercising care for themselves; and this rule is perhaps nowhere more broadly stated than by this court in Ft. W. & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Wyatt, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 119, 79 S. W. 349, wherein we stated: "There are many authorities holding as matter of fact that one who goes upon a railroad track without taking the precaution to look and listen for approaching cars, and is injured by a car which he might have discovered by the exercise of such diligence, is guilty of such negligence as will preclude a recovery by him." And so it ought to be held in any case, we think, whether the injured person be merely a licensee or one lawfully entitled to use the track as of right. He ought to be required in all cases to exercise ordinary care for his own safety, and, where it is undisputed that such person exercised no care whatever, he, of course, must be held to have been guilty of contributory negligence. In the present case we do not think it can be said from the evidence that appellee exercised no care whatever for his own safety in entering upon appellant's track and continuing thereon until he was injured. In Texas Midland R. R. Co. v. Crowder, 25 Tex. Civ. App. 536, 64 S. W. 90, in which a writ of error was refused, it is said: "While the evidence fails to definitely show that Crowder looked and listened before stepping on the track, it is not doing violence to the evidence to assume that he saw the engine and cars at the south end of the switch, and concluded that they would not then be backed down at that time, or, if so, that a proper lookout would be kept, and that proper signals would be given to warn him in time to leave the track to prevent injury." Crowder was killed in that accident, which accounts for the presumption thus indulged. While here appellee was not killed, yet the fact appears to be undisputed that he was so injured that he was unable to recall anything connected with the transaction from the time he left his home in the morning until some days or weeks after the accident, so that we think the humane presumption that he did at least look and listen for approaching trains before entering upon appellant's track ought under the circumstances to be indulged, as was done in the Crowder Case. Besides, there is the further circumstance that he was in company with another who did to some extent at least look for an approaching train before going upon the track. In a general way, we think we are in line with the trend of the decisions in this state when we adhere to the rule that whether or not a person injured on a railroad is guilty of contributory negligence depends so largely upon an infinite variety of circumstances that it ought in all cases to be submitted to the jury as a question of fact, except in those cases where the undisputed evidence shows that the injured person exercised no care whatever for his own safety. In the very nature of things, even to hold that one is guilty of contributory negligence when he might have selected a safe way is in some measure to invade the province of the jury, for the solution of that question depends at last upon whether or not a reasonably prudent person would have taken the safe way, and this, in turn, is determined by an infinite variety of circumstances, such as the proximity of the way, its condition, the condition of the railroad as a way, the frequency of its use by the public, the frequency of the passage of trains or cars on it, the probability of such trains or cars being then about to pass, the presence or absence of watchmen or signals, the diligence exercised in the matter of looking and listening for approaching trains, and other things too numerous to mention, which ought to and do influence human conduct every day. The rule is firmly and sanely held in this state that one using the tracks of a railway company may introduce evidence of the proximity of crossings, stations, and the like, and of the custom of the company to blow its whistles and sound its bells for such places upon the issue of his own contributory negligence in being on the track (I. & G. N. R. R. Co. v. Woodward, 28 Tex. Civ. App. 389, 63 S. W. 1051); and, further, that the failure to give such signals may, as to such person, constitute actionable negligence (M. & T. Ry. Co. of Tex. v. Saunders [Tex. Sup.] 106 S. W. 321, 14 L. R. A. [N. S.] 998). It is a fact known of all men that persons on a railway track are likely to take notice of the manner in which trains are required to be run, and, in fact, are run, and in some measure to depend upon the companies operating their trains in the usual manner, and thereby to rely upon the exercise of the usual precautions for the safety of those whose presence on the track is to be anticipated. From this well-recognized principle we think it necessarily follows that the issue of contributory negligence on the part of a person injured on a railroad track, whose very presence is thus largely influenced by his reliance on the known custom and usual conduct of the railway company to exercise care to avoid injuring him, is at last a question of fact for the determination of a jury. As applied to this case, the appellee, who is not conclusively shown not to have exercised any care for his own safety, but who presumptively did at least look and listen for the approach of appellant's train, relies upon the known duty of appellant to exercise ordinary care to keep a lookout for his presence along the well-beaten path on its track, and by reason of its failure in this respect is injured. We cannot say under such circumstances that he is guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law. So that we conclude the trial court did not err in refusing to give a summary instruction for appellant.

We also conclude that the evidence is not such as to require us to set aside the verdict and judgment for want of evidence, and that the court committed no errors in his rulings on evidence or otherwise. The charge set out succinctly and clearly presented the material issues of the case, and sufficiently embraced the requested charges.

The judgment is therefore in all things affirmed.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. March 3, 1909. Rehearing Denied April 7, 1909.)

1. VENUE (§ 71*)—CHANGE OF VENUE—EFFECT OF MOTION.

The court may determine whether the petition states a cause of action before acting on an uncontested motion by the plaintiff for change of venue to another county presided over by the same judge on the ground of local prejudice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. § 92; Dec. Dig. § 71.*]

2. MANDAMUS (§ 19*)—ABATEMENT—TERMINATION OF RIGHT TO OFFICE.

The office of a writ of mandamus against an officer is to compel the performance of a personal duty resting upon the person to whom the writ is sent, and, on his retirement from his office, the writ must abate in the absence of statute permitting a substitution of his successor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. § 52; Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

3. MANDAMUS (§ 153*)—ABATEMENT—TERMINATION OF RIGHT TO OFFICE.

There is no statute in Texas permitting the successor in office of a county judge to be substituted for the predecessor in a mandamus proceeding against the latter to compel the performance of an official duty, such as ordering an election under Acts 1903, p. 118, c. 93, art. 812, to determine the location of a county seat.

Appeal from District Court, Hays County; L. W. Moore, Judge.

Mandamus proceeding by O. M. Carpenter and others against Ed R. Kone and another. From a judgment dismissing the petition, petitioners appeal. Affirmed.

Dowell & Dowell, for appellants. R. E. McKie and Will G. Barber, for appellees.

FISHER, O. J. This is a mandamus proceeding instituted in the district court of Hays county by appellants originally against Ed R. Kone to require him, as county judge, to make and enter an order under article 812, Acts 28th Leg. 1903, p. 118, c. 93, for the purpose of holding an election in order to determine if the county seat of Hays county should be moved from the town of San Marcos to Hays City. The petition proceeds to allege that Kone refused to make such an order as required by law for the purpose of holding the election, and alleges that during the pendency of the suit Kone resigned his office as county judge, and there was appointed and elected in his place John B. Wilson, the present county judge, who is made a party to this proceeding, and against whom it is prayed that the writ of mandamus be issued. The good faith of Kone in resigning is not in any manner questioned, and, as a basis for the relief against Wilson, the present county judge, the appellants rely upon the act of Kone in refusing to order the election. There is no averment that any request had been made of Wilson to order an election, or that he had refused to make such an order, or that the appellants have been deprived of any right by reason of any refusal of Wilson to grant any request that they could lawfully make.

As ancillary to this proceeding and dependent upon the same, there is also a prayer for a writ of injunction against Wilson, as county judge, and the commissioners' court of Hays county, and the parties with whom they have a contract for the construction and erection of a courthouse to cease the performance and execution of that contract until the election may be held and the matter of the removal of the county seat finally determined. In the trial court a general demurrer and special demurrers were urged by appellees to the appellants' petition, and the court, after hearing the same, sustained the general demurrer and some of the special demurrers, and, as recited in the decree, it was determined that the plaintiffs did not allege a cause of action against which the defendants were required to plead, and we take it from the manner in which the case is here presented and treated in the court below, although the judgment is silent upon that question, that plaintiffs' petition, after the demurrers were sustained, was by the court dismissed. There was no effort by the appellants to amend, so far as appears from the judgment, and here it is well to state that upon the point that we dispose of the case no amendment is possible.

Before the trial court acted upon the demurrers, the appellants filed an application for change of venue on the ground that there exists in Hays county a combination against them instigated by influential persons, by reason of which they could not in that county expect a fair and impartial trial. Appellants contend that the court erred in taking up and considering the demurrers before acting upon the motion for a change of venue. The bill of exception shows that the motion for change of venue was not contested or controverted in any manner. From what is stated in the bill and the explanation appended thereto it appears that the court concluded that, before granting the motion, it had the right to determine whether the petition stated a cause of action. Upon change of venue, the case would have gone to Caldwell county, a county presided over by the same judge who disposed of the case; and the judge, in effect, said in the explanation that there was no necessity for merely changing the case to Caldwell county when he would there determine just as he has here that plaintiffs' petition presents no cause of action. We have found no authority directly upon this question, but it seems to be in consonance with reason to not require the transfer of a supposed case when none in law exists. It is true the appellants had filed in the district court of Hays county a petition for mandamus, but upon examination it was found to be fatally defective, in that it did not state a cause of action. If this is true, why should it be transferred to another county to ascertain this fact? The grounds alleged for the change of venue was the existence of a prejudice which might affect the appellants in the trial of the case and the ultimate result, but, if there was no case to be tried or no cause of action stated upon which there might be exercised the influence of this combination of influential persons, why remove it from Hays county? The court had not when it acted upon the demurrer entered the order transferring the case, and it still retained jurisdiction, and we see no good reason why the case should be sent to Caldwell county for the purpose of there determining that the plaintiff was not as a matter of law entitled to any relief whatever.

It is not necessary for us in affirming this judgment to discuss the points presented in the assignments of errors; and, in the view that we take of it, it would probably be improper for us to express our opinion upon the correctness of the ruling of the court in sustaining some of the demurrers, but we are clearly in accord with the trial court in the conclusion that the general demurrer should have been sustained, although it may be that we possibly do not agree with that court as to the grounds upon which that ruling should be based. The statute upon which this proceeding is based (article 812, Acts 28th Leg. 1903, p. 118, c. 98), in effect says that, when it becomes desirable to remove the county seat, it shall be the duty of the county judge of said county, or, on his failure or inability to act, then two of the commissioners, upon the written application of a certain number of freeholders and qualified voters, etc., to order an election for the purpose of determining the removal. This statute makes it the duty of the county judge—or, in other words, the individual who holds the office of county judge—to order the election. The petition for mandamus states that the application to remove was presented to Kone, who was then county judge, and states his refusal, and gives what purports to be his reasons why he refused to order the election. It also recites the fact that Kone, after the bringing of the suit to compel him by mandamus to order the election, had resigned, and that Wilson had been appointed and elected in his stead. Wilson was made a party, and it seems was served with citation and has filed an answer, which, in determining the merits of the plaintiffs' case, it is not necessary that we should look to; but there is no averment whatever in the plaintiffs' petition that Wilson as county judge has refused nor does it appear that any request was ever made of him to order the election; but, as before said, the plaintiffs are seeking to procure the writ of mandamus against Wilson on the ground that his predecessor Kone refused to grant the application. No question is made about the good faith of Kone's resignation. In the syllabus to one of the cases cited these rules are stated. They are so pointed and terse that we take the liberty of copying them:

"(1) The office of a writ of mandamus against an officer is to compel the performance of a personal duty resting upon the person to whom the writ is sent.

"(2) On the death or retirement from office of the original defendant, the writ must abate in the absence of any statutory provision to the contrary.

"(3) A substitution of his successor in office as defendant will not avail.

"(4) A suit which has abated must be dismissed." United States v. Boutwell, 84 U. S. 604, 21 L. Ed. 721; United States v. Butterworth, 160 U. S. 602, 18 Sup. Ct. 441, 42 L. Ed. 873; Warner Valley Stock Co. v. Smith, 165 U. S. 82, 17 Sup. Ct. 225, 41 L. Ed. 623, and a number of other cases to like effect, which are collected and annotated in the notes of United States v. Boutwell, 21 L. Ed. 721. In the Boutwell Case it appears that a mandamus was asked against Secretary Boutwell to issue certain bonds under an act of Congress. An order was issued for the Secretary to show cause. Subsequently Secretary Boutwell resigned as Secretary of the Treasury, and Mr. Richardson was appointed as his successor. It was contended that the process could run against Richardson. In the cases cited and many upon this point referred to in the notes the language of Judge Strong in the Boutwell Case indicates their tenor: "The office of a writ of mandamus is to compel the performance of a duty resting upon the person to whom the writ is sent. That duty may have originated in one way or in another. It may, as is alleged in the present case, have arisen from the acceptance of an office which has imposed the duty upon its incumbent. But, no matter out of what facts or relations the duty has grown, what the law regards and what it seeks to enforce by a writ of mandamus is the personal obligation of the individual to whom it addresses the writ. If he be an officer and the duty be an official one, still the writ is aimed exclusively against him as a person, and he only can be punished for disobedience. The writ does not reach the office. It cannot be directed to it. It is therefore in substance a personal action, and it rests upon the averred and assumed fact that the defendant has neglected or refused to perform a personal duty, to the performance of which by him the relator has a clear right. Hence it is an imperative rule that, previous to making application for a writ to command the performance of any particular act, an express and distinct demand or request to perform it must have been made by the relator or prosecutor upon the defendant, and it must appear that he refused to comply with such demand either in direct terms or by conduct from which a refusal can be conclusively inferred. Tapp, Mandamus, 283. Thus it is the personal default of the defendant that warrants impetration of the writ, and, if a peremptory mandamus be awarded, the costs must fall upon the defendant. It necessarily follows from this that on the death or retirement from office of the original defendant the writ must abate in the absence of any statutory provision to the contrary. When the personal duty exists only so long as the office is held, the court cannot compel the defendant to perform it after his power to perform has ceased. And, if a successor in office may be substituted, he may be mulcted in costs for the fault of his predecessor without any delinquency of his own. Besides, were a demand made upon him, he might discharge the duty and render the interposition of the court unnecessary. At all events, he is not in privity with his predecessor, much less is he his predecessor's personal representative. As might be expected, therefore, we find no case in which such a substitution as is asked for now has ever been allowed in the absence of some statute authorizing it." Some of the cases referred to point out the distinction between those cases when the purpose is to mandamus a municipality, or a collective body or an office, and that class of cases which merely complains of the individual that holds the office or of his official action.

Here it is clear that it is the conduct of Kone, the individual holding the office of county judge, that is complained of—his refusal to grant to the appellants a right which they claim they are entitled to. There is no privity between Kone and his successor, Wilson; and, if the conduct of the former was wrongful and resulted in a denial of a right to the appellants (which we do not, by the way, hold to be the case), why should Wilson be held responsible for it, when he had had no opportunity to prevent it, or refuse to perform it? The thing which they complain Kone refused to do was not one of the necessary incidents of the office which descended to his successor. But the refusal of Kone was personal, for which he alone could be held responsible; and, notwithstanding there is a conflict of authority upon the question, the reasoning upon which rests the Boutwell Case and others to the same effect is unanswerable. There is no statute in this state that permits the successor in office to be substituted for the predecessor in a mandamus proceeding like this.

The question discussed is preliminary to all others that might arise in the case, for, if it is true that it affirmatively appears that the party against whom the writ should run is, by resignation or otherwise, in an attitude that the decree could not operate against him, it arrests the entire proceeding and it should be dismissed. Therefore we are inclined to think that it would be improper to consider the other questions, but, conceding that we could do so, it is not necessary that they should be considered. The injunction proceeding must necessarily fail on account of the judgment dismissing the petition for mandamus.

Judgment affirmed.

A supplemental petition duly filed in reply to the answer is a part of the pleadings, though a subsequent amendment to the original petition is presented.

2. DIVORCE (§ 104*) — PROCEEDINGS — PLEADING—AMENDED PLEADINGS.

A husband's misconduct toward his wife subsequent to the filing of her suit for divorce is properly assigned in an amended petition as grounds for divorce, though he was provoked thereto by the filing of the original petition.

3. DIVORCE (§ 197*)—COUNSEL FEES OF WIFE.

The husband and wife are liable for reasonable counsel fees for services rendered to her in a suit against him for divorce on the ground of cruelty and for the recovery of property, which she has caused to be dismissed, if it appears that the suit was brought in good faith on her part and on the part of her attorneys, and that the facts alleged in her petition were probably true and constituted such cruelty as rendered cohabitation insupportable, and the attorneys are not required to show that the suit was necessary for the protection of her personal safety and for the preservation of her property rights.

4. DIVORCE (§ 197*)—COUNSEL FEES OF WIFE—LIABILITY.

The right of attorneys to recover reasonable fees for prosecuting a wife's suit for divorce is based on the ground that such action was reasonably necessary for her protection, and, if this appears, both husband and wife are liable therefor, regardless of her mental capacity to contract at the time.

Appeal from District Court, Tarrant County; Irby Dunklin, Judge.

Action by Stewart & Templeton against Charles E. Hicks and another. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Harris & Harris, for appellants. W. P. McLean, for appellee.

CONNOR, C. J. This is an appeal from a judgment in the sum of $2,500 as the reasonable value of appellees' services as attorneys at law in a suit for divorce at the instance of appellant Mrs. Mary W. Hicks, and for the recovery of certain separate and community property, against appellant Charles E. Hicks, instituted on the 13th day of December, 1905. The petition filed upon that day alleged a series of assaults and abuses charged to have been committed by Charles E. Hicks upon his said wife, Mrs. Mary Hicks, during the period of several years previous to and up to the date of said 13th day of December, 1905, the day preceding the alleged employment of appellees by Mrs. Mary W. Hicks. On the 15th day of December, 1905, an amended petition was filed, charging that Charles E. Hicks on that day but subsequent to the filing of the suit was guilty of certain other outrages and misconduct and abuses toward his wife which were set up as additional grounds for the divorce. Appellees alleged in their petition in the present suit that they had fully complied with their contract of employment by Mrs. Hicks; that her cause of action was well founded; that they had acted in good faith, etc., but that for some cause unknown to them Mrs. Hicks abandoned the divorce suit, and returned to live with her husband, having the suit dismissed. The performance of their various services was alleged, which it was charged were reasonably worth the sum of $2,500 less $200 that had been paid by Mrs. Hicks on December 21, 1905. Appellants filed their second amended answer on December 7, 1906, pleading the general denial and specially to the effect that at the time of employment Mrs. Mary Hicks was weak in body and mind, incapable of contracting, and that there was no ground for the divorce. It was also specially pleaded that appellees knew of Mrs. Hicks' weakened condition, and, so knowing, induced their employment; that Mrs. Hicks had complained of her husband to them solely on the ground of infidelity, and specially instructed that no other ground for divorce should be charged; that she soon thereafter ascertained that her complaint in this respect was entirely groundless, and accordingly dismissed the suit; that appellees, contrary to their instructions, had charged the various assaults and outrages set up in the petition and amended petition for divorce. It was further specially pleaded that, if Charles E. Hicks was guilty of the wrongful acts and outrages charged in the amended petition on December 15th, they were brought about by the wrongs of appellees in wrongfully bringing suit in violation of the terms of their employment, and hence should not be permitted to prove such acts as a probable cause for divorce and as a basis of plaintiffs' recovery in this suit.

We find nothing in this case requiring extended discussion. Complaint is made in the first assignment of the action of the court in permitting appellees to read as part of their pleadings to the jury the first supplemental petition filed by them in reply to appellants' answer. This supplemental petition was duly filed subsequent to the answer to which it was a reply, and, as such, constituted properly a part of the pleadings, notwithstanding appellees' presentation of a subsequent amendment to their original petition. Even if the action complained of was irregular, nothing in the statement under this assignment indicates that the action of the court could have been prejudicial.

The second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, ninth, thirteenth, and fourteenth assignments of error in various forms present substantially the same question. It is insisted in support of these assignments that the outrages of Charles E. Hicks charged to have been committed on the day the petition for divorce was filed and set up in the amended petition cannot be considered as a basis for appellees' recovery. The contention is that the filing of the original petition for divorce was wrongfully done by appellees, that this action provoked the outrages complained of, and that appellees therefore should be estopped from taking advantage of their own wrong. No authorities are cited in support of any such contention, and we do not think the record gives color thereto. Not a circumstance is referred to in appellants' statement under the propositions to the assignments which indicates that appellees in filing either the original or amended petitions acted in bad faith, and we think it unnecessary to cite authority for the proposition that, if in fact Charles E. Hicks on the day of the institution of the suit committed the various scandalous and outrageous things charged to him, they could be properly assigned in an amended petition as grounds for divorce, and appellant Charles E. Hicks cannot be heard in a court of justice to defend on the ground that he was provoked thereto by the filing of the original petition, which came to his notice immediately prior to the conduct complained of. As to the hearsay character of the statements made by Mrs. Hicks to the appellees referred to in the thirteenth and fourteenth assignments, it is sufficient to say that they were admissible on the issue raised by appellants' plea of bad faith on appellees' part, and were expressly limited by the court's charge in favor of Charles E. Hicks.

Appellants' tenth assignment is as follows: "The court erred in not giving in charge to the jury defendants' special charge No. 4, requested, which is as follows: 'Before plaintiffs are entitled to recover any amounts against defendants or either of them, the plaintiffs must allege and prove by preponderance of the testimony in this case that the services rendered to Mary W. Hicks, if they rendered any, were at the time of their alleged employment, December 14, 1905, for the necessary protection of the personal safety of the said Mary W. Hicks and for the preservation of her property rights, and, unless plaintiffs have done this, you will find for the defendant.'" If Mary W. Hicks acted in good faith in bringing her suit against her husband, Charles E. Hicks, for a divorce and the recovery of property, and if the grounds alleged and set up in her petition were probably true, and if appellees also acted in good faith, all of which was fully and distinctly submitted to the jury in the court's charge, then both Mrs. Hicks and Charles E. Hicks were liable to appellees for whatever the evidence might show their services were reasonably worth. See Speer on Law of Married Women, § 66; McClelland v. McClelland (Tex. Civ. App.) 37 S. W. 359; Oecato v. Duetschman, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 434, 47 S. W. 739; Bord v. Stubbs, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 242, 54 S. W. 634; Dodd v. Hein, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 164, 62 S. W. 811, 812. The special charge referred to in the tenth assignment of error was therefore not the law, and the court properly refused it. The charge would have required a finding that the filing of the petition for divorce was necessary for the "protection of the personal safety of the said Mary W. Hicks and for the preservation of her property rights." All that was required was that the facts alleged were probably true, and constituted such cruelty as rendered their living longer together insupportable. The court's charge in fact submitted the issue presented in appellants' special charge No. 5, the rejection of which is complained of in the eleventh assignment of error, and their special charge No. 8, to the rejection of which complaint is made in the twelfth assignment, we think was properly refused as presenting an immaterial issue. This charge was that "if said Mary W. Hicks was in such a state of mind as to render her unable to know and contract for herself and on her own account at the time she engaged plaintiffs, if she did engage them, as alleged in the pleadings, then you will find for defendants." There was evidence tending to show that shortly before and after the petition for divorce was filed Mary W. Hicks was in a highly excited state of mind, rendering her possibly unable to contract, and the evidence therefore perhaps raised the issue presented in this charge. It is to be observed, however, that appellees' action was not founded upon any contract. They sought merely to recover upon a quantum meruit for the reasonable value of their services, and if, as charged and as fully and fairly submitted to the jury, the grounds for petition were probably true, that there was reasonable cause for bringing the suit, and that the same was brought in good faith on her part and on appellees' part, it was authorized, regardless of the state of her mind. To hold otherwise would be to deny to persons mentally incapable of contracting the protection contemplated by the law. The right to recover reasonable compensation for their services in this case proceeds alone upon the ground that such action was reasonably necessary in the protection of the wife. If so, both husband and wife are legally liable for the reasonable value of the necessities so provided, regardless of the wife's mental condition.

The remaining assignment to the effect that the court erred in overruling appellants' motion for a new trial, "because said verdict and judgment are contrary to law and contrary to the evidence and without evidence and law to support the same," is altogether too general under the rules and numerous authorities to require consideration.

Believing, therefore, that all material issues were fully and fairly submitted by the court's charge, and that no reversible error has been pointed out, it is ordered that the judgment be affirmed.

fall underneath the wheels of the car and receive the injuries of which he complains. The case was tried before the court and jury March 13, 1908, resulting in a verdict and judgment in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $10,000, and the defendant appealed.

The evidence warrants the following conclusions of fact: Appellee was a carpenter and had been at work in Dallas. His home was in Greenville, and about 9 o'clock on the night of June 24, 1905, he purchased a ticket from appellant's agent at Dallas, and took passage on one of its passenger trains for Greenville. Shortly after leaving Dallas, the conductor or auditor on the train took up appellee's ticket and placed in his hat a white slip of paper or pasteboard used to indicate the station to which appellee was destined. The color of the slip of paper or pasteboard selected by the conductor or auditor on the night in question to indicate Greenville as the place of destination of the passenger was green, and by mistake he placed in appellee's hat a white slip, the white slip indicating Royse, a station between Dallas and Greenville, as his destination. After appellee's ticket was taken up he fell asleep, and, when the train reached Royse, one of defendant's employes on the train awakened him, and told him, in effect, that he had reached his destination, and to get off the train. Believing that he had reached Greenville, appellee hurriedly left the car, and, seeing the gates or way open on both sides of the car platform, got off the train on the opposite side from the depot house and platform. Previous to this appellee had made frequent trips from Dallas to Greenville, traveling on defendant's railroad, and was in the habit of getting off the train at Greenville on the side thereof opposite the depot and platform, which was a safe place to alight, and it was the custom for other passengers to do likewise. The depot and platform at Royse are on the same side of the railroad track that the depot and platform are at Greenville. Almost immediately after alighting from the train at Royse, and just as the train was leaving that station, moving slowly, appellee discovered that the place was not Greenville, and then attempted to get back on the train with a grip in his hand, when he stepped upon or caught his foot in a roughly cut or jagged piece of iron lying on the ground near the railroad track, which caused him to stumble and fall, so that his right foot and leg went on the railroad track, and were run over and crushed in such manner as to necessitate the amputation of the leg between the knee joint and hip. Appellant was negligent in permitting the piece of iron upon which the plaintiff stumbled or in which he caught his foot to remain and be upon the ground near its track, in placing in plaintiff's hat a wrong and misleading conductor's check that indicated that plaintiff's destination was Royse, instead of Greenville, and in telling him he had reached his destination and to get off when the train arrived at Royse. The negligence of defendant's servants as indicated was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries, and he was not guilty of contributory negligence.

Appellant's assignments of error from the first to the eighth, inclusive, and the eleventh and twelfth, complain of the fifth paragraph of the court's general charge and the refusal of certain special instructions requested by it. The paragraph of the court's charge here objected to is that portion of the charge wherein the jury were instructed that, if they found the facts as therein grouped to exist, to find for the plaintiff, and the several special charges related to the different phases of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff as contended for by the defendant. The tenth assignment of error complains of the court's refusal to give a special charge asked by defendant to the effect that defendant had constructed a platform for the use of passengers in getting off of trains at Royse on the south side of its main track, and the evidence was not sufficient to show such use of the premises on the opposite side as required of defendant any duty to keep the same free from obstructions, etc., and the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth assignments charge that, for the several reasons therein stated, the court erred in overruling defendant's motion for a new trial. These assignments will be overruled. There is enough in the record before us to show, or from which it may be fairly inferred, that the questions raised by said assignments and propositions thereunder were upon pleadings and evidence in all respects substantially the same as the pleadings and evidence upon which the judgment from which the present appeal is prosecuted was rendered, decided adversely to appellant by the Court of Civil Appeals for the Third District on a former appeal of this case. M., K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Redus, 107 S. W. 63. The general rule of stare decisis, which is invoked by appellee in reply to these assignments, is stated by Mr. Wells in his work on Res Adjudicata and Stare Decisis thus: "It is a well-settled principle that questions of law decided on appeal to a court of ultimate resort must govern the case in the same court and the trial court through all subsequent stages of the proceedings, and will seldom be reconsidered or reversed even if they appear to be erroneous." In the case of Frankland v. Cassady, 62 Tex. 418, after careful consideration and a review of many of the authorities upon the subject, it was held that the rule should be applied when on the second appeal the facts are substantially the same as they were on the first, or rather when they do not materially affect the application of the law as announced; that only in exceptional cases will the Supreme Court overrule decisions previously made in the same cause on a former appeal. That the rule applies with peculiar force to the Courts of Civil Appeals of this state is affirmed by the case of M., K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Belew, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 8, 62 S. W. 99. That was a case in which the question presented had been decided against the appellant on a former appeal by the Court of Civil Appeals for the Second District, and Judge Gill of the First District on a second appeal of the case, speaking for the court, says: "Should we, after a thorough review of the authorities, reach a conclusion different from that announced on the former appeal, it would necessitate a reversal of the judgment. The trial court at the next trial would be governed by our opinion. The next appeal would be to the Court of Civil Appeals of the Second District, and that court might adhere to their first conclusion. That course would result in another reversal, and thus the case would be tossed from one court to another, and a final adjudication indefinitely postponed." That such consequences might probably follow a failure to apply the rule by the Courts of Civil Appeals of this state under our present judiciary system, and that they should be avoided cannot well be denied. We conclude that this appeal presents a proper case for the application of the rule discussed and invoked by appellee in disposing of the assignments under consideration, and that, without regard to what our conclusion might have been upon the questions involved in the assignments as original propositions, we should be governed by the decision on the former appeal. We do not, however, desire to be understood as questioning the correctness of that decision. On the contrary, we think it is clearly right. But, however that may be, we are of opinion after a careful consideration of the several assignments mentioned and the evidence as it appears on the present appeal that the court did not err in any of the rulings complained of in said assignments.

Appellant's ninth assignment of error complains of the following paragraph of the court's charge, viz.: "If, however, you believe from the evidence that the plaintiff was not directed or caused to leave the train at Royse by any train employé of the defendant, or if you believe that he was caused to leave the train by reason of the negligence, if any, of the defendant's train employés, yet if you find from the evidence that an ordinarily prudent person would have discovered that he was at Greenville before leaving said train, or his attempt to reboard said train at the time, in the manner and under the circumstances in which he did, constituted contributory negligence on his part that proximately caused or contributed to his injury, or if you believe that at the time the plaintiff attempted to reboard the moving train (if he did so attempt) he was intoxicated and was incumbered with a grip in his hand, and that this condition and manner, if you so find, in which he attempted to get aboard said train was negligence on his part, and that such negligence caused or contributed to his injury—then or in either event you should find for the defendant." The objections to this paragraph of the charge are: (1) That it is erroneous, misleading, and confusing, in that it submits to the jury whether or not under the circumstances in which appellee alighted from the train a person of ordinary care would have discovered that he was at Greenville; whereas, the question at issue was not whether such a person would have discovered that he was at Greenville, but whether or not such a person would have discovered that he was not at Greenville. (2) That it was in conflict with and contradictory of the special charge given at the request of appellant to the effect that, if the jury believed appellee was intoxicated, and that but for such intoxication he would not have alighted from the train at Royse, or that but for such intoxication he would have discovered that he was not at Greenville before alighting to find for appellant. We think it manifest from the evidence and other portions of the court's general charge and special charges given at appellant's request that the omission of the word "not" before the words "at Greenville" in this paragraph was a mere clerical error, and did not mislead the jury to appellant's injury. It is well understood that the charge of the court, which includes the general and special charges given, is to be considered as a whole and with reference to its application to the pleadings and evidence. There was no evidence to authorize the submission of the issue whether or not appellee discovered he was at Greenville. It was undisputed that he was not at Greenville when he alighted from the train, but that he was at Royse. This was the theory upon which the case was tried by both parties and upon which it was submitted to the jury, and they must have understood that the court intended to instruct them that if they believed plaintiff was caused to leave the train by reason of the negligence of defendant's employés, and that an ordinarily prudent person would have discovered that he was not at Greenville before leaving the train, to find for defendant. Special charge No. 7, given at the defendant's request, instructed the jury that if plaintiff was intoxicated, or partially intoxicated, and that but for such intoxication he would not have alighted from the train at Royse, or if he was intoxicated, or partially intoxicated, and was aroused by the auditor and told that that was his station and to get off, yet if, but for such intoxication of the plaintiff, he would have discovered that he was not at Greenville before alighting, to find for defendant.

Again, by special charge No. 18, requested by defendant, they were instructed as follows: "If you believe from the evidence that plaintiff got off the train at Royse, and that after he got off of it, if he did, that the train remained standing at the depot a time reasonably sufficient for a person of ordinary prudence after discovering that the train was not at Greenville to have reboarded the train while it was standing, and if you believe from the evidence that plaintiff was guilty of negligence in not reboarding the train before it started to move out of the station at Royse, and that such negligence caused or contributed to cause the plaintiff's injuries, you will find for the defendant." These special charges seem to bear directly on the particular phases of contributory negligence, especially, if not exclusively, relied on by appellant, and which were evidently intended to be covered by that paragraph of the general charge of which appellant complains. Hence the error in the general charge was cured by the special charge, or they so minimized such error that it is not at all probable that the jury was not misled by it. In Railway Company v. Smith, 65 Tex. 167, Judge Stayton said: "The charge must be taken as a whole in order to determine whether or not it was erroneous or misleading, and it must be construed in the light of the issues made by the pleadings and evidence." Again, in Jacobs, Bernhelm & Co. v. Hawkins, 63 Tex. 3, he says: "If we consider only detached portions of the charge given, they might be held objectionable; but a charge cannot be so considered. The whole charge must be looked to, and if, taken all together, it correctly gives the law applicable to the case, and there be nothing in it calculated to mislead, it is sufficient." In Kauffman & Runge v. Babcock, 67 Tex. 243, 2 S. W. 879, it is said: "The appellants complain that the charge of the court in one part of it authorized the jury to find exemplary damages, though there was probable cause for suing out the writ; and in another part authorized such finding, if there was no probable cause, though no malice was made to appear. The main charge taken alone may be susceptible of this construction, but the instructions given at the request of the appellants cured all errors in this respect. In these the jury was instructed, in effect, that malice and probable cause must both appear to entitle the plaintiff to a verdict for exemplary damages." We conclude there was no such error in the charge complained of or such conflict between it and the special charge given at appellant's request as would authorize a reversal of the case.

Nor do we think the verdict excessive. The plaintiff was a carpenter by trade, and, although 55 years of age at the time injured, he was healthy and strong and earning from $2.50 to $3.50 per day. His right leg was crushed and amputated, and, as a result thereof, his capacity as a carpenter was practically destroyed. He was confined to his bed four or five months, and has suffered great mental and physical pain. His life expectancy was 18½ years, and there is nothing in the record to indicate that the jury was influenced by any improper motive.

The evidence supports the verdict, and, finding no reversible error in the record, the judgment is affirmed.

On Rehearing.

In appellant's motion for a rehearing, we are asked, in effect, to correct our conclusions of fact "that shortly after leaving Dallas the conductor or auditor on the train took up the appellee's ticket and placed in his hat a white slip of paper or pasteboard used to indicate the station to which the appellee was destined," and that, "after appellee's ticket was taken up, he fell asleep, and, when the train reached Royse, one of defendant's employes on the train awakened him, and told him in effect that he had reached his destination and to get off the train," and to find definitely that it was the auditor on the train who did those things. In deference to the request, we do not hesitate to say that the testimony warrants such finding; but whether the check was placed in appellee's hat and he was aroused and the statement referred to made to him by the conductor, auditor, or some other employe of appellant assisting the operation of the train is, in our opinion, immaterial in so far as a determination of the legal questions involved are concerned.

With respect to the grounds of the motion for a rehearing, it is sufficient to state that we see no good reason to change our views as to the law applicable to the facts of the case; and said motion is overruled.

Rehearing Denied March 13, 1909.)

1. INSURANCE (§ 726*) — CONTRACTS — CONSTRUCTION.

An insurance certificate will be strictly construed against insurer and liberally in favor of insured; and, where the words thereof admit of two constructions, the one most favorable to insured will be adopted.

2. INSURANCE (§ 726*) — CONTRACTS — CONSTRUCTION.

The language of an insurance certificate must be construed according to the intent of the parties, derived from the words used, the subject-matter to which they relate, and the matters naturally incident thereto.

3. INSURANCE (§ 726*) — CONTRACTS — CONSTRUCTION.

Since forfeitures are not favored by the law, language of an insurance certificate fairly susceptible of an interpretation which will prevent a forfeiture will be so construed.

4. INSURANCE (§ 723*) — CONTRACTS — STATEMENTS IN APPLICATION — WARRANTY — "FAITH."

Statements of the applicant for insurance that he has never been intoxicated and that his deceased maternal grandmother was never insane are statements of opinion merely, and, where the applicant in good faith believes them to be true, their falsity will not vitiate the certificate warranting the truth of the applicant's answers, and stipulating that he agrees that the literal truth of each shall be a condition precedent to any contract issued on the faith of the answers; the word "faith" meaning a firm conviction of the truth of what is declared by another by way of testimony without other evidence.

Appeal from District Court, Eastland County; J. H. Calhoun, Judge.

Action by Etta E. Daniel against the Modern Woodmen of America. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

D. G. Hunt, for appellant. Stubblefield & Patterson, for appellee.

DUNKLIN, J. Etta E. Daniel sued the Modern Woodmen of America in the district court of Eastland county to collect an insurance policy in her favor for $1,000 issued upon the life of her husband, Esco L. Daniel, and, from a judgment in favor of the defendant, the plaintiff has appealed.

The defendant was chartered under the laws of the state of Illinois as a fraternal beneficiary association, and obtained a permit to do business in Texas as such a corporation. The policy sued on was made payable to plaintiff upon the death of the assured, and was issued October 25, 1905, upon an application in writing signed by Esco L. Daniel, dated October 12, 1905. The application was for membership in the defendant's order and for a life insurance policy, designated "benefit certificate," for the sum of $1,000 in favor of the applicant's wife, Etta E. Daniel. This application contained numerous questions to applicant and his answers thereto concerning his family history, his own history, health, occupation, and habits of life, and in response to two questions the applicant stated that he had never been intoxicated, and that his maternal grandmother, who died at the age of 69, was never insane. It was expressly stipulated in the application and in the policy that the two instruments should be construed together as constituting the contract of insurance, and by the terms of the application and the policy the answers of the applicant were warranted to be true. He also warranted the truth of all answers made by the physician who examined him and whose report accompanied the application. Applicant's own answers were in 35 groups, aggregating approximately 100 in number, and the answers of the medical examiner numbered approximately 50. The questions to which all these answers were given took an exceedingly wide range, embracing questions as to color of hair and eyes of the applicant and inquiries concerning almost all the ills that "flesh is heir to," taken in alphabetical order, beginning with appendicitis and ending with tumors. And by the terms of the contract applicant warranted the exact ages, as well as good health, of all the members of his immediate family, that he resembled his mother in general characteristics, also warranted the correctness of the diagnoses given of the ailments which resulted in the deaths of his paternal grandfather and both his maternal grandparents. He also warranted the exact ages of those three grandparents at the respective dates of their deaths. However, it seems that the applicant was not required to warrant the age, health, or disposition of his mother-in-law. Applicant paid to the company all dues on the policy required of him up to the date of his death, which occurred July 17, 1906.

The case was submitted to the jury upon special issues, four of which, with the jury's answers thereto, were as follows:

"Question Second. Had the assured been intoxicated prior to the time he signed the application for membership in the defendant company October 12, 1905? Answer. He had been intoxicated.

"Question Third. If the assured had been intoxicated prior to October 12, 1905, the time he signed the application for membership and benefits in the defendant company, was his answer to the effect that he had never been intoxicated a misrepresentation as to a material matter? Answer. We fail to agree, and cannot agree. * * *

"Question Sixth. Had the grandmother of Esco L. Daniel (his mother's mother) been afflicted with insanity prior to the 12th day of October, A. D. 1905, the date that the assured signed the said application for membership in the defendant company? Answer. Yes.

"Question Seventh. If the grandmother of the assured had been afflicted with insanity prior to October 12, 1906, was the answer or statement of the assured in said application then signed by him 'to the effect that she had not been so afflicted' a misrepresentation as to a material matter? Answer. We fail to agree, and cannot agree."

The jury further found that the death of the assured was not the result of the use of intoxicants, and it seems that appellee made no contention that he was ever insane, and the evidence shows that he was run over and killed by a railway train. Under these findings of the jury, the court rendered judgment in favor of the defendant, thus holding that the falsity of the statements made by the applicant that he had never been intoxicated, and that his maternal grandmother was never afflicted with insanity, were misrepresentations of facts which under the warranty clause of the contract of insurance rendered the policy void. In this ruling we think there was error which requires that the judgment should be reversed. In the case of Brown v. Palatine Ins. Co., 89 Tex. 590, 35 S. W. 1090, involving the proper construction of a fire insurance policy, Justice Brown delivering the opinion of the court said: "Since the language calls for construction to determine what the parties intended, that construction must be governed by the following familiar rules of law: First. The language, being selected and used by the insurer to express the terms and conditions upon which it issued the policy, will be strictly construed against it and liberally in favor of the insured. If the words admit of two constructions, that one will be adopted most favorable to the insured. Wood on Fire Ins. § 60; Bills v. Insurance Co., 87 Tex. 551, 29 S. W. 1063, 29 L. R. A. 706, 47 Am. St. Rep. 121; Goddard v. Insurance Co., 67 Tex. 71, 1 S. W. 906, 60 Am. Rep. 1; Insurance Co. v. Hazelwood, 75 Tex. 347, 12 S. W. 621, 7 L. R. A. 217, 16 Am. St. Rep. 893. Second. The language used must be construed according to the evident intent of the parties, to be derived from the words used, the subject-matter to which they relate, and the matters naturally or usually incident thereto. Wood on Fire Ins. §§ 182-187; Whitney v. Insurance Co., 72 N. Y. 117, 28 Am. Rep. 116. Third. Forfeitures are not favored by the law, and if the language used is fairly susceptible of an interpretation which will prevent a forfeiture, it will be so construed. 1 Wood, Fire Ins. § 181, p. 436." The statements of the applicant which the jury found to be false were not statements of facts, but of opinion merely; and, if the applicant in good faith believed them to be true, their falsity would not vitiate the policy. Insanity and drunkenness are conditions each of which is of different degrees, often difficult of ascertainment, and it is elementary that testimony to prove the existence of such conditions is that of opinion formed by the exercise of the reasoning faculties from given circumstances, and is never admissible unless the witness is an expert, or else has had an opportunity to form an opinion from observations of the person whose condition in that respect is to be ascertained. This rule of evidence is not fixed by any arbitrary standard, but has as its basis a truth sanctioned by reason and common experience that it is impossible for any one to testify to more than an opinion on such issues. The legal significance of the answers of the applicant that he had never been intoxicated, and that his maternal grandmother had never been afflicted with insanity, is not changed by the fact that those answers were not made to questions propounded in a judicial proceeding then pending; and, since they are now to be judicially interpreted, no reason is perceived why they should be given a construction different from that above stated. Supreme Ruling Fraternal Mystic Circle v. Crawford, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 603, 75 S. W. 844; 1 May on Insurance, §§ 175, 296, 297. In section 296, supra, the author uses the following language: "A 'serious illness' must be one which permanently impairs the constitution, and renders the risk more hazardous. So if the inquiry be as to the prior existence of disease having a tendency to shorten life, or rendering an assurance upon it more than usually hazardous. An honest belief in the truth of his answer is all that is required of the applicant. * * * In such cases the rule seems to be that, if the inquiry call for an answer which involves a matter of opinion, the applicant is answerable only for the honesty of his opinion, although the answer be untrue in fact. So where it was untruly stated that the party had not had rupture."

That warranty clause in the application signed by Esco L. Daniel is as follows: "I have verified each of the foregoing answers and statements from 1 to 35, both inclusive, adopt them as my own, whether written by me or not, and declare and warrant that they are full, complete, and literally true, and I agree that the exact, literal truth of each shall be a condition precedent to any binding contract issued upon the faith of the foregoing answers. I further agree that the foregoing answers and statements, together with the preceding declaration, shall form the basis of the contract between me and Modern Woodmen of America, and are offered by me as a consideration for the contract applied for, and are hereby made a part of any benefit certificate that may be issued on this application, and shall be deemed and taken as a part of such certificate; that this application may be referred to in said benefit certificate as the basis thereof, and that they shall be construed together as one entire contract; and I further agree that if any answer or statement in this application is not literally true, or if I shall fail to comply with and conform to any and all of the laws of the said Modern Woodmen of America, whether now in force or hereafter adopted, that my benefit certificate shall be void." The policy sued on, among other provisions, contains the following stipulations: "That the application for membership in this society made by the said member, a copy of which is hereto attached and made a part hereof, together with the report of the medical examiner, which is on file in the office of the head clerk, and is hereby referred to and made a part of this contract, is true in all respects, and that the literal truth of such application, and each and every part thereof, shall be held to be a strict warranty and to form the only basis of the liability of this society to such member, and to his beneficiary or beneficiaries, the same as if fully set forth in this benefit certificate. (2) That, if said application shall not be literally true in each and every part thereof, then this benefit certificate shall, as to said member, his beneficiary, or beneficiaries be absolutely null and void. (3) This certificate is issued in consideration of the warranties and agreements made by the person named in this certificate in his application to become a member of this society, and also in consideration of the payment made when adopted as a neighbor in prescribed form, and his agreement to pay all assessments, dues, and fines that may be levied during the time he shall remain a member of this society. * * * If his said application for membership, or any part of it, shall be found in any respect untrue, then this certificate shall be null and void and of no effect, and all moneys which have been paid, and all rights and benefits which may have accrued on account of this certificate, shall be absolutely forfeited and this certificate shall become null and void."

Some of the members of this court feel inclined to hold that each and all stipulations warranting the truth of the applicant's answers should be construed in connection with and controlled by the following language in the first portion of the warranty clause in the application quoted above, to wit: "And I agree that the exact, literal truth of each shall be a condition precedent to any binding contract issued upon the faith of the foregoing answers." Following is the reasoning advanced to support this position: The definition of the word "faith" found in Webster's Unabridged Dictionary is: "A firm conviction of the truth of what is declared by another by way either of testimony or authority without other evidence; belief in what another states, affirms, or testifies simply on the ground of his truth or veracity; especially (as distinguished from mere belief) practical dependence on a person, statement or thing as trustworthy." Applying this definition to the word "faith" as used in the provision of the application last quoted, the correct construction of that stipulation would be that, in order for the insurance company to defeat the policy by reason of misrepresentations contained in applicant's answers, it would be required to prove that its officers believed such answers to be true, and that such belief so formed was one of the inducements which led them to issue the policy. The case of Sovereign Camp of Woodmen of the World v. Gray, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 457, 64 S. W. 801, was a suit on a policy by the terms of which the answers of the applicant were warranted to be true, and, further, that the policy "shall be null and void and of no effect * * * if any of the statements or declarations in the application for membership and upon the faith of which this certificate was issued shall be found in any respect untrue." Delivering the opinion of the court in that case, Chief Justice Conner, in discussing the alleged falsity of a statement of the applicant and upon which payment of the policy was sought to be avoided, said: "If false, to avoid the certificate, it must be shown to be not only an answer relating to the insurance feature, but also one upon the faith of which the policy issues. The burden is certainly on the appellant to do this, and no proof to this effect is found in the record." See, also, Etna Life Ins. Co. v. Winberly (Tex. Civ. App.) 108 S. W. 783; New Orleans Ins. Co. v. Gordon, 68 Tex. 148, 3 S. W. 718; Reppond v. National Life Ins. Co., 100 Tex. 519, 101 S. W. 786, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 981. The case of Reppond v. National Life Ins. Co., cited above, was a suit by Annie Reppond to collect a policy upon the life of her husband, John T. Reppond, issued upon an application signed by the latter, containing the following terms: "The statements and agreements made by me in this application, as well as those I have made and shall make to the company's medical examiner, are hereby warranted by me to be full, complete, and true without suppression of any fact or circumstance which would tend to influence the company in issuing a policy under this application, and shall be the basis of, and as a consideration of, the contract." Having stated in response to questions propounded by the company's medical examiner that he had been afflicted with certain ailments, he was next asked to give the name and address of each physician who had treated him for those ailments, and, in reply to this question, he gave the name of one of his attending physicians, but omitted the name of another who had also treated him. The medical examiner's report of these answers was made a part of the application, and upon the application was the following: "I warrant on behalf of myself and of any person who shall have or claim any interest in any policy issued hereunder that I have carefully reviewed all answers made to the medical examiner in the foregoing examination, which answers have been written by said medical examiner at my request, and that said answers and each of them as hereinabove written are as answered by me, and that each of the above answers are fully complete and true." In delivering the opinion of the court in that case Justice Brown said: "In Assurance Company v. Munger Co., 92 Tex. 297, 49 S. W. 222, Judge Denman defines warranty in insurance policies in the following clear and explicit language: 'A warranty in an insurance contract is a statement made therein by the assured which is susceptible of no construction other than that the parties mutually intended that the policy should not be binding unless such statement be literally true.' Guided by this definition, we will analyze this contract to ascertain what the parties really intended to contract for. The phrase, 'without suppression of any fact or circumstance which would tend to influence the company in issuing a policy under this application,' applies as well to the report of the medical examiner as to the stipulation in the application, and qualifies the language in each of those instruments by which it is sought to fix the character of warranty upon the answers and agreements in each. The meaning and intent of the parties in using the language was to say that, in making the statements and agreements expressed in the application as well as those that were made to the medical examiner, Reppond undertook in good faith to answer all of the questions that were propounded to him truthfully and fully, and not intentionally to suppress any fact the statement of which would properly be called for by such questions, and that would be material to the risk, or influence the company in issuing the policy. * * * The parties must have intended to give some effect to the language, 'without suppression of any fact or circumstance which would tend to influence the company in issuing the policy under this application'; and we can see no other effect that could be given to it except that it should qualify the statements and agreements which are set forth in the application and in the medical examination." The circumstances in evidence indicate that the application signed by Esco L. Daniel was printed in blank form when presented to assured, previously prepared by appellee in terms of its own selection, and this is certainly true of the policy issued thereon. To say that proof of falsity of some of the answers of the applicant would show breach of his contract of warranty and entitle the appellee to a judgment decreeing the policy void irrespective of any other consideration would be to ignore altogether the above-quoted stipulation in the application, "and I agree that the exact, literal truth of each shall be a condition precedent to any binding contract issued upon the faith of the foregoing answers," which is wholly inconsistent with such a contention.

But, irrespective of the views last expressed, for the error in the ruling of the trial court above noted, the judgment of that court is reversed, and the cause remanded for another trial.

FT. WORTH & D. C. RY. CO. v. SUTER.
(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Feb. 27, 1909.)

1. RAILROADS (§ 113*) — DITCHES AND CULVERTS — MAINTENANCE — STATUTORY PROVISIONS — DUTY OF RAILROAD.

Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 4436, providing that in no case shall any railroad company construct a roadbed without first constructing such culverts as the lay of the land requires for proper drainage, the duty of the railroad to maintain necessary culverts is absolute and not merely to exercise ordinary care to maintain the same, and for injuries to land caused by overflow the railroad company is liable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 357; Dec. Dig. § 113.*]

2. RAILROADS (§ 114*) — DITCHES AND CULVERTS — FAILURE TO MAINTAIN — ACTION FOR DAMAGES — PLEADING — INSTRUCTIONS.

Where, in an action against a railroad company for damages from an overflow resulting from defendant's failure to maintain proper culverts, as required by Rev. St. 1895, art. 4436, the petition set up facts showing failure to comply with the statute, plaintiff's rights were not limited by the further unnecessary allegation that such failure was negligence; and hence defendant could not complain of an instruction making defendant's duty to maintain the culverts absolute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 371; Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

3. NEGLIGENCE (§ 6*) — NEGLECT OF STATUTORY DUTY.

The failure to perform a plain statutory duty resulting in injury to another is negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. § 8; Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

4. TRIAL (§ 191*) — INSTRUCTIONS — ASSUMPTION OF FACTS.

In an action against a railroad for damages from an overflow alleged to have resulted from defendant's failure to maintain proper culverts, the court charged that it is the duty of a railroad in constructing its track to maintain necessary culverts to carry the waters of all streams it may cross and the surface waters resulting from rainfall as the natural lay of the land requires, so as not to divert such waters from their natural course. Held, that read in connection with such charge a further charge that, if the jury found for plaintiff, they could not find any damages which would have resulted from water which would have flowed over plaintiff's land if the track and roadbed had been constructed and maintained in the manner stated in the first part of the charge, but only such damages as resulted from failure to maintain the necessary culverts, etc., was not on the weight of the evidence, as assuming that defendant had failed to construct and maintain such culverts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 428, 429; Dec. Dig. § 191.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1064*) — HARMLESS ERROR — INSTRUCTIONS.

Even if erroneous, defendant was not prejudiced; it being practically undisputed that the openings under the track were insufficient for the necessary drainage of plaintiff's land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4221; Dec. Dig. § 1064.*]

6. RAILROADS (§ 114*) — DITCHES AND CULVERTS—FAILURE TO MAINTAIN—ACTION FOR DAMAGES—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where, in an action against a railroad for damages from an overflow resulting from defendant's alleged failure to maintain necessary culverts in accordance with the statutory requirement, the court limited plaintiff's right to recover to damages resulting from defendant's failure to construct and maintain necessary culverts, a special charge that no damages could be allowed for overflows caused by a certain embankment was properly refused.

Appeal from District Court, Wichita County; A. A. Hughes, Special Judge.

Action by R. H. Suter against the Ft. Worth & Denver City Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Spoons, Thompson & Barwise, L. H. Mathis, and C. C. Huff, for appellant. J. T. Montgomery, for appellee.

SPEER, J. This is an appeal by the Ft. Worth & Denver City Railway Company from a judgment in favor of R. H. Suter for $1,000 as damages growing out of an overflow alleged to have resulted from a failure of the railway company to maintain proper culverts for the escape of water.

It is first urged that the court erred in the following paragraph of his charge, to wit: "It is the duty of a railway company in constructing and maintaining its roadbed and track to provide and maintain the necessary culverts and sluiceways to carry the waters of all streams which it may cross and the surface waters resulting from rainfall as the natural lay of the land requires, so as not to divert such waters from their natural course." The proposition announced is that it is the duty of a railway company to use ordinary care to maintain the necessary culverts and sluices to carry off the water of streams and surface, whereas the court imposed upon appellant the absolute duty of doing so. The charge as given appears to be fairly within the statute (article 4436, Rev. St. 1895), and is abundantly supported by the authorities. Austin & Northwestern Ry. Co. v. Anderson, 79 Tex. 427, 15 S. W. 484, 23 Am. St. Rep. 350; Clark v. Dyer, 81 Tex. 339, 16 S. W. 1061; Tex. & Pac. Ry. Co. v. Whitaker, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 571, 82 S. W. 1051; S. A. & A. P. Ry. Co. v. Gurley, 87 Tex. Civ. App. 283, 83 S. W. 842. While appellee's petition alleges that appellant's failure to construct the necessary culverts and sluiceways was negligence, it nevertheless sets forth such facts as to show that appellant has not complied with the statute cited, and his rights are not thereby limited by the further unnecessary allegation that such failure was negligence. Moreover, the failure to perform a plain statutory duty resulting in injury to another is necessarily negligence.

The third paragraph of the court's charge is next attacked as being upon the weight of the evidence. This paragraph reads as follows: "You are further instructed that, if you find for the plaintiff under the foregoing charge, you will not find for him any damages which you believe from the evidence would have resulted to plaintiff's land or crops by any water which would have flowed over or stood upon said land if the track and roadbed of the defendant had been constructed and maintained in the manner stated in the first section of this charge; but only such damages, if any, as you may find have resulted from the failure of defendant to construct and maintain the necessary culverts and sluiceways to carry off the water according to the natural lay of the land." But this charge, when read in connection with the paragraph to which it refers, cannot be said to assume that appellant had failed to construct and maintain the necessary culverts and sluiceways. But, if it did, the evidence is practically undisputed that the openings under the track were insufficient for the necessary drainage of appellee's land.

The third and only remaining assignment complains of the court's refusal to give a special charge instructing that the jury would not allow any damages for the overflows caused by a certain embankment along the north side of the public road. Appellee insists that the evidence did not raise such issue, but, whether it did or not, we think that paragraph of the charge last above quoted sufficiently limited appellee's right to recover to those damages only that resulted from appellant's failure to construct and maintain the necessary culverts and sluiceways.

We find no error in the judgment; and it is affirmed.

SUDERMAN-DOLSON CO. v. HOPE.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. March 31, 1909.)

1. TRIAL (§ 192*) — INSTRUCTIONS — ASSUMPTION OF FACTS.

The court in its charge may assume a fact established by uncontradicted evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 432; Dec. Dig. § 192.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 256*) — REQUESTS — NECESSITY.

Where a charge as to the burden of proving a contract alleged, though obscure, could not have misled the jury, if the other party desired a clearer presentation of the question, he should have asked it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 631; Dec. Dig. § 256.*]

3. WORK AND LABOR (§ 4*) — QUANTUM MERUIT.

If work was done for defendant with its knowledge and it received the benefits thereof, it would be liable for the value of the work.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Work and Labor, Cent. Dig. § 3; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

4. WORK AND LABOR (§ 22*) — ACTIONS — PLEADING—SUFFICIENCY.

Allegations that work was done at the solicitation of defendant's agent, and with its knowledge and consent, were sufficient to sustain a recovery against it on a quantum meruit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Work and Labor, Cent. Dig. § 41; Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

5. TRIAL (§ 252*)—INSTRUCTIONS—CONFORMITY TO ISSUES.

Where the petition alleged that the work was done under a contract with defendant's agent, and, in the alternative, at its solicitation and with its knowledge, and the evidence showed that defendant originally employed another contractor to do the work, but, after he had abandoned it, defendant's agent contracted with plaintiff to do the work and accepted it, the contract with the other contractor had no place in the issues submitted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 604, 606; Dec. Dig. § 252.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1068*)—HARMLESS ERROR — PREJUDICIAL EFFECT — INSTRUCTIONS.

Where the verdict was correct under the evidence, errors in instructions were not prejudicial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4225; Dec. Dig. § 1068.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1027*)—HARMLESS ERROR — PREJUDICIAL EFFECT — JUDGMENT CORRECT ON MERITS.

Where the action was for work done under a contract with defendant's agent, and in the alternative, for the value of the work done with the knowledge and consent of its agent, and the jury found for plaintiff in the terms of the contract, any errors as to the question of quantum meruit could not have been misleading.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4033; Dec. Dig. § 1027.*]

8. CONTRACTS (§ 326*) — ACTIONS — RIGHT OF ACTION.

Even if defendant was not liable under the contract for work done by plaintiff, or on the quantum meruit, it was liable for a sum which plaintiff paid to his laborers, which sum defendant's agent expressly agreed to pay.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 1549-1557; Dec. Dig. § 326.*]

Appeal from District Court, Harris County; Norman G. Kittrell, Judge.

Action by L. Hope against the Suderman-Dolson Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Hogg, Gill & Jones, for appellant. R. W. Franklin, for appellee.

FLY, J. This is a suit for $751.90, instituted by appellee against appellant, alleged to be due for work done by him and his partner in the construction of a portion of the road-bed of a railroad and in clearing up the right of way. It was alleged that the work was done under a contract made with the duly authorized agent of the company, and, in the alternative, that the work was done at the solicitation of said agent, and with his knowledge and consent. Appellant alleged that they had no contract with appellee, but that he and his partner had done the work as subcontractors under Delery & Co., with whom appellant had contracted for the work to be performed. The jury returned a verdict for appellee for $752.90, with 6 per cent. interest from January 1, 1907. The evidence developed that Delery & Co. had a contract of construction with appellant which they gave up, and appellant, through its agent, Waldo, contracted with appellee and one Epley to perform certain work on the right of way of the railway company, and the work was performed and accepted by appellant, and there was a balance due on said work of $752.90 as found by the jury, which appellant refused to pay. Appellee was the owner of the claim against appellant.

The first assignment of error complains of the charge of the court because it assumed that Delery & Co. had forsaken their contract. All of the evidence, even that of Waldo, shows that Delery quit the job, and, in the language of the charge, "gave up the contract." The court did not assume that appellant assented thereto, but the jury was informed that appellee had so alleged. In this connection it may be stated that appellant has failed to make the statement required by the rules to follow each assignment of error. There is no statement of the substance of the evidence, but a mere reference to "statement of facts, p. 21 et seq." and "statement of facts, p. 16."

The second assignment of error is overruled. The charge of which complaint is made does not assume that Waldo, appellant's agent, made a contract with Hope & Epley. The charge is quite obscure, but we cannot see how it could have misled the jury. It was an attempt to inform the jury that appellee could not recover unless he had proved the contract alleged. We think an average juror would gain that information from it. The charge in question is made clear by other portions of the instructions. If appellant desired a clearer presentation as to the burden of proof, it should have asked it.

The charge complained of in the third assignment of error is not open to the attack made upon it. If appellant entered into the contract alleged, it was liable; and if it had made the contract and repudiated it, but the work was done with the knowledge of appellant and it received the benefit, it would be liable to appellee for the value of the work. The pleadings were sufficient to sustain a recovery on a quantum meruit. The contract with Delery & Co. was not in force, and had no place in the submission of the issues. It is difficult to see how under the evidence the jury could have returned a different verdict, and, if there were errors in the charge, they could not have injured appellant. The jury found for appellee in terms on the contract, and any errors as to the question of quantum meruit could not have misled them. If appellant was not liable on a contract or a quantum meruit, it was liable under the evidence for the amount of $153.60 paid to laborers who performed the work by appellee. Waldo, appellant's agent, swore that he promised to pay that sum. That was uncontradicted, and the court did not err in assuming that the fact had been proved.

The judgment is affirmed.

HOLLAND v. WESTERN BANK & TRUST CO. et al.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. March 3, 1909. Rehearing Denied April 14, 1909.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 127*) — CONTRACTS — REMEDY OF PURCHASER — RESCISSION — AWARD OF DAMAGES.

The right to rescind a contract being equitable, if damages as well as rescission are necessary to complete justice, both will be allowed, so that, while plaintiff could either disaffirm or rescind a contract for the purchase of land induced by false representations, or affirm it and sue for the difference between the value of the land as represented and as it was, and his election to rescind would prevent him from recovering damages for such difference, it would not prevent him from recovering money expended in attempting to utilize the land before he discovered the falsity of the representations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 231; Dec. Dig. § 127.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 949*) — RES JUDICATA — PLEADING.

Where, in an action for damages for false representations inducing plaintiff to buy land, a plea in abatement alleging a prior action by plaintiff for rescission did not show that the action was prosecuted to judgment, the question of res judicata was not raised.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Dec. Dig. § 949.*]

3. PLEADING (§ 106*) — PLEA IN ABATEMENT — ANOTHER ACTION PENDING.

A plea in abatement did not present the question of the pendency of another suit on the same cause of action, where, in an action for damages for false representations in inducing plaintiff to buy land, the plea alleged a prior action by plaintiff for rescission, but did not show that it was still pending.

Appeal from District Court, Robertson County; J. C. Scott, Judge.

Action by W. W. Holland against the Western Bank & Trust Company and others. From a judgment sustaining a plea in abatement, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

W. W. Holland, Jr., and Bailey, Woods & Morehead, for appellant. Z. I. Harlan, for appellees.

KEY. J. W. W. Holland brought this suit against the Western Bank & Trust Company, Fred Flemming, and Guy M. Gibson, seeking to recover damages. He alleged in his petition that the defendants entered into a conspiracy for the purpose of cheating and swindling him, by inducing him, by means of false and fraudulent representations, to purchase certain lands in the republic of Mexico. It is not necessary to set out the details of the petition. It not only alleged that there was a material difference in the actual value of the land and its value as represented by the defendants, but it was also alleged in the petition that, relying upon the false representations therein set out, and believing the statements therein to be true, the plaintiff had incurred certain expenses in attempting to utilize the land before he discovered the falsity of the statements referred to, and such items of expenditure were sought to be recovered as special damages. The defendants interposed a plea in abatement in due form, setting forth, in substance, that in another suit the plaintiff filed a plea asking for a rescission of the contract upon the same grounds of fraud alleged in this case. The trial court sustained that plea, and Holland has appealed, and that ruling is the only question presented for decision.

The court below held that the suit for rescission constituted an election to pursue that remedy, and estopped Holland from maintaining an action for damages. It is sometimes said that, when a contract is procured by fraud, the defrauded party has his choice of two remedies, one being rescission and the other damages, and that he cannot assert both. That statement is too broad, and the restriction stated has no application, and should not be made, when both rescission and damages are necessary to make the defrauded party whole. For instance, in this case, the plaintiff had the right either to disaffirm and rescind the contract, or affirm it and sue for the difference in the value of the land as fraudulently represented and as actually existed; but he was not entitled to both those remedies, and his action for rescission cut him off from the right to maintain an action for the difference in the value of the land. But his petition went further, and alleged that, on account of the fraudulent conduct referred to, he had been induced to incur certain expenses in attempting to utilize the land. If the consideration paid by the plaintiff for the land be refunded to him, or his obligations for the purchase money be canceled, of course, it would not be fair and just to allow him damages on account of any difference in the value of the land. In that regard, and in so far as that phase of the case is concerned, cancellation will make him whole; but not so as to the special damages sought to be recovered. Restoring to him the consideration paid for the land would not restore to him the money which he alleges he expended in attempting to utilize the property. Rescission is an equitable remedy. Complete and full justice is a fundamental doctrine of equity jurisprudence, and if damages, as well as rescission, are essential to accomplish full justice, they will both be allowed. Of the cases cited by the respective attorneys in this case, Wintz v. Morrison, 17 Tex. 372, 67 Am. Dec. 658, is nearest in point, and that suit was based and sustained upon the doctrine just announced.

The plea in abatement does not show that the suit for rescission was prosecuted to final judgment, or that it is still pending, and therefore it does not present either the question of res adjudicata or the question of pendency of another suit involving the same cause of action.

Our conclusion is that, as to the special damages, the court erred in sustaining the plea in abatement; and for that error the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded.

RICE, J., did not sit in this case.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. March 27, 1909.)

1. WILLS (§ 651*)—CONDITIONS—VALIDITY—PROVISION AGAINST CONTEST.

A provision in a will that if any of testator's children, among whom he divided his property equally, should contest the will, they should forfeit any right thereunder, is valid.

2. WILLS (§ 665*)—CONDITIONS IN DEVISE—CONTEST OF WILL—EFFECT.

Testator, treating land as his separate property, devised the same equally to his children, and provided that any child contesting the will should forfeit his right under the will. Held that, testator having disposed of property belonging to the wife, a child was put to his election, and where such child contested the will on the ground that it disposed of property belonging to his deceased mother, either as separate or community property, he elected to recover as an heir of his mother, and forfeited his rights under the will.

3. PARTITION (§ 13*)—COMMUNITY INTEREST.

Error from District Court, Collin County; B. L. Jones, Judge.

Action by C. W. Massie and others against Sam J. Massie and others. There was a judgment granting relief, and defendants bring error, and plaintiffs assign cross-error. Reversed and remanded.

Abernathy & Mangum, for plaintiffs in error. C. W. Massie, for defendants in error.

RAINEY, C. J. This suit was brought by defendants in error against the plaintiffs in error to recover a certain tract of land, claiming it as the separate property of their mother, through whom they inherited, or, in the event they were mistaken in its being the separate property of their mother, then they claimed the land was the community property of their father and mother. They prayed for rents and for partition. Defendants answered by general denial, and specially that said land was paid for in part with the separate funds of their father, J. A. Massie, and that, after the death of Mary A. Massie, their father made valuable improvements on the land, and asked an accounting for same; that their father, J. A. Massie, died leaving a will in which he claimed the land as his separate property and stipulated therein that, if any one of his children should contest the same, the one so contesting should forfeit any right to said property by reason thereof; and that C. W. Massie had contested said will. C. W. Massie by supplemental petition replied that said will is unjust, unlawful, contrary to public policy, and not binding, in that he is suing for his mother's property, and said will does not attempt to cut him out of anything he inherited from his mother. The case was submitted on special issues, and, upon a verdict being returned, the court rendered a judgment decreeing the land to be community property and for partition. Both the plaintiffs in error and defendants in error ask a reversal of the case.

The plaintiffs in error assign as error the action of the court in not admitting as evidence certain records of the county and district courts relating to the probating of the will of J. A. Massie, offered by plaintiffs in error to show that C. W. Massie, one of the plaintiffs herein, contested the probating of the will. In this we are of the opinion that the court erred. The will treated the land as the separate property of the testator, J. A. Massie, and purported to dispose of all his property equally between his children, and it also provided that, if any of his children contested his said will, they should forfeit any right to any of the property so devised. This was a valid provision, and, if the said C. W. Massie contested the probating of the will in the county or district court, he forfeited all rights thereunder, and could not recover any of the property devised by virtue of said will. Besides, his contention in this suit had the effect to defeat the provisions of the will, and prevents a recovery by him of any of the property of his father, J. A. Massie, deceased. The will did not prevent him from asserting his right to the part of the land he inherited from his mother, if, in fact, she owned it, either as her separate right or an undivided one-half as community property of herself and J. A. Massie. C. W. Massie could not recover both as heir of his mother and as devisee of J. A. Massie. J. A. Massie had no right to will the property of Mary A. Massie, his deceased wife, but having done so, and placed the forfeiture clause therein, it put C. W. Massie upon his election, and, having contested the will, he elected to recover as an heir of his mother, and in this relation only can he recover.

It is charged that C. W. Massie recovered both as heir of his mother and as devisee under the will. He was not entitled to recover in both capacities, and in this respect the court erred.

The defendant in error C. W. Massie complains of the court in not finding rents for him, and rendering judgment therefor in his favor. There is no statement in the brief showing the evidence, or a synopsis thereof, sufficient to enable this court to tell wherein the error of the court below. If any, lies. Rule 31, Court Civil Appeals (31 S. W. vii). Upon the death of plaintiffs' mother they inherited her community interest subject to the homestead interest of the father, and at his death they were entitled to a partition of the land, and to have their interest set apart to them. If there are any equities that arose by reason of our community laws, the same can be adjusted upon another trial. Clift v. Clift, 72 Tex. 144, 10 S. W. 338; Rice v. Rice, 21 Tex. 66; Furrh v. Winston, 66 Tex. 521, 1 S. W. 527.

Complaint is made of the uncertainty of the judgment in failing to describe the land so that from its face the land can be identified. With the aid of the pleadings, the land mentioned in the judgment might be identified, but we think the judgment should be sufficiently specific so as to show on its face what land is intended to be partitioned.

The judgment is reversed and cause remanded.

TRESPASS TO TRY TITLE (§ 39*)—LEASES—COLLATERAL ATTACK—EVIDENCE.

Where, in trespass to try title, plaintiff asserted no claim to lands held by F. and the surveys to the latter were not involved in the suit, his title could not be collaterally attacked; and hence evidence that F. was not an actual settler and not entitled to lease the land was inadmissible to show that the land leased to him should have remained in another lease of the lands involved, and that therefore the amount remitted by the other lessee to the Commissioner of the Land Office was insufficient.

Appeal from District Court, Tom Green County; J. W. Timmins, Judge.

Action by Lon McGill against J. T. Sites. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

For opinion on former appeal, see 103 S. W. 695.

Jenkins & McCartney, for appellant. C. E. Dubois, L. H. Brightman, W. A. Threadgill, and Hill & Lee, for appellee.

FISHER, C. J. This suit was brought by the appellant against appellee and one James Castleberry on July 7, 1902, in trespass to try title to sections 3, 4, and 5, Orphan Asylum lands, in Tom Green county. January 7, 1907, appellee filed an amended answer, disclaiming title to the S. ½ of section 4 and all of section 5, and pleaded not guilty to the N. ½ of section 4 and all of section 3, and by cross-action set up title in himself to the N. ½ of section 4 and all of section 3, Orphan Asylum lands. To appellee's cross-action the appellant pleaded not guilty. Thereafter the case was dismissed as to Castleberry, and appellant took a nonsuit, leaving the case for trial on appellee's cross-action and appellant's answer thereto.

In the court below verdict and judgment were in appellee's favor. In the opinion delivered by this court on the first appeal of this case, reported in 103 S. W. 695, will be found stated the nature of the case and the principal points involved in this controversy. The disposition made of the questions in that case, together with what was said by this court in McGill v. Castleberry, 111 S. W. 662, a companion case to this, in which a writ of error was refused, disposes of all the questions raised on this appeal adversely to the contention of appellant. The evidence in the record is sufficient to show that appellee, Sites, made settlement upon the land in question, and he abandoned the same upon a well-grounded fear of death or serious bodily injury at the hands of the appellant. The evidence also establishes the fact that the lease to the Lees was in full force and effect at the time that the Commissioner of the Land Office undertook to forfeit the same for the supposed failure to pay the rentals due. We reversed the case before on the ground that the evidence was not satisfactory showing that the amount remitted by Capt. Duggan, agent of Dale, who had acquired the rights of the Lees under the lease, was sufficient to cover the entire sum of rents then due. On this trial the evidence satisfactorily shows that the Commissioner of the Land Office, prior to the time that this amount was remitted, leased two sections of the land covered by the Lees' lease to one Franklin; and, subtracting from the lease the amount due upon these two sections, the amount remitted by Duggan was sufficient to cover and fully pay the lease money due on the remaining sections included in the lease.

Appellant has an assignment of error in his brief, complaining of the action of the trial court in refusing to permit him to prove that Franklin was not the head of a family and was not an actual settler, or, in other words, not entitled to lease the land from the state at the time the lease was issued to him by the commissioner, contending that the lease was wrongfully issued to Franklin, and therefore the two sections should have remained in the Lee lease, and consequently the amount remitted by Duggan was not sufficient. We do not think there was any error in the ruling of the court upon this question. The appellant is not asserting any claim or interest in the lands so leased to Franklin, nor is he in any position to attack Franklin's title or right acquired under that lease. Those surveys are not involved in this suit. These surveys that were leased to Franklin were not included in the lease to the Lees when the transfer was made to Dale. The lands at that time were out of the lease to the Lees, and they and the state and all parties were then satisfied and contented with the disposition made of those two surveys by the Land Commissioner in leasing the same to Franklin. Franklin's title or right could not be collaterally questioned in this proceeding, and we fail to see what interest the appellant could have in the question as to whether the state was imposed upon by Franklin or not; for, as before said, the appellant is not asserting or claiming any interest in the lands held by Franklin.

It is unnecessary for us to take up in their order and dispose of each of the assignments of error presented in appellant's brief; for all the questions there raised were, as before said, disposed of by this court on the former appeal of this case and in McGill v. Castleberry. The questions of law are the same, and the facts are the same, except in the particular pointed out in this opinion.

We find no error in the record, and the judgment is affirmed.

Affirmed.

FIRST NAT. BANK OF STEPHENVILLE v. THOMAS et al.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. April 8, 1909. On Rehearing, April 24, 1909.)

1. DEPOSITIONS (§ 84*) — SUPPRESSION — GROUNDS.

Plaintiff filed interrogatories to take the deposition of a witness, and defendant filed cross-interrogatories. Subsequently a commission issued, and the answers of the witness were regularly taken, returned, and filed. Subsequently defendant filed direct interrogatories to retake the deposition of the witness, which were crossed by plaintiff, and by agreement copies of the interrogatories were waived, and the deposition taken on the originals. Subsequently the deposition was suppressed because of irregularities. Held, that it was improper to retake the deposition on the same direct and cross-interrogatories on file, whether on originals or copies, without further notice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Depositions, Cent. Dig. § 227; Dec. Dig. § 84.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1043*)—HARMLESS ERROR—SUPPRESSION OF DEPOSITION.

Where the deposition of a witness, taken on direct and cross-interrogatories, was used in evidence, the suppression of a subsequent deposition of the witness was not reversible error, in the absence of a showing that the testimony of the witness in the deposition suppressed was in any material respect different from the testimony contained in the deposition used.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1043.*]

3. EXECUTION (§ 472*) — WRONGFUL EXECUTIONS—DAMAGES.

Where corporate stock, the separate property of a wife, was sold under execution against the husband, and purchased by the judgment creditor, the damages suffered by the wife from her failure to sell the stock to a third person as she had prior to the levy contracted to do were not too remote.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. § 1403; Dec. Dig. § 472.*]

4. TRIAL (§ 191*)—INSTRUCTIONS—ASSUMING FACTS.

Where, in an action by a wife for the conversion of corporate stock owned by her, by a sale thereof under execution against her husband, the question whether the stock was the separate property of the wife was for the jury under the evidence, an instruction authorizing a verdict for the wife, on the jury finding that she had contracted to sell the stock, and would have sold the same but for the levy and sale under the execution, was erroneous for failing to require the jury to find that the stock was her separate property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 428; Dec. Dig. § 191.*]

5. TRIAL (§ 139*)—WITHDRAWAL OF QUESTION FROM JURY—WHEN AUTHORIZED.

Unless the evidence is of such a character that there is no room for ordinary minds to differ as to the conclusion to be drawn from it, the question is for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 332; Dec. Dig. § 139.*]

6. EXECUTION (§ 465*)—WRONGFUL EXECUTION—ACTION—CONDITION PRECEDENT.

Corporate stock, claimed by a wife as her separate property, stood in the name of the husband who had pledged the same to secure a note to a third person. The note was not paid, and a judgment creditor of the husband bought it and levied on the stock under the execution, and became the purchaser at the sale. Held, that the wife could sue for the conversion of the stock without paying the note or tendering the amount thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Dec. Dig. § 465.*]

7. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES (§ 159*)—CONVEYANCES TO WIFE.

A bill of sale of corporate stock by a husband to his wife, made to defraud his creditors, and not in satisfaction of a valid debt, does not pass the title to the wife if she knew of his fraudulent purpose.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Cent. Dig. § 506; Dec. Dig. § 159.*]

S. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 262*)—SEPARATE PROPERTY—BURDEN OF PROOF.

A wife whose separate property, acquired during marriage by gift, has undergone various changes, must, in a controversy as to whether the property last acquired is separate or community property, trace the property through all the changes made, and clearly show that the last-acquired property is her separate property.

Appeal from District Court, Delta County; T. D. Montrose, Judge.

Action by Pearl Warren Thomas and another against the First National Bank of Stephenville. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Martin & George and J. L. Young, for appellant. Looney & Clark and A. T. Steil, for appellees.

TALBOT, J. Appellant, First National Bank of Stephenville, held a judgment in the district court of Erath county, Tex., against R. J. Thomas of Delta county, Tex., upon which there was a balance due in the sum of $2,490.74 on the 17th day of February, 1906. On the last-named date the appellant sued out an alias execution against R. J. Thomas, and sent the same to the sheriff of Delta county, who, on the 19th day of February, 1906, levied the same upon 241 shares of stock as the property of the said R. J. Thomas of the face value of $25 per share; said shares of stock being shares in the Texas Long Distance Telephone, a private corporation, located at Cooper in Delta county. The levy was made in the statutory way by giving notice to the officers of the company. The stock stood on the books of the company in the name of R. J. Thomas. The stock was duly advertised, sold, and bought in by the appellant on the 3d day of April, 1906. Thomas gave notice at the sale that the property belonged to his wife, Pearl Warren Thomas, and on the 14th day of May, 1906, the latter, joined by her husband, the said R. J. Thomas, filed this suit against the appellant, the First National Bank of Stephenville, and the Texas Long Distance Telephone, charging a conversion of said stock, and also praying for exemplary damages. The petition charged that the stock in controversy was, on the date of the levy, the separate property of Mrs. Thomas; that notwithstanding it stood on the books of the telephone company in the name of R. J. Thomas, it was purchased with the separate property of Mrs. Thomas. It was also alleged that R. J. Thomas had, prior to the levy, absorbed Mrs. Thomas' separate property for the benefit of the community estate, and that thereafter, and before the levy, he by an instrument in writing transferred the stock in controversy to her in settlement of her claim. It was further alleged that the stock was worth in the aggregate $6,025, and as an element of special damages that R. J. Thomas, acting for his wife, had contracted and agreed to trade said stock to one S. M. Redburn for property situated in the state of Arkansas of the value of about $8,000, which trade was defeated by the levy of the execution in favor of appellant, to Mrs. Thomas' damage in the sum of $8,000. The defendant answered by plea in abatement, general and special exceptions, general denial, and specially pleaded that the alleged transfer by R. J. Thomas to Pearl Warren Thomas was in fraud of R. J. Thomas' creditors, and that the claim that it was bought with the separate property of Pearl Warren Thomas was fraudulent, that a portion of said stock never reached the possession of the defendant bank, and that the balance had been pledged by Thomas prior to the levy for borrowed money, which borrowed money Thomas had failed to pay, and that the appellant had thereafter purchased the note against Thomas, to which stock in controversy was attached as collateral security, and that Thomas had not paid the same off, and that he could not recover until this debt was discharged, or, if he could, he could only do so less the amount of the debt, and said bank further specially pleaded a purchase under its execution. The court sustained exceptions to the plea for exemplary damages, and a trial upon the other issues in the case resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of Mrs. Thomas for the sum of $2,500 against the appellant, and that she take nothing as to the Texas Long Distance Telephone. From the judgment against it appellant appealed.

Appellant's first assignment of error complains that the court erred in sustaining the plaintiffs' motion to suppress the deposition of S. M. Redburn, taken at its instance. It appears that the plaintiff first filed interrogatories to take the deposition of this witness, which were crossed by the defendant, and thereafter a commission issued, and the answers of said witness were regularly taken to both the direct and cross-interrogatories, and returned and filed in the case. After this the defendant filed direct interrogatories to retake the deposition of the witness, which were crossed by the plaintiff, and by agreement of the parties copies of said interrogatories were waived, and the deposition taken on the originals. This deposition, on January 13, 1906, and during a regular term of the court, was suppressed, upon motion of plaintiff, because of irregularities which are not shown. Upon the suppression of this deposition the cause was continued at the request of defendant, in order that it might again take the deposition of the witness Redburn. On the 22d day of January, 1908, counsel for defendant asked for, and obtained from the court, the attorney for plaintiffs not being present, an order to retake the deposition which had been suppressed on the 13th day of that month. The next day, January 23d, counsel for plaintiffs, ascertaining that an order had been made by the court granting the defendant leave to retake said deposition, moved the court to rescind said order, which was done, the court at the same time stating to counsel that he was of opinion that, if the defendant desired to retake the deposition of the witness Redburn, he should propound other interrogatories to said witness, and serve notice thereof upon the plaintiff. In reply to this statement of the court counsel for defendant remarked that he did not so understand the law, and that he proposed to take out a commission and have the answers of the witness retaken upon the original direct and cross-interrogatories on file, without further notice to plaintiff. This he proceeded to do, and at the succeeding term of the court, when the case was called for trial, upon motion of plaintiff the deposition was again suppressed, because taken on the said original direct and cross-interrogatories, and because notice thereof had not been served upon plaintiff.

In support of appellant's contention that he had the right to retake the deposition of the witness in the manner stated, and that the court erred in quashing said deposition, we are cited to the case of Boone v. Miller, 73 Tex. 557, 11 S. W. 551. In that case the deposition of the witness was first taken by agreement, as in this case, upon the original direct and cross-interrogatories without copies. After being returned and filed in court, counsel for the plaintiff observed that the certificate of the officer who took the deposition was defective, and, without waiting to see whether or not such defect would be waived by the opposite party, detached the original interrogatories from the answers, and under a second commission had the deposition retaken and filed. The defendant moved to suppress the deposition last taken upon grounds similar to those urged by the plaintiff to suppress the deposition in the present case. The motion was overruled, and the ruling of the court assigned as error. In passing upon the question the Supreme Court said: "When the deposition of a witness has been defectively taken and is liable to be suppressed, it is proper for any party having an interest in it to proceed to have it retaken, without delaying to see whether the objection will be waived. We do not think it is a correct practice to withdraw and use a filed paper for that purpose, and it would have been in this instance proper to have used certified copies, instead of the original papers, but we do not think that irregularity affected the admissibility of the deposition; nor do we think that the detaching of the interrogatories from the deposition, and attaching them to another deposition in the same case, prevented the second deposition from being properly read to the jury in connection with the interrogatories." We think the cases are distinguishable. In the case cited the deposition had not been suppressed, but the second commission was issued, and the original direct and cross-interrogatories were used in retaking the deposition, in anticipation of a motion to suppress because of the defective certificate of the officer thereto, whilst in the case at bar the second commission was taken out, and the original direct and cross-interrogatories, upon which the first deposition had been taken, detached and used in retaking the deposition of the witness, after the first deposition had been quashed, and in spite of the court's ruling that said interrogatories, which were filed papers in the case, and subject to the absolute control of the court, could not be withdrawn and used for that purpose; that if defendant desired to retake the deposition of the witness, he should propound new interrogatories, and serve notice on plaintiff, as in the first instance. Under these circumstances we are not prepared to say the court erred in quashing the deposition. In the case of Boone v. Miller, supra, it did not appear, as it does in this case, that the trial court had forbidden the withdrawal of the interrogatories to retake the deposition; and, while it was there held that the mere withdrawal and use of the interrogatories was not such an irregularity as to affect the admissibility of the deposition, yet the practice of so withdrawing and using a filed paper was condemned. We are unwilling to go beyond the scope of that decision, and believe we would do so were we to hold the court's action in suppressing the deposition under the facts of this case reversible error. Moreover, we are of the opinion that, when these depositions were quashed, the interrogatories became functus officio, and the agreement of counsel that said deposition might be taken, in the first instance, without the service of the statutory notice no longer binding.

In this view of the law we are sustained by the case of Foster v. Smith, 2 Cold. (Tenn.) 474, 88 Am. Dec. 604. In that case, under a statute which seems to be substantially the same as our statute upon the subject, it is said: "When the deposition of the witness has been once taken upon such interrogatories, all the efficacy of such interrogatories and notice in giving the party the right to take the deposition is exhausted; and the party has no right to retake the deposition, for any cause, without refiling the original, or filing additional, interrogatories, and giving the opposite party the notice, as required by the section of the Code before referred to, and therefore the exception should have been sustained." But again the record shows that the deposition of the witness Redburn had been previously taken upon direct and cross-interrogatories, and used in evidence on the trial of the case, and the bill of exception reserved to the court's ruling suppressing the deposition in question does not show the testimony of said witness in the two depositions to be materially different. If the testimony of the witness as contained in the deposition quashed was in any material respect different from, and more favorable to, appellant than that contained in the deposition used on the trial, such difference should have been pointed out by the bill of exception. This the bill fails to do. Now the admissibility of a second deposition of the same witness is within the discretion of the trial court; and, unless an abuse of such discretion, resulting in material injury, is shown, its refusal will not be reviewed on appeal. White v. Railway Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 46 S. W. 382.

Appellant's eighth assignment complains of the court's action in overruling its special exception to that portion of plaintiff's petition alleging, as an element of special damage, that she through her agent had contracted and agreed to trade the stock in controversy to S. M. Redburn for certain property situated in the state of Arkansas, which trade was defeated by the levy of the defendant's execution, to her damage $8,000. The contention is that the allegations show a claim for damages too remote, uncertain, and speculative to constitute the basis of a suit or a legal ground of recovery. In this contention we do not concur. According to the allegations of the petition the special damages claimed were too remote. They appear to be the direct result of the wrongful act alleged, and the demurrer was properly overruled.

The court instructed the jury as follows: "In this case, if you believe from the evidence that the property in controversy was purchased with the separate property, or the proceeds of the separate property, of Pearl Warren Thomas acquired by gift from her mother, or if you believe from the evidence that the husband of Pearl Warren Thomas, in consideration of money due her by him by reason of using her separate property, conveyed and transferred to her the property in controversy, and that the defendant, after having been notified of the fact that the same had been transferred or was her separate property, sold the same under execution, in the mode and manner as set up in the pleadings in this cause, and converted the same to its own use, or if you believe from the evidence that at the time said sale was made the said Pearl Warren Thomas, as alleged, had contracted and agreed to sell said property, and would have sold same, as set forth in her petition, for the hotel in Arkansas, and if you further believe from the evidence defendant bank knew of the pendency of said trade at the time said levy and sale under execution was made, and you further believe from the evidence that, by reason of said levy and sale, plaintiff could not sell said property, and defendant bank converted same to its own use, then you will find for plaintiff. Unless you so find, you will find for the defendant." The second clause of this charge, by which it was sought to specifically submit to the jury the issue arising upon plaintiff's allegations of special damage, is objected to, on the ground that it authorized a verdict in favor of the plaintiff Mrs. Thomas if the jury believed she had contracted and agreed to trade the telephone stock involved in this suit for the hotel property situated in the state of Arkansas, regardless of whether or not said stock was her separate property. The objection is well taken. It will be observed at a glance that the clauses of the charge quoted present two distinct grounds of recovery. In the first clause a verdict in favor of Mrs. Thomas is authorized if the jury believed the telephone stock was her separate property, and the defendant knew that fact and converted the same to its own use. In the second clause a verdict in favor of Mrs. Thomas was authorized in the event the jury believed she had, at the time of the sale of the stock under the defendant's execution, contracted and agreed to sell said stock, and would have sold the same, as set forth in her petition, for the hotel in Arkansas but for the levy and sale of said stock under said execution, etc. In this clause of the charge the jury was not required to find that the stock was Mrs. Thomas' separate property. This was error. In no event, under the pleadings and evidence, was Mrs. Thomas entitled to recover, unless the telephone stock was her separate property. But it is insisted by appellee that the evidence shows beyond controversy that said stock was the separate property of Mrs. Thomas, and that the court would have been justified in directly instructing the jury to that effect. Therefore the error pointed out in the clause of the charge under consideration is immaterial. In this view we do not concur. We do not think the evidence was of such a conclusive character as that the court would have been warranted in holding, as a matter of law, that the said stock was in fact the separate property of Mrs. Thomas, and not the community property of herself and husband. To have authorized a withdrawal of the question from the jury the evidence must have conclusively established her separate and individual ownership of the stock. It has been repeatedly held that, unless the evidence is of such a character that there is no room for ordinary minds to differ as to the conclusion to be drawn from it, the questions involved must be submitted to the jury for their determination. Without detailing them we are of the opinion that the facts and circumstances in evidence, bearing upon the question as to whether or not the telephone stock involved in this controversy was the separate property of Mrs. Thomas, required the submission of that issue to the jury. Lee v. Railway Co., 89 Tex. 588, 36 S. W. 63; Mynning v. Railway Co., 64 Mich. 93, 31 N. W. 147, 8 Am. St. Rep. 804.

It is assigned that the court erred in refusing to instruct the jury, at the defendant's request, that the plaintiff could not recover because she had not paid, or tendered into court, the amount of the note for which the telephone stock, sold and appropriated by defendant, was pledged to secure. There was no error in this action of the court. The special charges requested and refused would have instructed the jury, in effect, to find for defendant on the whole case because no payment, or tender of money to pay the secured note, had been made. This, in our opinion, was not the law of the case. No complaint is made to the effect that the jury were instructed that in the event they found for plaintiff they should allow and deduct, from whatever amount awarded her, the amount of said note. The special charges were equivalent to peremptory instructions to find for defendant because of the failure on plaintiff's part to pay, or tender payment of, the note secured by the stock and held by defendant. Whether or not the defendant was entitled to have the amount of said note set off against any judgment rendered against it under the facts is a question we are not now called upon to decide; but, however that may be, it was not essential to plaintiff's recovery that she pay said note, or tender in advance the amount thereof.

We are also of the opinion the court erred in refusing to give the defendant's special charge No. 5, to the effect that the bill of sale executed by R. J. Thomas to his wife in September, 1904, upon its face was legally sufficient to pass the title to the telephone stock to her, but that, if such bill of sale was made fraudulently, for the purpose of hindering and delaying the defendant bank in the collection of its debt, and that such fraudulent purpose was known to the plaintiff Mrs. Thomas at the time of such transfer, and was not made in satisfaction of a valid and subsisting debt, said bill of sale would not pass the title to said stock to Mrs. Thomas. We think the evidence called for the giving of this charge.

In addition to its special charge No. 5, above referred to, defendant requested several special charges giving our statutory definition of separate and community property, and in different forms attempting to present the rule requiring the wife, when her separate property, acquired during marriage by gift, has undergone various changes and mutations, and a controversy arises as to whether the property last acquired was separate or community property, to trace through all the changes made, and clearly show that such last-acquired property was her separate property. It is probable that none of these charges are entirely free from criticism, and that their refusal would not require a reversal of the case; but, in view of another trial, we take occasion to say that we think the evidence was of such a character as to require, in the event of a request thereof, the giving of an appropriate instruction upon this feature of the case.

On all questions of law presented in the briefs, except as otherwise indicated in this opinion, we rule against appellant upon them.

For the errors pointed out, the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded.

On Rehearing.

It is insisted in this motion that we were in error in stating in our original opinion, in the discussion of the assignment attacking the trial court's action in quashing the deposition of the witness Redburn, that counsel for the defendant, in reply to the remarks of the court that he was of opinion that, if defendant desired to retake the deposition of said witness, he should propound other interrogatories to him, and serve notice thereof upon the plaintiff, stated that he did not so understand the law, and that he proposed to have the answers of the witness retaken upon the original direct and cross-interrogatories on file, without further notice, and that he proceeded to do so; that as a matter of fact the deposition of said witness was retaken on copies of said original direct and cross-interrogatories. The bill of exception reserved to the court's action, in suppressing the deposition is very long, and probably contradictory on this point. It contains a copy of the plaintiff's motion to quash said deposition, in which motion it is stated that the deposition was retaken upon copies of the original direct and cross-interrogatories, but the bill further recites that "counsel for defendant stated that he did not understand that the law required him to propound other or new interrogatories to said witness, but that in his view of the law he had the right to take out a commission upon the interrogatories, direct and cross, which were already on file, * * * and that he proposed to take out said commission on said direct and cross-interrogatories to retake said witness' deposition." The bill of exceptions further recites that "thereafter, on the 29th day of January, 1908, counsel for the defendant applied to the clerk of the court in which this cause was then pending for a new commission to take the deposition of said Redburn upon the direct and cross-interrogatories, a copy of which is herein set out, and said commission was duly issued on said date with said direct and cross-interrogatories attached." (Italics ours). But, conceding that the deposition of the witness was retaken upon copies of the original direct and cross-interrogatories on file, we see no good reason, because of that fact, to change the views heretofore expressed in reference to the law upon the question involved. Whether the deposition was retaken upon the original direct and cross-interrogatories or copies, we think the case is distinguishable on the other facts from the case of Boone v. Miller, 73 Tex. 537, 11 S. W. 551, and that there was no reversible error in quashing the deposition.

The motion for rehearing is overruled.

POWELL.†

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. March 17, 1909. Rehearing Denied April 14, 1909.)

1. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 67*) —
NONDELIVERY OF MESSAGES—DAMAGES.

A message requesting the sendee to meet the sender and his wife at a station was notice to the telegraph company that the purpose of the message was to have the father of plaintiff's wife meet the sender and wife at the station, and that the wife was ill. It also knew that it was stormy. It failed to deliver the message, requiring the sender to hire a livery to take his wife to her father's home. Held, that the company was liable for the injuries sustained by the sender and his wife from the inclement weather as the proximate result of the failure to deliver the message.

2. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 65*) —
NONDELIVERY OF MESSAGE—ACTION—PETITION—EVIDENCE.

Where the petition in an action for the nondelivery of a message, requesting the sendee to meet sender and his wife at a station, alleged that the company's agent was informed that the sender and his wife were on their way to the home of the sendee, who was the father of the wife; that the wife was sick; that it was desired that the sendee should meet them at the station with a conveyance, etc.—it was competent to show that the sendee knew from a letter received from the sender's wife that she had been sick, and that he was expecting a message notifying him to meet the sender and his wife, and that, had he received the message, he would have met them with a suitable conveyance.

Appeal from District Court, Robertson County; J. O. Scott, Judge.

Action by J. G. Powell against the Western Union Telegraph Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

L. A. Hill, Geo. H. Fearons, and N. L. Lindsley, for appellant. Bailey, Woods & Morehead, for appellee.

RICE, J. This is a suit by appellee against appellant for the recovery of damages arising from a failure to transmit and deliver the following telegram: "Hempstead, Texas, Nov. 18, 1906. F. B. Long, Bremond, Texas. Meet us at 3:30 p. m. Ollie very sick. J. G. Powell." It was alleged: That plaintiff paid the customary toll thereon, informing the agent that the said Long was then living in the town of Bremond, and that he and his wife, who was sick, were then on their way to Bremond, and that he desired said Long to meet both himself and wife at the depot with a conveyance to take them to his home. That about a month before that time his wife had undergone a serious operation, from which she was convalescing, and that on the morning of November 18th, the weather being pleasant, he started with his wife from Houston, where he then resided, via the Houston & Texas Central Railway to Bremond, Tex., to visit her parents, said Long being her father. That, before reaching Hempstead, the weather turned cold, a wet norther having set in, which caused the sending of said telegram. That, after the delivery of said telegram to appellant's agent at Hempstead, plaintiff and wife continued their journey to Bremond, where they arrived the same afternoon, at which time it was very cold and raining. That after waiting a reasonable length of time at the station, expecting Mr. Long to come for them, he asked the agent if his telegram had been delivered to said Long, and was informed by him that no such telegram had been received, whereupon he went out through the rain to a livery stable, a distance of some 200 yards away, to procure a conveyance for himself and wife, but, finding no one at the stable, returned to the depot, after which he made a second trip to the stable, and finally obtained a conveyance with which he took his wife to the residence of her father, some quarter of a mile distant from the depot. That more than an hour elapsed from their arrival at the depot until they reached the residence of said Long. That, by reason of the failure of the defendant to transmit and deliver said message, the said Long failed to meet them, whereby plaintiff himself, in the effort to secure a conveyance, became wet on account of the exposure to the rain then falling, and that his wife was compelled to remain in the waiting room during the interim, she being weak from her recent severe illness, and that while waiting in said depot she became very cold and fatigued from having to sit up in said room, there being no place where she could lie down, and that, on account of the exposure, she became wet, contracted a severe cold, and la grippe, and again suffered pain from the parts affected by the operation she had recently undergone, and from all of which she was made sick and confined to her room for several weeks, to plaintiff's damage $750. Plaintiff further alleged that while out searching for said conveyance he became wet and chilled from said exposure, contracted a severe cold, which developed into la grippe and rheumatism, and for a month thereafter was confined to his bed, suffering intensely therefrom, and has ever since continually suffered, to his damage in the sum of $800. It is alleged that he was a physician, capable of earning and was earning the sum of $200 per month, and that because of said injuries he lost two months' time, to his further damage in the sum of $400; that during the sickness of himself and wife he was compelled to expend the further sum of $49.50 for medicines, for all of which sums, together with 25 cents paid for said message, plaintiff sued. The defendant answered by exceptions, general denial, and specially that said Long resided in the country about 10 miles from Bremond, and had so resided for many years, and that said fact was well known, and that, if said Long then resided in Bremond, he had recently removed there, and the fact of his removal was not known or if known was only known to a very few people in the town of Bremond, and likewise pleaded its rules and regulations concerning delivery of messages, beyond one-half mile limits of its office; further, that, on the arrival of said message, inquiry was made and answer given that Long lived 10 miles in the country, and thereupon its operator sent a service message to its Hempstead office, notifying it that said message was undelivered, as said Long lived in the country. Defendant further answered that plaintiff's telegram by its language did not put defendant upon notice that plaintiff or "Ollie" were traveling upon a railroad train, or on what railroad they were traveling, and that no such damages as alleged by plaintiff were in contemplation of the parties at the time of making said contract. Defendant also pleaded that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in not going to a nearby hotel, and in failing to inform its agent of the fact that he wanted a buggy, who, if he had done so, would have procured one for him; and, further, that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in voluntarily going out in the rain and exposing himself in an effort to secure a buggy. There was a jury trial, resulting in a verdict and judgment for the plaintiff for the sum of $750, from which this appeal is prosecuted. The facts proven, as shown by the record, sustain the averments of the petition.

Appellant's first, second, third, fourth, and fifth assignments of error are predicated upon the supposed error of the court in giving the following charge to the jury, to wit: "You are further instructed that if you believe from a preponderance of the testimony that plaintiff delivered to defendant's agent at Hempstead, Tex., on or about the date alleged in the petition, a telegram in terms substantially as alleged in his petition, and you further believe that at the time of such delivery to said agent at Hempstead plaintiff advised and informed said agent that the purpose of such telegram was to have the said Long to meet himself, as well as his wife, at the depot in Bremond, Tex., and you further believe that said defendant failed to use ordinary care in the transmission and delivery of said telegram, and that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence, as those terms are hereinbefore defined to you, and you further believe that the injuries or damages complained of by plaintiff, if any, were the proximate result of the negligence of defendant, if any, you will find for the plaintiff, and assess his damages in such sum as if paid now will reasonably compensate him for the physical suffering of himself and wife, if any you believe they suffered because of the failure to transmit and deliver said telegram, for such loss of time, if any, as you believe plaintiff sustained by reason thereof, for such expense, if any, for medicines for himself and wife by reason of such failure, if failure you believe there was, and for the sum of 25 cents paid for such telegram, but in this connection you are charged to exclude all other elements of damages from your consideration than those hereinabove enumerated, and also limiting your consideration of damages or injuries, if any, to those which you believe from the evidence to have resulted proximately from the defendant's negligence, if you believe it was negligent, as submitted in this charge. You are also instructed that unless you believe from a preponderance of the testimony that plaintiff advised and informed defendant's agent at Hempstead that the purpose of said telegram was to have said Long meet himself, as well as his wife, Ollie, at Bremond, you will not consider any injuries you may believe he suffered or sustained by reason of his own physical or mental suffering, or loss of time or expenses for medicine for himself, if any, but you will only consider such injuries or suffering, if any, of his wife, and such money, if any, expended for medicine for his wife, which was the proximate result of the negligence, if any, of defendant in the transmission and delivery of said telegram, and the price paid for said telegram." Appellant assails this charge so far as it authorizes a recovery on the part of plaintiff himself for injuries suffered by him, because it contends that no notice was given to it, either in the telegram or otherwise, that any such damage as sued for would result to plaintiff from a breach of said contract; nor that such damages as named in said charge were in contemplation of the parties at the time of the making of said contract. The telegram itself shows that Long was requested to "meet us," evidently meaning both plaintiff and his wife. Plaintiff testified that he sent the telegram from Hempstead, and at the time he handed same to the operator he asked him if he could get the message through immediately, telling him that his wife was sick, and that he wanted her father to meet her at the train, to which he replied that "he could get it through." "That I said in the message meet us, myself and wife. I think my statement was to meet us at the train at 3:30 that evening." It was shown that the weather was pleasant when they left Houston, and that it got cold and began to rain before reaching Hempstead. From this it clearly appears that the company at the time of the receipt of the message understood both from the message itself, as well as from the statement of the plaintiff, that the purpose of sending it was to have said Long, the father of plaintiff's wife, to meet them at the depot. The operator was informed that his wife at that time was sick, and it further appears from the testimony of the operator that he understood that Powell was accompanying his wife on the train, which would reach Bremond at 3:30 that afternoon.

Appellant, it seems to us, is liable for such damages as might reasonably have been anticipated would have resulted from a failure of plaintiff's father to meet them at the train. It had notice of the fact that it was then cold and raining, and that plaintiff's wife was sick. Certainly it was within the contemplation of the parties to the contract that in the event of a failure to transmit and deliver the telegram plaintiff would undertake to do what any reasonable man would do under the same or similar circumstances; that is, to go to the livery stable for the purpose of obtaining a conveyance to take his wife to her father's home. He could not remain in the depot with his sick wife, and, if in taking her to her father's home he and she suffered injuries from the inclement weather then prevailing, the same were such damages as could be recovered, because they were the proximate result of such failure of duty on the part of defendant. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Campbell, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 276, 81 S. W. 580; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Karr, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 60, 24 S. W. 302; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pruett (Tex. Civ. App.) 35 S. W. 78. See, also, 27 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law (2d Ed.) p. 1059. The charge complained of was, we think, a clear and pertinent application of the law to the facts of the case, and directly instructed the jury that plaintiff himself could recover nothing for his individual injuries unless it was shown that defendant's agent was informed by him that the purpose of the telegram was to have said Long meet himself as well as his wife. We therefore overrule these assignments.

We overrule the sixth and seventh assignments, because we think that under the allegations of the petition it was competent to show that Long knew from a letter received from his daughter that she had been sick, and was expecting a telegram notifying him to meet plaintiff and his wife, and that, had he received said telegram, he would have known on which train to have met them, and that he would have met them with a suitable conveyance, and have brought sufficient wraps for their comfort.

By its eighth and ninth assignments appellant urges that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in failing to advise its agent upon his arrival at Bremond that it was necessary for him to obtain a conveyance, urging that, if he had done so, said agent would have caused its porter to procure a conveyance to take his wife to her father's, and also urging that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in failing to take his wife to the Cottage Hotel, near by the depot, where he could have gotten some one to go for such conveyance, thereby preventing the injuries complained of. The court in this connection gave the following charge: "If you believe from the evidence that plaintiff went out in the rain and exposed himself to the weather after reaching Bremond, and procured a buggy and drove with his wife to the house of said Long, and you further believe that such conduct or any other conduct on the part of plaintiff caused or contributed to cause his own or his wife's sickness and suffering, as alleged in his petition, and you further believe that such conduct on the part of plaintiff was a failure on his part to use ordinary care, as that term has been hereinbefore defined to you, you will find for defendant as to all damages claimed for injuries and suffering of either himself or wife, and all moneys expended for medicines for either himself or wife, and for loss of time, although you may believe defendant was guilty of negligence in the transmission and delivery of said telegram." The question of contributory negligence is one of fact, and not of law, and we think was fully submitted to the jury by the above charge, and this issue was determined by their verdict against appellant. We therefore overrule these assignments.

The remaining assignments relate to questions that have been previously discussed and determined adversely to appellant, for which reason we deem it unnecessary to further consider them.

Finding no reversible error in the record, the judgment of the court below is affirmed. Affirmed.

BRANT v. LANE et al.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Jan. 30, 1900. Rehearing Denied March 13, 1900.)

1. CHATTEL MORTGAGES (§ 261*)—FORECLOSURE SALE—PRESENCE OF PROPERTY—NECESSITY.

Where the owner of property gave a trust deed thereon to secure payment of notes with power in a trustee to foreclose by sale, the mere fact that the property when sold by the trustee was in the possession of a sheriff did not prevent a passing of the general title remaining in the owner to the purchaser where delivery was not a condition precedent to the sale, and the lien of the trust deed was merged in the sale; the purchaser taking subject to the sheriff's right of possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Obattel Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 537; Dec. Dig. § 261.*]

2. VENUE (§ 26*)—NONRESIDENTS.

Where plaintiff sued the maker on a note and to foreclose a trust deed on property given to secure it, joining as defendants the residents of another county, one of whom had bought the property at a sheriff's sale, and the other who had bought it of the purchaser and held it in the county of his residence, alleging their conversion of the property, and it appeared that plaintiff's lien had been foreclosed by sale of the property under the trust deed, the nonresidents were improperly joined; plaintiff's action against them, if any, being triable in the court having jurisdiction of the property and of their persons.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Dec. Dig. § 26.*]

3. JUDGMENT (§ 118*)—BY DEFAULT—RELIEF TO DEFENDANT.

Upon suit on a note and for foreclosure of a trust deed given to secure it, resulting in judgment by default against one defendant, who was the maker of the note and trust deed, plaintiff was entitled as against that defendant to the full amount of the debt claimed on the note and to foreclosure of the trust deed as prayed, and, though it appeared that the lien had been foreclosed and the property sold for a certain amount, it was error to grant a credit for the proceeds of the sale in favor of the defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 234; Dec. Dig. § 118.*]

4. VENUE (§ 32*)—CHANGE OF VENUE—DUTY TO TRANSFER CAUSE.

Where a person had bought property alleged to be worth $250, and subject to the lien of a trust deed at a sheriff's sale, and had sold it to another, who had taken it to his residence in another county, and they were sued by the lienor for conversion, in the wrong county, upon sustaining their pleas of privilege to be sued in another county, the court should have transferred the cause as against them to the county court of the county where the property was taken under Gen. Laws 1907, p. 248, c. 133, providing that, upon sustaining such a plea, the court shall order the venue to be changed to the proper court of the county having jurisdiction of the parties and the cause.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Dec. Dig. § 32.*]

Error from Jack County Court; Sh Stark, Judge.

Action by D. C. Brant against J. T. Lane and others. From the judgment, plaintiff brings error. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Sporer & McClure, for plaintiff in error.
Nicholson & Fitzgerald, for defendants in error.

CONNER, C. J. Plaintiff in error instituted this suit against J. T. Lane upon a promissory note for $350 and to foreclose a lien, evidenced by a trust deed which had been duly recorded in Jack county, upon two mules, in which it was alleged defendants in error Webb and Rhoades were asserting some kind of right. Webb, among other things, answered that the plaintiff's lien had been foreclosed by a sale of the mules to plaintiff by virtue of the power given in the trust deed; that the sole purpose of the assertion of the lien was to improperly give the county court of Jack county jurisdiction over his person; that he, Webb, had bought the mules at a sale by the sheriff of Parker county, in whose possession the mules were at the time of plaintiff's said purchase by virtue of process against J. T. Lane, and he, Webb, pleaded to the jurisdiction of the court over his person and asserted his privilege of being sued in Parker county, where he resided. Defendant Rhoades answered substantially as Webb, and, further, that he had purchased the mules from Webb after the sheriff's sale, and urged his privilege of being sued in Hardeman county, where he resided. The trial was before the court without a jury, and judgment was rendered in plaintiff's favor against J. T. Lane, who made default, for the amount sued for, less the sum of $150, the amount of plaintiff's bid at the sale and purchase under the trust deed, and in favor of Webb and Rhoades on their pleas of jurisdiction and of privilege.

There is no statement of facts, but we quote the court's findings, which are as follows:

"(1) I find that at the date of the institution of this suit, and also at this time, J. W. Webb was a resident citizen of Parker county, Tex., and that Mathie D. Rhoades is now a resident citizen of Hardeman county, Tex., and was at the date of this suit a resident citizen of Parker county, Tex.

"(2) I find that on February 5, 1907, J. T. Lane executed and delivered to plaintiff, D. C. Brant, his promissory note for $350, drawing interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum from date until paid, said note being due on or before November 1, 1907, and at the same time, in order to secure payment of said above note, J. T. Lane made and executed to D. C. Brant a chattel mortgage on the following property: One pair of work mules, one of which was a black horse mule 9 or 10 years old and about 15 hands high, and the other a bay mare mule about 8 years old and 15 hands high, also one two horse wagon and set of harness, one gray pony mare and a one-fourth interest in crop of cotton grown on the K. E. Moore farm, all of said property being situated in Jack county, Tex.—that said mortgage empowered trustee, at request of D. C. Brant, to sell and foreclose lien out of court by duly and legally advertising according to law; that said mortgage was duly filed for registration in Jack county, Tex., on March 21, 1907.

"(3) I find that on the 18th day of November, A. D. 1907, after due and legal notice had been given, plaintiff foreclosed the above-described chattel mortgage out of court according to terms of same, and caused to be sold by the trustee named in said chattel mortgage by and with the consent of the said J. T. Lane all of the property mentioned and described in said mortgage at the courthouse door in Jacksboro, Jack county, Tex., to the highest and best bidder, and that plaintiff became the purchaser of all of said property at said sale; that all the property except the field of cotton and the mules were present at said sale; that the cotton was ungathered and in the field near Giltown, Jack county, Tex., and at the time of sale said mules were in Parker county, in the possession of the sheriff of the last-named county, and all of which was well known to plaintiff, D. C. Brant, at the time of sale, said possession of sheriff being without consent of D. C. Brant.

"(4) I find that on the 18th day of November, 1907, the note in suit was credited with the proceeds of the foreclosure sale, except the amount for which said mules were sold; that same was as follows: Wagon and harness, $39; gray pony, $27; cotton, $30; cotton, $24—that plaintiff D. C. Brant took possession of all property, except the mules aforesaid.

"(5) I find that said mules were sold to plaintiff, D. C. Brant, at same time the other property mentioned in said mortgage was sold, and in the same way, and the price paid therefor was $150, and that said mules were worth on the market $200.

"(6) I find that after the foreclosure sale of said property in Jack county, Tex., as aforesaid, the said J. W. Webb purchased said mules at Weatherford, in Parker county, Tex., at a sale by the sheriff of said county, Tex., for the sum of $160; that the said J. W. Webb afterwards in said county sold said mules to Mathie D. Rhoades; that said Mathie D. Rhoades carried same to his home in Hardeman county, Tex.

"Conclusions of Law.

"(1) I find that the foreclosure sale under the chattel mortgage in Jack county, Tex., was a legal sale, and that in the purchase of all property at said sale, including the mules, the plaintiff, D. C. Brant, became the owner of said property by reason thereof.

"(2) I find that J. T. Lane should have credit on the note in suit of $150, the purchase price of said mules; that the said J. T. Lane is still indebted to plaintiff, D. C. Brant, in the sum of $112.25, balance after sale of all property mentioned in said mortgage; and that this amount the plaintiff, D. C. Brant, is entitled to his judgment for same against the said Lane alone.

"(3) I find that defendants J. W. Webb and Mathie D. Rhoades are not proper parties and are improperly joined in this suit, and that this court has no jurisdiction over their persons."

The first assignment of error is as follows: "The court erred in holding that the sale of the said mules under said chattel mortgage was a valid sale, and that the plaintiff in error became the owner of said mules by reason of said foreclosure." Under this plaintiff in error makes the following proposition: "As said property was not present at the time of said sale by the trustee under said chattel mortgage, the sale was invalid, and no title passed to the plaintiff by reason of said sale." The court's findings show that the mules were in possession of the sheriff of Parker county at the time plaintiff purchased them under the trust deed, and this is the sole fact relied upon in support of the above assignment and proposition. But we do not think this alone shows the invalidity of the sale under the trust deed. Plaintiff in error cites the case of Fulghum v. Williams Co., 114 Ga. 643, 40 S. E. 695, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1055, 88 Am. St. Rep. 48, in which it was held that a sale of chattels under a power of sale in a mortgage passed no title where it was shown that at the time of the sale the property was in the possession of a sheriff by virtue of an execution sued out by a third party. The decision proceeded upon the theory that the sale under the mortgage was a species of foreclosure of the lien, that the property was in custodia legis, and hence that a foreclosure was unauthorized. It is to be observed, however, that the plaintiff here presents no such case either by his proposition or statement. Nor has the court found beyond the mere fact that the mules were in possession of the sheriff at the time of the sale to plaintiff, and no evidence has been brought before us from which it can be said that the sheriff's possession was by virtue of any valid process, thus leaving us to determine from inferences only a fact necessary, as it seems to us, to fix the status of the mules as in custodia legis. The inferences, if any, are to be indulged in favor of the judgment, and, if necessary to our conclusion, we would perhaps be warranted in holding that it was not shown on the trial of this case that the mules were in custodia legis at the time of the sale under the trust deed. But we do not care to avoid the force of the decision upon such distinction. The opinion itself—on its own facts—has been criticised and weakened, we think correctly so, by the editor of the Lawyers' Reports, Annotated, in a note to the case (volume 1, p. 1055 [N. S.]), to which we refer for a more extended discussion. He observes generally, after a review of numerous authorities, that: "As to the sale of personal property in custody of law, the weight of authority, as before stated, upholds the right of the owner to transfer it as if it had never been taken from him, and to pass title, subject to the incumbrance arising through lien and custody. He cannot, of course, make an actual delivery of the thing sold, because it is in the hands of the law, but in such case symbolical delivery will do, and the title goes to the buyer subject to the custody. If the lien springing from the custody is satisfied, the buyer's title becomes perfect." Mr. Tiedeman in his work on Sales (§ 84, p. 107), in discussing the subject of "transfer of title," says, among other things, that: "Delivery is not essential to the transfer of title, unless it be shown that the parties did not intend to pass the title before delivery." To the same general effect are the following authorities: Griffin v. Chubb, 7 Tex. 613, 614, 58 Am. Dec. 85; Brewer v. Blarton & Devereaux, 66 Tex. 532, 1 S. W. 572; Hopkins v. Partridge, 71 Tex. 606, 10 S. W. 214; Robertson v. Hunt, 77 Tex. 321, 14 S. W. 68; Tome v. Dubois, 73 U. S. 548, 18 L. Ed. 948; Erwin v. Arthur, 61 Mo. 386; Tandler v. Saunders, 56 Mich. 142, 22 N. W. 271. It was expressly held in Gardner v. Bunn, 182 Ill. 403, 23 N. E. 1072, 7 L. R. A. 729, that an owner might mortgage personal property at the time under the levy of an execution. To the same effect is the case of Brown v. Allen, 35 Iowa, 309; Jones on Chattel Mortgages, p. 115. And in the case of Brown v. Loesch, 8 Ind. App. 145, 29 N. E. 451, it was held that an owner might lawfully sell chattels in the possession of an officer by virtue of an execution. It was said that "the officer, having made a valid levy, has the right to retain possession and control of the property for the purpose of making it answer the demand of the writ. His special property and right of possession continue so long as the property is needed to satisfy the writ. Freem. Ex'ns, §§ 135, 267, 269. The absolute title or general property in goods levied on by virtue of a writ remains in the owner, who may sell them while so in the custody of the sheriff, such sale being subject to the lien of the creditor, the execution plaintiff, and subject to the officer's special title and right to retain possession for the purposes of the writ."

The right of Lane to the property in the mules in question was one that would undoubtedly have descended to his heirs in event of his death, notwithstanding the possession of the sheriff of Parker county, whether by virtue of legal process or not, and the authorities cited above we think support the view, which we entertain, that, in the absence of evidence showing that at the time of the sale to plaintiff in error delivery was a condition precedent to the sale, all the title that Lane had in and to the mules passed by virtue of the trustee's sale to plaintiff; and that hence the lien became merged in the final title thus brought about. True, this title would not avail plaintiff to disturb the officer's possession, if he had any by virtue of legal process, but, if there was a valid levy and the officer held possession by virtue thereof, such levy may have been abandoned, or, if the possession was wholly unauthorized or by virtue of void process, we see no reason why plaintiff by virtue of the sale to him might not be permitted in any such event to assert his right in the proper court, or even after sale under valid process, if any, to assert the priority, if any, of his right against the purchaser at such sheriff's sale. We do not find any sound reason for holding that the case should be otherwise where the sale is made by virtue of an express authority from the owner to do so. The authorized agent, in this case the trustee, is not required, as in the case of a sale by an officer under execution, to make delivery of the property, and it seems to us that a sale by one authorized to make it is just as effective to pass the title as if the sale had been made by the owner. We feel the more confirmed in the view above expressed by reason of the further fact that the court finds that the trustee's sale was made by and with the consent of J. T. Lane, from which in aid of the court's judgment we are perhaps authorized to infer that Lane was present at the time and was in effect a party to the sale by the trustee. If, therefore, the sale under consideration was regular, as the court finds, the lien was certainly merged in the sale and title to the mules passed to plaintiff in error; for there is nothing in the record to show that delivery of the mules by Lane or the trustee was a condition of the sale.

It follows, we think, that if at the time of the institution of plaintiff's suit he was without the lien declared upon, and that, as we should impute from the court's judgment and findings, the assertion of the lien was for the sole purpose of giving the county court of Jack county jurisdiction over the persons of Webb and Rhoades, then Webb and Rhoades were properly given the benefit of their pleas to the jurisdiction and of privilege to be sued in the counties of their residence, for in such case they were not proper parties to plaintiff's suit against Lane, and his cause of action against Webb and Rhoades, if any, being altogether different from that against Lane, must be asserted in the proper court having jurisdiction over said defendants and over the subject-matter of the suit.

The record sustains plaintiff's further objection to the judgment, to the effect that the court erred in allowing J. T. Lane a credit of $150 because Lane had filed no answer asking for such relief. Upon the entry of the judgment by default, plaintiff as against Lane was entitled to judgment for the amount of his debt with foreclosure of lien, as alleged, and to this extent the judgment must be reversed and remanded. In another respect, also, we find error. It seems undisputed from the record that the defendant Rhoades now claims the mules in question by virtue of a purchase from Webb, and that he took the mules to Hardeman county. Plaintiff's cause of action against Webb and Rhoades for the conversion of the mules, which were alleged to be of the value of $205, is therefore triable in the county court of Hardeman county. Hence the court, upon sustaining the defendants' pleas of privilege, should have transferred the cause as against Webb and Rhoades for the alleged conversion to the county court of Hardeman county, as required by the act of the Thirtieth Legislature, approved April 18, 1907 (see Gen. Laws 1907, p. 248, c. 133). This act amends the Revised Statutes on the subject, and, among other things, expressly provides: "That whenever a plea of privilege to the venue to be sued in some other county than the county in which the suit is pending shall be sustained, that the court shall order the venue to be changed to the proper court of the county having jurisdiction of the parties and the cause."

The judgment of the court will accordingly be reversed, and the cause remanded, with direction to the county court of Jack county to enter judgment in plaintiff's favor as against J. T. Lane, as above indicated, with stay or order of sale, however, until the disposition of the cause against Webb and Rhoades, and in favor of Webb and Rhoades on their said special pleas, entering the proper order of transfer as to them to the county court of Hardeman county. See B. H. Johnson, Plaintiff in Error, v. W. C. Lanford et al., Defendants in Error, No. 5855 (decided by this court November 21, 1908), reported in 114 S. W. 693.

ALVORD NAT. BANK v. WAPLES-PLATTER GROCER CO.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. Jan. 2, 1909.
On Rehearing, Feb. 27, 1909.)

1. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF (§ 9*)—NATURE AND PURPOSE OF REMEDY.

The office of a bill of exceptions is to show the proceedings of the court which do not otherwise appear of record under rule 53, for the government of district and county courts (67 S. W. xxiv), providing that there shall be no bills of exception taken to the judgments of the court rendered upon those matters which at common law constitute the record proper in the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exceptions, Bill of, Cent. Dig. § 11; Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

2. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 128*)—VACATION FOR FRAUD—PROCEEDINGS—QUESTIONS PRESENTABLE AFTER JUDGMENT.

In an action to set aside a justice's judgment in garnishment proceedings for fraud, the question of the validity of the affidavit for garnishment could not be raised after judgment finding the judgment based on the affidavit to be valid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Dec. Dig. § 128.*]

On Motion for Rehearing.

3. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 174*)—ANSWER—CONSTRUCTION—ISSUE OF FACT.

On appeal to the county court in an action to vacate a justice's judgment in garnishment proceedings for fraud, the only answer was one contending that the justice was without jurisdiction to render the judgment setting aside the former judgment, and that the later judgment was therefore void, and praying that the later judgment be decreed of no effect, and that judgment for the plaintiff in the former suit be rendered for the full amount of the former judgment or the justice be directed to execute the former judgment. Held, that the pleading was wholly in the nature of a demurrer, and raised no issue of fact, but the county court could only decide whether the justice as a matter of law had jurisdiction of the proceeding to vacate his former judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Dec. Dig. § 174.*]

4. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 128*)—JUDGMENT—ACTIONS TO VACATE—JURISDICTION.

A justice of the peace, where a complaining judgment defendant, by fraud of the person in whose favor a judgment of the justice was rendered, was prevented from making his defense, has jurisdiction of a petition in the nature of a bill of review to set aside the former judgment and hear the case on the merits when seasonably presented; Rev. St. 1895, art. 1651, permitting a justice within 10 days after rendering judgment by default to set it aside for good cause shown, and under which a new trial cannot be granted after the 10 days, not applying to the institution of such a proceeding in the nature of a new suit to set aside a former judgment.

Appeal from Wise County Court; C. V. Terrell, Judge.

Action by the Alvord National Bank against the Waples-Platter Grocer Company. A justice's judgment for plaintiff was reversed by the county court, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded for a new trial on rehearing.

McMurray & Gettys, for appellant. W. H. Bullock, for appellee.

Conclusions.

CONNER, C. J. So far as we have been able to determine from the confused and confusing state of the record in this case, we feel unable to say that reversible error affirmatively appears. While we would be inclined to hold that the justice's court could entertain and determine, as it appears was done, appellant's suit to set aside for fraud the judgment of June 11, 1906, and that on appeal to the county court appellant had an undoubted right to be heard on the merits of the issue of fraud so presented, yet we cannot say from the record that such hearing was denied. It is true that the bill of exceptions indicates that no evidence was heard in the county court, and that the case went off on the court's ruling upon appellee's demurrers, but there is no judgment entry to such effect. Rule 53, for the government of district and county courts (87 S. W. xxiv) provides: "That there shall be no bills of exception taken to the judgments of the court, rendered upon those matters, which, at common law, constitute the record proper in the case, as the citation, petition, answer, and their supplements and amendments, and motions for a new trial, or in arrest of judgment, and final judgment." The office of a bill of exceptions is to show the proceedings of the court which do not otherwise appear of record. Owens v. Railway Co., 67 Tex. 679, 4 S. W. 593. So that it may be well doubted whether we would be authorized to review the court's ruling upon a demurrer when his action is only presented by bill of exceptions; but, if it be conceded that the question is properly presented, then even it cannot be said to affirmatively appear that appellant was denied a hearing upon the merits of his plea of fraud in the rendition of the judgment of June 11, 1906. The bill is so modified by the court's explanation that nothing is presented by the bill save the petition of appellant praying for a new trial before the justice of the peace, the amended answer, and exceptions of appellee, and judgment of the county court, and the objections. While it may have been objected that no evidence was offered, this will not supply a statement of such fact in the bill of exceptions. All statements of fact in the bill indicating that the court's judgment was without a hearing upon evidence seem to have been disapproved by the court, while the judgment that the court actually rendered, as shown by the record, recites that the parties appeared, and "the court, having heard the evidence and argument of counsel, is of opinion that the plaintiff should recover." In the state in which we find the bill of exception before us, we think it must certainly be held at all events that the judgment recital controls. So concluding, we think the judgment of the county court must be construed as a finding upon the merits by the trial judge against appellee on his petition to set aside the judgment of the justice's court of June 11, 1906, on the ground of fraud, and as an adjudication that said judgment of the justice's court was in all things binding and of full force. This we think he was empowered to do, and it is immaterial that he further proceeded without authority to command the justice of the peace to execute the judgment. The court properly refused to take up and dispose of appellant's motion to quash the affidavit for garnishment, having held, as he did, that the original judgment based thereon was valid and in full force. The question, of course, could not be raised after judgment.

We finally conclude that all assignments of error should be overruled, and that the judgment of the county court, in so far as it maintains the validity and binding force of said judgment of the justice's court of June 11, 1906, should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

On Rehearing.

The proceedings that we are called upon to review on this appeal originated by a petition in the nature of a bill of review in behalf of appellant filed in the justice's court of precinct No. 1, Wise county, November 10, 1906. The petition sought to set aside a judgment of said justice's court theretofore rendered on June 11, 1906, in a garnishment proceeding by appellee against appellant. It was alleged, in substance, that said judgment of June 11th had been procured against appellant as garnishee by fraud, in that appellant had been prevented from appearing and answering by means of false and fraudulent promises and representations on the part of appellee and its attorney. On April 8, 1907, the justice upon hearing of the petition to vacate the judgment granted it as prayed for, and thereupon at once further proceeded to hear the original garnishment proceeding upon its merits, all parties being present and participating in the trial, which resulted in a judgment vacating the judgment of June 11, 1906, and in favor of appellant upon the merits in the garnishment suit decreeing that appellee take nothing thereby. From this judgment of the justice of the peace appellee appealed to the county court of Wise county which rendered the judgment from which this appeal has been prosecuted. The judgment of the county court declared the judgment of the justice's court of April 8, 1907, granting a new trial, to be null and void, and reinstated the judgment of said justice's court of June 11, 1906, declaring it to be in full force and effect, and ordering its execution.

On original hearing the contention was made, as is again urged on motion for rehearing, that the judgment of the county court was upon demurrer only; but inasmuch as there is no statement of facts, and inasmuch as the county court judgment recites that the court "heard the evidence," we concluded that the hearing of the county court was upon the merits of appellant's petition to set aside said judgment of June 11, 1906. The record in the cause is in a very confused state; but, on review of our former conclusions, we have been unable to find any answer on the part of the appellee that raised an issue of fact. There is in the record what purports to be an amended answer to appellant's petition to impeach and vacate the first judgment of the justice's court. It is as follows: "Now at this time comes the plaintiff, the Waples-Platter Grocery Company, and, amending the answer heretofore filed, says that the justice of the peace, precinct No. 1, Wise county, Tex., was without jurisdiction to render the judgment so rendered on April 8, 1907, against plaintiff setting aside the former judgment that had been rendered in plaintiff's favor against said Alvord National Bank on the day of, and that said last-named judgment setting aside said former judgment was and is null and void. Wherefore plaintiff prays that said last-named judgment granting a new trial and setting aside said former judgment be decreed by this court to be null and void and of no effect, and that this court render judgment in favor of plaintiff for the amount of said former judgment and all costs; but, if this court should conclude that such is not the proper remedy, then plaintiff prays that said justice of the peace be directed, commanded, and enjoined to proceed to execute said former judgment against said Alvord National Bank, and to issue execution thereon as required by law and for general relief."

No answer other than the one quoted in behalf of appellee is to be found in the record, or is indicated in the transcript from the justice's court. This answer, we think, falls, as before stated, to raise an issue of fact, and is wholly in the nature of a demurrer, from which it follows, notwithstanding the recitation in the court's judgment, that the county court could only proceed on the theory that as a matter of law the justice's court was without jurisdiction, as urged in the answer, to entertain and determine the petition to vacate his former judgment; there being no pleading under which an issue of fact was determinable. That the court did so proceed is indicated by a bill of exceptions to be found in the record. If so, the conclusion reached was erroneous, for we entertain no doubt of the power of justice's courts, as to matters within their jurisdiction when seasonably presented, to determine petitions in the nature of bills of review alleging sufficient cause to set aside judgments for fraud, and we so indicated in the original disposition of this case. It is true that it has been several times decided that under the statute (Rev. St. 1895, art. 1651) a justice of the peace has no power to grant a new trial after the expiration of the 10 days allowed. Adams v. Casey-Swasey Co., 15 Tex. Civ. App. 379, 39 S. W. 654; Bond v. Rintleman, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 298, 59 S. W. 48; Carter v. Commissioners of Van Zandt County, 75 Tex. 286, 12 S. W. 935. So under the practice act of the district and county courts it has often been decided that a new trial cannot be granted after the expiration of the term at which judgment was rendered, but the statutes on the subject of new trial have never, so far as we know, been held to preclude the institution of a proceeding in the nature of a new suit to set aside a judgment, where the complaining party has been prevented by fraud on the part of the person in whose favor the judgment was rendered from making his defense. In such cases, where an opportunity has not been afforded of moving for a new trial during the term, the equitable proceeding or action mentioned may be instituted to reopen the case and have it disposed of upon the merits. See Edleman v. McGlathery, 74 Tex. 280, 11 S. W. 1100; Roller v. Wooldridge, 46 Tex. 485, and cases cited. In this respect we think there can be no difference between district and county courts and justice courts in matters within their jurisdiction. Rose v. Darby, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 341, 76 S. W. 799; Brown v. Dutton, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 294, 85 S. W. 454; Crawford v. Sandridge, 75 Tex. 383, 12 S. W. 833; Gibson v. Moore, 22 Tex. 611; Const. art. 5, § 19; Rev. St. 1895, art. 1568. There is no exception to appellant's petition filed before the justice on the ground of insufficiency, and it seems, at least in the absence of exception, to set forth an equitable cause for setting aside the judgment attacked, and we think appellant was entitled to a trial upon the merits thereof.

The motion for rehearing will accordingly be granted, and the judgment of the county court reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

Appeal from Hunt County Court; J. W. Manning, Judge.

Action by W. M. Davis against the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company of Texas. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed and rendered.

Coke, Miller & Ooke, Jno. T. Craddock, and B. M. McMahan, for appellant. John A. Stone, Jr., Wm. Pienen, and T. D. Starnes, for appellee.

BOOKHOUT, J. This was a suit by appellee to recover of appellant the value of a mule claimed to have been killed by a locomotive or train of the defendant at a point about one mile north of Kingston in Hunt county, at or near a road crossing over the defendant's railroad. It was alleged that defendant's railroad track at said point was straight, and defendant's servants operating its train saw, or by the exercise of ordinary care would have seen, the said mule upon defendant's track in time to have checked the train and prevented injury to the mule; that defendant's track or right of way at the point where the mule was killed was unfenced, "in that the gate in the fence of the right of way was in a bad state of repair, in this: That said gate was without a latch or fastening of any kind, and stood open, so cattle or stock running at large could enter upon said right of way at will, and the said defendant negligently permitted said gate to stand open and unlatched, and to remain in a bad state of repair as above set out, and that, as a direct and proximate cause of defendant's negligence in the respects hereinabove set out, and through the negligence of its agents and servants, plaintiff's mule was struck and killed." Defendant answered by general demurrer, special exception, general denial, a special plea of contributory negligence, wherein it is alleged that defendant's railway track and right of way at the point where the mule was killed were fenced, and that plaintiff's mule entered upon the said right of way through a gate placed in the right of way fence for the accommodation, use, and benefit of the owner of the premises and his tenants, and that said gate was left open by the owner of said farm, or by his employes or tenants, or was left open by the plaintiff or those acting for him, and that the gate was provided with suitable and safe fastening, and it was not, at the time of the accident, open through any fault or negligence of defendant. A trial resulted in a verdict and judgment for plaintiff in the sum of $210, to reverse which defendant perfected this appeal.

Conclusions of Fact.

W. M. Davis was engaged in working the public roads of Hunt county. He, with the consent of the owner of the land, established his camp about a half mile north of Kingston on a place owned by Jesse Clark. The field in which he was camped contained a pool or tank of water. The plaintiff got in and out of the field in which he was camped by going south from his camp through a gate leading out of the inclosure into the public road. This public road runs east and west, and extends from Celeste to Kingston. The railroad track and right of way runs through the farm of Jesse Clark from the northwest in a southeasterly direction, and is fenced. About 70 yards southeast of Davis' camp there is a gate in the west right of way fence. Appellee also used this gate in reaching the public road. There is also a gate in the east fence of the railroad right of way. These gates had been there for five or six years, and were put there by the railroad at the request of Jesse Clark, the owner of the farm. The gate in the right of way fence on the west side stood open part of the time, and part of the time it was shut. There was a farm crossing over the railroad between these gates. The gate in the west right of way fence was swung to the south post, and opened towards the right of way. It had a chain attached to it with baling wire, with which the gate was to be fastened. The fastening consisted of two nails driven in the gate post, one a tenpenny nail and the other much larger. The chain was not long enough to reach the larger nail, but was of sufficient length to reach the tenpenny nail, to which it could be fastened. The plaintiff worked eight mules, and at night they were tied to the feed wagon. On the night of October 27, 1907, one of his mules became untied and wandered through the gate in the west side of the right of way fence and upon the right of way, and was killed by a locomotive or train going north. The next morning plaintiff found the mule lying on the west side of the right of way, and about 75 yards north of the farm crossing, dead. He testified that it was lying 25 or 30 yards north from where it was struck. There is no testimony that appellant's operatives of the locomotive or train discovered the mule on the right of way before striking him. The mule was shown to be worth $210.

Opinion.

Appellant assigns as error the court's refusal to give its requested charge instructing a verdict for defendant. It is contended that (1) the uncontroverted evidence shows that plaintiff's mule entered upon the defendant's right of way through a gate in the right of way fence which had been placed there by the defendant at the request of the owner of the premises for the convenience of the owner of the premises and his tenants and servants in passing between the lands and premises of the landowner, which at that point lay on both sides of the defendant's right of way and track; (2) that the uncontroverted evidence shows that at the time of the accident plaintiff was a tenant, probably a tenant at will, of the owner of the premises, and that plaintiff, at and before the time of the accident, was using said gate for his own convenience, and was acquainted with its situation and condition; (3) that there was no evidence showing, or tending to show, that the gate through which plaintiff's mule entered, or the latch or fastening of the gate, was insufficient, out of repair, or in bad condition, but, to the contrary, the evidence did show that the latch or fastening to the gate was the kind ordinarily used in that community, was sufficient, and was in good condition; (4) that the uncontradicted evidence shows that defendant's servants endeavored to keep the said gate closed, but that the landowner, his tenants, and plaintiff himself, voluntarily and habitually left the said gate open, and that plaintiff himself passed through the said gate the day before the mule was killed, and left the gate open; (5) that the uncontradicted evidence shows that the mule was killed during a dark night, and the evidence failed to show at what hour, or by what train, the mule was struck, and failed to show the defendant's servants operating the train saw the mule; and (6) that there is no evidence showing, or sufficient to raise a presumption, that defendant's servants operating the locomotive that struck the mule failed to exercise ordinary care, or that such servants of defendant by the use of ordinary care could or would have discovered plaintiff's mule on the right of way in danger in time to have avoided the killing of the mule. These contentions are fairly supported by the record. The railway company, having fenced its track, could not be held liable for killing the mule, unless the evidence showed negligence on its part. Railway Co. v. Hanacek, 93 Tex. 446, 55 S. W. 1117; Railway Co. v. Hanack, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 394, 56 S. W. 938. The pleadings charged that the fastenings to the gate were defective, and that such defect constituted negligence. While the evidence showed that the chain for the fastening of the gate was too short to reach the larger nail in the post, it was long enough to reach the tenpenny nail, which had been driven in the post to fasten the gate to. There is no evidence that this nail was insufficient to hold the gate if the chain had been fastened to it. The evidence tending to show that the fastening was defective amounted to no more than a suspicion that it was defective.

Again, it seems there was no attempt by plaintiff or others using the gate to close the same. It is held that it is not the duty of the railway company in this character of crossing to see the gates are kept closed. Railway v. Hanack, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 394, 56 S. W. 938. Appellee testified that the gate was always standing open. The plaintiff used the gate, and George Smith, who lived east of the railroad in a house belonging to the owner of the farm, also used it in taking his stock to water. The plaintiff testified he passed through the gate the day preceding the night on which the mule was killed, and it was open. He did not attempt to close it. It follows that the trial court erred in failing to instruct a verdict for defendant. The cause seems to have been fully developed, and, the uncontradicted evidence failing to show negligence on the part of appellant, it becomes our duty to render such judgment as should have been rendered by the trial court. Patrick v. Smith, 90 Tex. 267, 38 S. W. 17; Henne & Meyer v. Moultrie, 97 Tex. 216, 77 S. W. 607; Bondies v. Ivey, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 290, 39 S. W. 156; Railway v. Hollingsworth, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 306, 68 S. W. 724.

The judgment is reversed, and judgment here rendered for appellant.

Appeal from District Court, Glasscock County; James L. Shepherd, Judge.

Action by T. A. Zimmerman against R. C. Dobson. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and rendered.

A. J. Prichard and Todd & Hurley, for appellant. Jeff D. Ayers and B. P. Ayers, for appellee.

HODGES, J. This suit was instituted by the appellee against the appellant in the district court of Glasscock county to recover damages for the alleged breach of a contract to convey a certain tract of land. The case was tried before the court without a jury, resulting in a judgment in favor of the appellee for $960.

Findings of Fact.

The following are the facts as shown by the evidence introduced: The appellant, Dobson, owned a section of school land situated in Glasscock county not then fully paid out, which had been purchased from the state. In October, 1906, he and the appellee entered into an agreement by which appellant, Dobson, sold to the appellee, upon terms hereinafter stated, all the right that he had in the section of land mentioned. The written contract which evidences the terms of the agreement and upon which this suit is based is as follows:

"$500.00. Garden City, Texas, October 24th, 1906. Received of T. A. Zimmerman of the County of Jones, State of Texas, the sum of $500.00 earnest money, to close sale to himself, of the following described lot, tract or parcel of land, to-wit: 640 acres of land, all of Survey No. 18, block No. 34 Tp. 3 south, situated in the County of Glasscock, State of Texas, from R. C. Dobson, of Glasscock County, Texas, acting by and through his duly authorized agents, Gregg Brothers, at Garden City, Texas, at a total sale price of $4800.00 bonus, to be paid as follows, to-wit: The sum of $2500.00 cash, on or before the first day of January, 1907, when possession is to be given, the sum herein receipted for to be taken as a credit on said first payment and the execution and delivery by the said T. A. Zimmerman to the said R. C. Dobson, of six certain promissory vendor's lien notes, said notes are to be of even date with the deed transferring the property, and are to be of the principal sum of $383.33 each, and due and payable on or before one, two, three, four, five and six years from date respectively and to bear interest from date at the rate of 8% per annum from date until paid, payable at Garden City, Texas, $2500.00 is to be paid as stated above upon the delivery of a proper deed, transferring the said property in accordance with the agreement herein. It is further understood that the title to said property is to be perfect or to be made perfect within a reasonable time from the date hereof, or the money is to be refunded to the said Zimmerman, the parties hereto are allowed until the first day of January, 1907, to consummate the details of this trade, and if the same are not consummated or finished by that time the earnest money is to be refunded, if the default of the said R. C. Dobson, whereupon the said Zimmerman, may then proceed to establish his rights according to law, but if the default be that of the said Zimmerman, then the amount so received as earnest money is to be forfeited and at once to become the property of the said R. C. Dobson, and his agents Gregg Brothers, are authorized to turn the same over to him less their commission and expenses incurred in the matter, and upon the said forfeiture being declared the said T. A. Zimmerman shall thereupon become released from any further liability by reason of this contract. Witness our hands this 24th day of Oct. A. D. 1906. Gregg Brothers, By Guilon Gregg. I accept the terms and conditions of the above contract and agree to abide by its terms. R. C. Dobson."

It is further shown that Gregg Bros., whose names appear signed to the foregoing instrument, were land agents, and were instrumental in bringing the parties together and in the consummation of the deal above referred to. At or about the time this written contract was executed the appellee deposited with Gregg Bros. the $500 mentioned, and Dobson, the appellant, also executed, acknowledged, and delivered to Gregg Bros. for the appellee a deed of general warranty conveying to the latter the land in controversy and described in the contract, in accordance with the terms of the agreement. While the evidence does not show that this deed was actually tendered to Zimmerman, it is sufficient to warrant the conclusion that the latter knew of its existence, and that Gregg Bros. held it for him, and that he could get it by paying the purchase money and executing the notes in accordance with the terms stipulated. Zimmerman, however, was unwilling to accept this deed as a perfect title, claiming that it was necessary for Dobson to get some sort of an order from the probate court authorizing him to make the sale of the land in controversy. At the time of the transaction mentioned, Dobson's wife was dead and had left some minor children surviving her. The uncontradicted evidence is that neither Dobson's deceased wife nor his children ever had any interest in this tract of land or the funds with which it was purchased. He bought the land after the death of his wife, and with funds received by him from his deceased father's estate. These funds were never in any way mingled with any community funds belonging to Dobson and his deceased wife, either before or after her death. Dobson testifies that he acquainted Zimmerman with those facts at the time the contract of sale was entered into. Zimmerman admits as much, but says that he did not believe Dobson's statements, and that was the reason why he insisted upon the latter's obtaining an order from the probate court. On several occasions after the execution of this written agreement, and prior to the 1st of January, 1907, Zimmerman demanded of Dobson to know what he intended to do with reference to perfecting his title. In reply, Dobson told him that he did not intend to do anything more than he had done, evidently referring to the execution and delivery of the deed for Zimmerman to Gregg Bros. This not being satisfactory to Zimmerman, on or about the 20th of January, 1907, he called upon Gregg Bros. and withdrew the deposit of $500 which he had previously made with them in compliance with the terms of the written contract, stating that he needed the money for use in his business. He at the same time delivered to Gregg Bros. a receipt showing that he had withdrawn the deposit, and in which he also contracted to indemnify Gregg Bros. against any damage they might sustain by reason of liability to Dobson for surrendering the amount of the deposit. After Zimmerman had withdrawn this deposit, and upon ascertaining that fact, Dobson also withdrew from Gregg Bros. the deed to Zimmerman which he had deposited with them. Zimmerman never at any time tendered to Dobson the balance of the purchase money or any of the notes provided for by the terms of the contract, nor did he ever demand of Dobson the deed of conveyance which had been deposited with Gregg Bros. Zimmerman however, expressed a willingness to pay the remainder of the purchase money and perform the balance of the terms of his contract, if Dobson would get an order from the probate court authorizing him to sell the land. After the withdrawal of the deposit by Zimmerman and the deed by Dobson, it is claimed that the latter sold the land to other parties. It is also shown by the evidence that the land in controversy advanced in price between the making of the contract of sale and the 1st of January following. The difference caused by that advance between the market value of the land at the time the contract was breached and the price Zimmerman was to pay is made the basis of the damages claimed in this case.

Conclusions of Law.

The first, second, third, and fourth assignments of error complain of the action of the court in overruling some special exceptions to the plaintiff's original petition, the action of the court in admitting parol testimony to explain certain portions of the written contract, and of the findings of fact made by the court in the judgment rendered. Aside from bills Nos. 1 and 2, the record contains no evidence of any ruling of the court on the special exceptions. This method of reserving exceptions to rulings of that character is not in accord with the rules of practice adopted in this state. Rule 53 (20 S. W. xv) for district and county courts; Waco, etc., Co. v. Wiggins (Tex. Civ. App.) 32 S. W. 58. All of the bills, however, were filed more than 20 days after the adjournment of court, and for that reason, if for no other, cannot be here considered.

It was insisted by counsel for appellant, in the oral argument made in this case, that the exception to the admission of the parol testimony had been sufficiently reserved in the statement of facts to authorize a consideration by the court of the objection made. It is true that an exception to the admission of testimony can be reserved in the statement of facts when the latter has been agreed to by the parties. K. C. S. Ry. Co. v. Rosebrook-Josey Grain Co. (recently decided by this court), 114 S. W. 486, and cases there cited. But we think in such cases it is essential, to authorize the exceptions to be considered, that the statement of facts should be filed within the time provided by law for the filing of bills of exception. Morris v. Rhine (Tex.) 8 S. W. 317; Willis v. Smith, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 548, 43 S. W. 331. The act of May 25, 1907, permitting statements of fact to be filed at any time within 30 days after the adjournment of the term of court did not include bills of exception within its provisions. Acts 1907, p. 509, c. 24. The latter are governed by the provisions of the act of May 14th, passed at the same session. Acts 1907, p. 446, c. 7. This last-named act provides that the court may, by an order entered to that effect, permit the filing of bills of exception within 20 days after the adjournment of the term. The file mark upon the statement of facts in this case shows that it was not filed till more than 20 days had elapsed after the adjournment of the court for that term. For these reasons, the objection raised by that assignment cannot be considered.

There are a number of other assignments which in various forms attack the judgment rendered upon the ground that it is not supported by the evidence. The right of the appellee to recover in this case can be justified only by a finding that the appellant failed or refused to make and deliver a deed or deeds transferring the land in accordance with the terms of the contract of sale. Those terms provided that "the title to said property is to be perfect or to be made perfect within a reasonable time." It will be conceded, for the purposes of this case, that the parties contemplated that the appellee was to have a title perfect in all respects, and free from all clouds and incumbrances except that which existed in favor of the state for the unpaid balance of the purchase money. The question then is, does the evidence warrant the conclusion that the appellant has failed to comply with his contract? The burden of showing that he has so failed rested upon the appellee. 29 Am. & Eng. Ency. p. 620. It is not contended that appellant refused to make a deed in proper form conveying his title to the land. The evidence shows that such a deed was made and deposited with Gregg Bros. for the appellee, and that the latter knew it was there, and that it might have been had for the asking upon a compliance with the terms of the instrument. But he appears to rest his cause of action upon the refusal of the appellant to do more than this—to get an order from the probate court authorizing him to sell the land. It seems that the appellee was under the impression that the minor children of the appellant owned an interest in the land, or at least had an apparent interest, and that it was necessary for Dobson to obtain authority from the probate court to make the sale before he could pass a perfect title. The court permitted him to testify that at the time the written contract was made Dobson agreed that he would go into the probate court and make him a perfect title; that they then drew up and executed the written contract hereinbefore set out. The written contract does not in terms require this to be done, but only calls for a perfect title. The evidence is uncontroverted that the land in question was purchased by Dobson after the death of his wife, with funds received from his father's estate; that these were in no way mingled with the community funds of himself and his deceased wife, as he says, for the reason they had no community funds. The testimony also shows that Dobson told the appellee of those facts at the time the contract was entered into. Appellee admits as much, but says he did not believe it. So far as the record before us discloses, he has not attempted to contradict any of the statements made by Dobson as to his exclusive ownership of the land, and the manner in which he claims to have acquired it; and those facts, therefore, come before us as undisputed. If those facts be true, it logically follows that Dobson's children had no actual or apparent interest in the land, and there were no conditions which cast even a cloud upon his title. Without setting up a state of facts diametrically opposed to what the evidence here shows to have been the rights of himself and children with reference to the land, Dobson could not have stated a subject-matter over which the probate court could exercise jurisdiction. Neither was there anything which a court of equity could undertake to relieve against. We may admit that the parties, acting under a mistaken view of the law or the facts, did make an agreement such as is testified to by Zimmerman; but a failure to comply with that agreement cannot be made the basis for a judgment for damages under the pleadings in this case. The contract sued on is that embraced in the written instrument, and does not require Dobson to go into the probate court for an order, or for any purpose. It simply binds him to make a perfect title, or to perfect it within a reasonable time. If the title he did make and the one appellee refused to take was perfect, or was not subject to the objections urged by the appellee as a reason for refusing it, then the judgment in this case is without evidence to support it. While the court filed no separate findings of fact and conclusions of law, he makes this recitation in the judgment: "The court is of the opinion that the contract entered into * * * was not complied with by the defendant, but was breached, and no perfect title was presented by defendant to plaintiff for examination." Neither the written contract nor any parol agreement is shown by the evidence under the great latitude permitted by the court in the introduction of testimony, in which the appellant made any such an undertaking as that upon which the court based his judgment. In fact, the appellee himself admits that the appellant did not agree to furnish him an abstract for inspection, but that an abstract was prepared to which he might have had access. We think the judgment in this case is without any support. The testimony shows that the title tendered by the appellant was perfect, or at least absolutely free from any of the objections which a probate court would have authority to remove; and further shows that the sole excuse urged by the appellee for withdrawing his deposit of a part of the purchase-money was without justification. After he had so withdrawn it the appellant had the right to assume that the contract was abandoned, and that he could thereafter sell the land to other parties upon such terms as he saw fit.

The judgment is reversed, and here rendered in favor of the appellant.

On Rehearing.

As stated in the original opinion disposing of this case, this is a suit to recover damages for an alleged breach of a contract to convey land. It is true there are some expressions in the pleadings of the plaintiff which indicate a purpose to charge the failure of the appellant, Dobson, to convey by a particular kind of title—that is, by what he terms a perfect title—as a basis of the claim for damages. The character of the damages alleged is sufficient to determine the nature of the suit. It is not claimed that the appellant's title was defective, or that he offered to or did convey an imperfect title, but that "he failed and refused to perfect said title and accept said cash payment and said promissory vendor's lien notes and make proper conveyance of said land to plaintiff." The damage which he seeks to recover is the difference between the contract price of the land and its market value on the 1st day of January thereafter, the date when it is charged the conveyance should have been made. Clearly the appellee is suing for the loss of a bargain only, and not for damages by reason of being compelled to accept an imperfect title, or one defective, or for the failure of a title in whole or in part. There is in the petition an entire absence of any charge that the appellant was not the sole owner of the land and that he for that reason was unable to convey a title perfect in all respects. In this state the general rule is that the proper measure of the damages which the vendee may recover for a breach of a contract to convey or make title to land is the amount he has paid as purchase money. Roberts & Corley v. McFadden et al., 32 Tex. Civ. App. 47, 74 S. W. 105, and cases there cited. The only exceptions which appear to have been made to this rule are where the vendor either willfully or fraudulently fails or refuses to comply with his contract to convey. In these last-named instances only can the vendee recover for the loss of his bargain in addition to what he may have paid as purchase money. If the vendor presents or tenders a conveyance or title which is merely defective by reason of the existence of some cloud or apparent imperfection, the vendee has no right to refuse to accept it and sue for the loss of the bargain; but at most he would only be entitled to have a rescission of the contract and the recovery of whatever he may have paid. Roberts & Corley v. McFadden et al., supra.

Applying those principles to the facts here involved, we have concluded that, even if it be held that the original petition states a cause of action for the damages claimed, the facts do not warrant a judgment. If at the time the contract offered in evidence was made Dobson had no title, and for that reason was unable to make a good conveyance, the most which the appellee could recover would be the amount he had deposited as earnest money with Gregg Bros. Hall v. York's Adm'r, 22 Tex. 642; Wheeler v. Styles, 28 Tex. 242. This is the prevailing rule, unless there be additional circumstances of fraud and special damages resulting to the vendee. The mere fact that the vendor, at the time of binding himself to convey, knew that he had no title, is not such fraud as would authorize such additional recovery. See authorities last cited. There was no occasion for the appellee in this instance to lose his bargain. The evidence shows conclusively that he might have acquired the deed conveying all of the title which Dobson owned, either at the time the contract of conveyance was made or at the time it was sought to be enforced. When the appellee withdrew his money which he had deposited in the hands of Gregg Bros., he had the option of accepting the warranty deed which Dobson had deposited with Gregg Bros. for his benefit. He elected to reject the deed and withdraw the purchase money, and he must abide the consequences of his own choice. It is immaterial, so far as the right to recover the damages here sought is concerned, what the parties had in mind when they contracted with reference to making a perfect title to the land. We do not undertake to say that under proper allegations and proof the appellee could not recover damages for a failure on the part of the appellant to do what he claims in his testimony the latter agreed to do. But that question is not here involved, because no injuries on account of such failure are either alleged or proven; neither is it alleged or shown that Dobson's deed of general warranty—that which he had placed at the disposal of the appellee—was not in itself a perfect title. A perfect title is one which is merchantable or marketable. McClearly v. Chipman, 32 Ind. App. 489, 68 N. E. 320; Ross v. Smiley, 18 Colo. App. 204, 70 Pac. 763; Birge v. Bock, 44 Mo. App. 69. It is also defined as one which is good and valid beyond a reasonable doubt. Reynolds v. Borel, 86 Cal. 538, 25 Pac. 67; Sheehy v. Miles, 93 Cal. 288, 28 Pac. 1047. In this case the evidence fails to cast even a shadow upon the title of Dobson. The testimony of the appellee himself indicates nothing inconsistent with what Dobson says about the perfect reliability of his title.

We must decline the request of the appellee to find as a fact that Gregg Bros. were, at the time they were holding the deed and the earnest money deposited by the parties, acting as the exclusive agents of the appellant, Dobson. The Greggs had brought the parties together, and were undoubtedly the agents of Dobson in negotiating the terms of the sale as finally agreed upon; but in their undertaking to accept and hold the earnest money which Zimmerman agreed to deposit they departed from their exclusive agency for Dobson, and became trustees charged with the performance of certain duties due to both parties. If we are to treat Gregg Bros. as the sole agents of Dobson, then we must regard the deposit of the money by the appellee as a payment direct to Dobson. This could not be, for the reason that it was specially stipulated that, in the event Dobson failed to comply with his contract, Gregg Bros. were to deliver this money back to him. In this respect they were unquestionably charged with a trust for the benefit of appellee, and which Dobson had no right to control. How, then, can it be said that they were Dobson's agents, and yet were charged with the performance of duties over which Dobson had no control? While acting as a stakeholder, they were acting for both parties—for one as much as for the other.

The motion for a rehearing is overruled.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 654*)—STATEMENT OF FACTS—DEFECTS—AMENDMENT.

Where a statement of facts is not subject to consideration, for failing to show filing in the trial court, appellant should be permitted to correct the record to show a filing.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 750*)—REVIEW—INSUFFICIENT ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR.

Where the findings do not support a judgment appealed from, the Court of Civil Appeals will not refuse to consider assignments of error, though they merely attack the judgment, as unsupported by the evidence.

4. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 276*)—ADMINISTRATION OF COMMUNITY—BONDS—DEFENSES.

The existence of valid and unpaid claims against a community estate does not bar recovery by the heirs, on a bond given by the deceased husband as administrator.

5. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 276*)—ADMINISTRATION OF COMMUNITY—BONDS—DEFENSES.

It is no defense to liability on the bond of a deceased husband as administrator of the community estate that the succeeding administrator received and inventoried one-half of the property in kind belonging to the community estate when decedent qualified.

Evidence, in an action on an administrator's bond of three releases of vendor's lien notes, made by various parties to an administrator, reciting payment by him of the "sum of _____ dollars, which releases bore date after the death of his wife," is insufficient to support a finding that he paid specified sums for releases of specified vendor's lien notes.

Action by Agnes Belt and another against Zane Cetti and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed and remanded.

SPEER, J. From an inspection of the record in this case we find what purports to be a statement of facts, but which nowhere bears the file mark of the clerk of the court before which the case was tried. While there is no motion to strike out such statement of facts, we nevertheless deem it to be our duty under the circumstances to refuse to consider the instrument as a proper part of the record. In Brown v. Orange County (Tex. Civ. App.) 107 S. W. 607, the matter is treated as one which may be waived by the appellee, but in Matthews v. Boydston (Tex. Civ. App.) 31 S. W. 814, it is said: "The practice of disregarding a statement of facts filed after the end of the term of the court, and not authorized to be made up and filed by an order of the court contained in the record, whether brought to the attention of the court by action of counsel, or discovered by the court from investigation of the case, is too well established by our Supreme Court to justify a doubt as to our duty to disregard the statement of facts in this case." The Supreme Court cases of Raleigh v. Cook, 60 Tex. 440, Ross v. McGowan, 58 Tex. 603, McGuire v. Newbill, 58 Tex. 314, and Ry. Co. v. McAllister, 59 Tex. 349, are cited for this holding. To the same effect is Dennis v. Neal, 71 S. W. 387, an opinion by the Court of Civil Appeals for the Third District. We are the more inclined to follow the rule as laid down by these cases for the reason that such has been the practice of this court, as will be seen from an examination of the cases of Smith v. Pecos Valley & Northeastern Ry. Co., 43 Tex. Civ. App. 204, 95 S. W. 11, and Cockerell v. Walkup, 44 Tex. Civ. App. 564, 90 S. W. 443, in each of which cases the statement of facts not properly filed within the time required by law was stricken out upon the court's motion.

There are no assignments of error which can be considered in the absence of a statement of facts, and it therefore becomes our duty to affirm the judgment of the district court upon his findings of fact contained in the record.

Affirmed.

DUNKLIN, J., not sitting.

On Rehearing.

SPEER, J. On a former day of the term we disregarded the statement of facts because not filed in the court below, and affirmed the judgment. We are now asked to grant a rehearing, and to permit a correction of the record to show that the statement of facts was duly filed in the district court, and we are of the opinion the motion should be granted. We, therefore, proceed to consider the case on its merits. The case has been once before appealed to this court, a report of which will be found in 91 S. W. 1098, and in that opinion we affirmed a judgment in favor of the present appellees, stating: "In the view we take of the case no other judgment than the one rendered by the court could be sustained." We expressly affirmed the judgment, however, on a question of limitation, upon which question the Supreme Court, in a writ of error granted to our judgment, reversed our decision, as will be seen from the further report of the case in 93 S. W. 1000. There were findings of fact filed by the district judge, before whom the case was tried on the first trial, and these findings are also set out in the report of the Supreme Court decision. After the order of the Supreme Court reversing the case and remanding it for trial, the district judge again rendered judgment for the appellees, from which this appeal is prosecuted.

The findings of fact filed by the trial judge are as follows:

"(1) That the defendants in open court abandoned so much of their pleadings as raised the question of bar of the statute of limitations.

"(2) That on the 16th day of August, 1889, Mrs. Mary A. Roche died, leaving surviving her Thomas Roche and their two children, Agnes and Honora.

"(3) That in August, 1889, Agnes Roche was nine years old, and Honora Roche was seven years old.

"(4) That on the 20th day of December, 1899, Agnes Roche married O. J. Belt, and on the ——— day of September, 1902, Honora Roche married H. E. Sears.

"(5) That at the time of the death of Mrs. Mary A. Roche she and her husband were possessed of a large community estate, consisting of the items shown in Exhibit A to the amended original answer of defendant C. J. Swasey, filed October 26, 1903, which said property, together with the notes listed in said exhibit, were of the value of $234,032, from which should be excepted the note of A. G. Rintleman, $1,000, which was paid before the death of Mrs. Roche, leaving the value $237,032. That the community property was all the property then owned by them or either of them.

"(6) That on the 16th day of September, 1889, Thomas Roche made application to the county court of Tarrant county, Tex., to be appointed community administrator of the estate of himself and his deceased wife.

"(7) That on the same day Thos. Roche was by said court appointed community administrator of said estate of himself and wife, and duly qualified as such on the 27th day of September, 1889, giving bond as required by law, and conditioned as required by law, in the sum of $235,385.

"(8) That the sureties on said bond were Zane Cetti, C. J. Swasey, E. W. Taylor, E. E. Chase, and M. L. Lynch.

"(9) That E. E. Chase died insolvent before the beginning of this suit.

"(10) That said bond was approved duly by the court on October 10, 1889, and Thomas Roche then took charge of the community property under his appointment.

"(11) Thos. Roche disposed of property of the community estate of the value of $68,145.33, exclusive of the Tom Green county sections, and including $11,500 rents collected, and including $2,000 on the McLemore survey, item 5 of the T. Roche inventory. Some of the above properties brought more than inventory values, and one piece, item 39, $300 less, by items as follows:

Item 5.	40 acres McLemore, chg. cash....	$ 2,000 00

"(12) The Tom Green county sections, 13 in number, of the value of $8,320 at the time of the death of Mrs. Roche, and when disposed of, though inventoried at $16,640, were by Thomas Roche traded for some property in Des Moines, Iowa. The 40 acres of the McLemore survey, item 5 of the T. Roche inventory, were sold to E. E. Chase for $2,000 cash and $6,000 in notes. The notes were turned over to J. J. Roche, administrator of the estate of Thos. and Mary A. Roche, and suit brought thereon, and the whole property was bought in and taken possession of by said administrator, and sold by him as the property of said estate of Thos. and Mary A. Roche by proper orders of the county court of Tarrant county, Tex.

"(13) Thos. Roche mortgaged two pieces of the community property, to wit, items 1 and 12 of said Exhibit A, of the then value of $39,560, for $18,000.

"(14) That Thos. Roche, after the death of his wife, had no business other than that of the community, and all of his time was given to its affairs, and all of his dealings were had and done for the benefit of the community estate.

"(15) That Thomas Roche, while community administrator, kept a book showing the receipts and disbursements for and on behalf of the community, which book was lost years after the death of Thos. Roche, and years before the beginning of this suit, the same having been in the possession of J. J. Roche, administrator hereinafter referred to.

"(16) That on the 10th day of July, 1891, Thos. Roche died.

"(17) That after the death of Thos. Roche, application was made to the county court of Tarrant county, Tex., a court of competent jurisdiction, by J. J. Roche for letters of administration on the estate of Thomas Roche and of the community estate of Thomas and Mary A. Roche, and letters were granted on said estates, and J. J. Roche duly qualified as required by law, his bond being approved on November 7, 1891.

"(18) That on his qualification J. J. Roche received and inventoried, and had appraised and administered by order of the court, Zane Cetti being one of the appraisers, as the community property of Thomas and Mary Roche, the following properties, of the following values, to wit: Real estate which was on hand on the death of Mrs. Roche, and still on hand at the time of the death of Thos. Roche, undisposed of, which was, at the time of the death of Mrs. Roche, of the value of $154,641.66. Exempt personal property and Ryland mining stock in identical kind on hand at the death of Mrs. Roche, and on hand at the death of Thos. Roche, undisposed of, which at the time of the death of Mrs. Roche was of the value of $16,850, the real estate above being, at the death of Thos. Roche, and when received by the administrator, of the value of $146,950. The personal property and stock above, at the death of Thos. Roche, and when received by the administrator, of the value of $35. Cash, $8,016. Notes taken from community property sold, which were collected by the administrator of the community estate of Thomas and Mary Roche, $12,459.50. This includes Chase's note of $6,000 on which the 40 acres (McLemore) was taken back. The balance was paid in cash. Real estate acquired after the death of Mrs. Roche, when taken by the administrator, was of the value of $37,850. This was taken by the administrator of the community estate of Thos. and Mary A. Roche, and administered by him, except the Des Moines property shown below. Notes and choses in action acquired after the death of Mrs. Roche, when taken by the administrator, was of the value of $5,441.67. These notes were taken and administered as the real estate just above. Of the item $37,850, real estate, the property in Des Moines, the equity in which was of the value of $30,000 was included. This property was that which was received for the Tom Green county sections, and took its place in the community estate. That the property mortgages for $18,000 by Thos. Roche went to the administrator incumbered for that amount, the property was of the value, at the time of the death of Mrs. Roche, of $39,560, and at the time of the death of Thos. Roche, and its receipt by the administrator, of $35,000.

"(19) That Thos. Roche was not responsible for any of the decreases in values, but they occurred from causes beyond his control.

"(20) That Thos. Roche paid out, while acting as community survivor on account of the community estate, sums of money, for which he is entitled to credit amounting to $59,044.87. The item of credits includes $12,649 paid out on account of notes of Elser, Lake, Cetti, and Roche, and $10,000, being commissions at the legal rate on receipts and expenditures and household expenses. The above $59,044.87 is itemized as follows:

Attorney's fees.....	$ 250 00

"(21) That the trade involving the Tom Green county land, traded for the Des Moines, Iowa, property, was ratified by plaintiffs, and Thomas Roche should not be charged with that item, but the Des Moines property should be taken in its place. The Des Moines property was sold by the guardian of the children, and the proceeds were accounted for in settlement with them.

"(22) That the administration on the estates of Thos. Roche and the community estate of Thos. and Mary Roche is still open and pending in the county court of Tarrant county, Tex., on account of litigation and other causes, and J. J. Roche is still the administrator.

"(23) That there are now live and unsatisfied debts of the community estates of Thos. and Mary A. Roche amounting to over $200,- 000, subject to payment, by the administrator of the community estate of Thos. and Mary A. Roche, out of such assets as may be on hand.

"(24) That all assets of the community estate of Thos. & Mary A. Roche have been sold, and the estate has been finally administered, with the exception of a small balance about $3,000 on hand, which is the only fund available with which to pay the said $200,000 of community debts.

"(25) That at the time of the death of Mrs. Roche there were in existence community debts, and there were community debts in existence at the time of the death of Thos. Roche.

"(26) That of the community property turned over to the administrator, J. J. Roche, the plaintiffs Agnes and Honora Roche received the following, to wit:

The homestead of the value of.....	$10,000
The household and kitchen furniture, which was in identical kind, but seems to have been, at the time of its receipt, of no substantial value, though it was of the inventory value of $2,000 at the time of Mrs. Roche's death.
Live stock of the value of.....	35
This was in identical kind but had depreciated in value from $350.
Cash	2,300
	$12,335

"(27) That the minors had a guardian of their persons and estates, one J. F. Tierney, who was appointed about the same time as the administrator, and who frequently appeared for them in the administration proceedings, and who continued to act until the minors reached their majority, when he settled with them. He was appointed by the county court of Tarrant county, Tex., a court of competent jurisdiction, and qualified and acted under such appointment.

"(28) That the defendant Swasey and Taylor were duly adjudicated bankrupts in 1890. That no liability on the bond in suit was scheduled. That J. J. Roche, administrator of the community estate of Thos. and Mary A. Roche, had notice of the bankruptcy proceedings from their inception, as well as of the discharge. That Agnes and Honore Roche and J. F. Tierney, their guardian, did not know of the proceedings in bankruptcy aforesaid."

In the light of the decision of our Supreme Court on the former appeal we are constrained to hold with appellants upon their first and second assignments of error, to the effect that the court erred in rendering judgment in favor of appellees under the evidence. While it is true these assignments attack the judgment as being contrary to the evidence, and not specifically that it is not supported by the findings of fact, yet we are unable, for this reason, to refuse to consider the assignments, because we are of the opinion the findings of fact do not support the judgment. If the findings were sufficient, we might not go behind them, except upon an assignment specifically making that attack, and, in view of this, we perhaps erred in not reversing the judgment on the original hearing. It is unnecessary to detail the evidence, but the findings show that, at the death of appellants' mother, Mrs. Mary A. Roche, she and her husband were possessed of a large community estate of the value of about $235,000. The findings further show that during his administration Thomas Roche disposed of property of the community of the value of $68,145, and that he paid out, on account of such community estate, the sum of $59,044.87, for which he is entitled to credit. Accepting these findings the court, it would appear, should have rendered judgment in favor of appellants; but he evidently proceeded on the theory that because, as found by him (finding 23), "there are now live and unsatisfied debts of the community estate of Thos. and Mary A. Roche amounting to over $200,000, subject to payment by the administrator," the appellants could in no event recover. But we are constrained to hold that this question was determined adversely to appellees on the former appeal. An examination of the report of the case in 93 S. W. 1000 will show that the trial court there found "that there are now in existence unpaid debts in excess of $100,000, which are valid community debts of the estate of Thos. and Mary A. Roche;" and that the administration was then, as it is now, still pending. It will also appear that, even this $100,000 was far in excess of any probable liability of the appellees as bondsmen for the devastavit of their principal, Thomas Roche. If the contention were sound that the existence of valid and unpaid claims against the estate would constitute a bar to appellants' recovery, the decision of the Supreme Court would necessarily have been one of affirmation of our former judgment, even though that court had disagreed with us on the question of limitation discussed in both opinions. In other words, the Supreme Court would not have reversed and remanded the case for trial if the judgment of the district court was right upon the findings made. So that we take it to be settled that the twenty-third finding to the effect that there are now live and unsatisfied debts amounting to over $200,000, subject to payment by the administrator of the community estate of Thomas and Mary A. Roche, is upon an immaterial issue, and constitutes no defense to appellants' right of recovery.

If we are right in the above, the same reasoning also answers appellees' further contention that they were relieved from further liability when J. J. Roche, as administrator of the community estate of Thomas and Mary A. Roche, received and inventoried one-half of the property in kind belonging to such community estate at the date of the qualification of Thomas Roche. This contention was also urged in support of the judgment on the former appeal, but we did not then, nor do we now, attach any importance to it.

The fifth assignment of error is also sustained, wherein it complains of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the finding as to the items of the Loving, Daggett, and Carb releases. Evidence that "three releases of vendor's lien notes, made by various parties to Thomas Roche, reciting the payment by Thomas Roche of the sum of ——— dollars, which releases bore date after the death of his wife," is not sufficient to support the eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth items of the court's twentieth finding.

The only other findings attacked are the fourteenth and twenty-first, and these we sustain as being supported by the evidence.

The motion for rehearing is therefore granted, the original statement of facts is ordered to be filed, and the judgment of the district court is reversed, and the cause remanded.

(Court of Civil Appeals of Texas. March 20, 1909. Rehearing Denied April 10, 1909.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 112*)—MASTER'S LIABILITY FOR INJURIES—APPLIANCES FOR WORK—RAILROAD CARS.

The furnishing by a railroad company of a defective hand car to convey sectionmen to and from their work is negligence on the part of the railroad company.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 218-223; Dec. Dig. § 112.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 276*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—PROXIMATE CAUSE.

Evidence held to show that the furnishing of a defective hand car was the proximate cause of injuries of a section hand.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 950-976; Dec. Dig. § 276.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 210*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—ASSUMPTION OF RISK—DEFECTIVE APPLIANCES.

Where plaintiff was employed by the defendant as a section hand, and with other hands was furnished a defective hand car to take them to and from their work, and plaintiff was thrown on the car and injured, he did not assume the risk of injury from the use of the defective car.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 554-556; Dec. Dig. § 210.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1058*)—HARMLESS ERROR—PERSONAL EXAMINATION OF PARTY.

Plaintiff was examined by defendant's physician after he was injured, and the physician testified fully upon the trial, and it did not appear that a further examination was necessary to enable the physician to state the character of plaintiff's injuries. While testifying, plaintiff exhibited to the jury the injured parts of his body. Held, that a refusal of a request by defendant to allow its physician to examine plaintiff's injuries before the jury and testify in regard to the nature thereof was harmless error.

5. TRIAL (§ 253*)—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action against a railroad company for injuries to a section hand while operating a defective hand car, an instruction that if while plaintiff and the other sectionmen were operating the hand car, the bull wheel gave way by having been previously broken or worn, and the giving way of the wheel caused plaintiff to be injured, and that defendant in equipping the car with defective bull wheel was guilty of negligence, which was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury, they should find for the plaintiff, but otherwise to find for the defendant, is not objectionable as on the weight of the evidence in assuming that defendant equipped the hand car with a defective wheel, and in submitting only the question whether defendant equipped its car with a defective wheel when the pleadings and proof raise the issue whether defendant negligently permitted a car with a defective wheel to be operated.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Dec. Dig. § 253.*]

6. TRIAL (§ 133*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ARGUMENTS OF COUNSEL.

In an action for personal injuries against a railroad company, plaintiff's attorney said: "This railroad company prefers negroes to white men, and gives the jobs to negroes when white men want them." And, when he was informed that defendant's attorney had taken exceptions to these remarks, he stated that he desired to withdraw them, and the jury was instructed to disregard the remarks. Held, that defendant was not prejudiced by the remarks.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1060*)—HARMLESS ERROR—REMARKS OF COUNSEL.

In an action by a railroad employé to recover for injuries plaintiff's attorney in addressing the jury said that plaintiff has testified for whom he has worked for the last five or six years, and, if he was not telling the truth, the railroad company would search for the men he worked for, and would have brought them to contradict the plaintiff. Held that, while the remarks might have been improper, they were not sufficiently so to warrant a reversal of the judgment.

8. DAMAGES (§ 132*)—EXCESSIVE DAMAGES—PERMANENT INJURIES.

Where there was testimony showing that plaintiff sustained serious injuries from which he suffered much mental and physical pain, and which would cause him to continue to suffer in the future and impair his capacity to labor and earn money, a verdict of $1,500 is not excessive.

but this railroad company prefers negroes to white men, and gives the jobs to negroes when white men want them, [and] plaintiff has testified that he was a regular and industrious worker, and has testified for whom he has worked for the last five or six years and about how he was hurt. If he was not telling the truth, this railroad company would go search the whole country for the men he worked for and for the sectionmen who worked with him, and would have brought them here to contradict the plaintiff."

E. B. Perkins, D. Upthegrove, and Templeton, Crosby & Dinsmore, for appellant. B. Q. Evans, for appellee.

TALBOT, J. This is a suit for damages on account of personal injuries sustained by appellee while working for appellant as a section hand. The defendant company answered by general and special demurrers, a general denial, and by special pleas of assumed risk and contributory negligence. The case was tried before the court and a jury, and resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of the appellee for the sum of $1,500, and the railway company appealed.

Conclusions of Fact.

Appellee was in the employment of appellant, working as a section hand. He had been at work for about three weeks previous to the date of the accident which resulted in the injuries of which he complains. The section gang, of which he was a member, when engaged in working on the railroad track at different places, were conveyed over the track to and from their work on hand cars. On August 16, 1907, while appellee and three other members of the section gang were operating a hand car in the discharge of their duties, the bull wheel of the car, because of having been previously broken or badly worn, gave way, and caused appellee to be thrown on the car with great violence, injuring the spermatic cord and members thereof, and causing him to have and suffer with a disease known as varicocele. As a result of appellee's injuries, which are to some extent probably permanent, he has suffered mental and physical pain and will probably suffer such pain in the future. The furnishing of said hand car with the broken or worn bull wheel to convey appellee to and from the different places on its track in order that he might perform the service required of him was negligence on appellant's part and such negligence was the proximate cause of appellee's injuries. Appellee did not assume the risk of injury from the use of said defective car, and was not himself guilty of contributory negligence.

Conclusions of Law.

While the plaintiff was upon the witness stand testifying in his own behalf, at the suggestion of his counsel, he exhibited to the jury the injured parts of his body, after which defendant introduced Dr. C. E. Cantrell, its local physician and surgeon, and requested that Dr. Cantrell be permitted to examine plaintiff's injuries before the jury, and testify in regard to the nature and extent thereof. To the proposed examination plaintiff's counsel objected on the ground that the evidence showed that Dr. Cantrell had examined plaintiff about three days before the trial, and the objection was sustained. This action of the court is made the basis of appellant's first assignment of error. It has been held in this state, in effect, that when the plaintiff, in an action for personal injuries, in the course of his testimony exhibits the injured parts to the jury, the defendant upon proper request is entitled to have a medical expert of his own selection to examine the parts in the presence of the jury and testify in relation thereto. Railway Company v. Langston (Tex. Civ. App.) 47 S. W. 1027; Id., 92 Tex. 714, 50 S. W. 574, 51 S. W. 331. But we are of the opinion there was no material error in refusing the defendant's request in this instance. The testimony shows, and in explanation of the ruling upon the question, the trial judge in a statement appended to the bill of exceptions reserved says: "Dr. C. E. Cantrell was the first man to examine him [plaintiff] after he was injured, examining him on the same evening when he was injured. The proof also showed that Dr. Cantrell was the last man that had examined him before the trial; he having examined him the day before the trial." In further explanation of his ruling the judge says: "The request was made near the close of the case, and I did not compel the parties to submit to the examination because I regarded the question as coming too late, and because I believed that the railway company had had ample opportunity for Dr. Cantrell, a local surgeon, to examine him." Dr. Cantrell, it seems, testified fully upon the trial, and it does not appear that a further examination of the plaintiff by him was necessary to enable him to more definitely and accurately state the character and extent of plaintiff's injuries. No such claim was or is made by appellant. The plaintiff, at the times stated by the court in his explanation appended to the bill of exceptions willingly submitted to the examination made by Dr. Cantrell, and no obstacle was interposed by him or encountered in said examination to a thorough examination and ascertainment of the exact nature of plaintiff's injuries in so far as a knowledge of them could be acquired by such an examination as the skill of the doctor would enable him to make. It not appearing that the examination requested was necessary to a full or fuller presentation of all the facts in relation to plaintiff's injuries, appellant has sustained no substantial injury by the court's action, and it therefore furnishes no good reason for a reversal of the case. The case is clearly distinguishable in the facts from the case cited. In that case the question was whether or not the plaintiff, whose legs had been amputated, was then or would be able in the future with proper care and treatment to wear or use artificial limbs. The physician offered by the railway company to make the examination before the jury had not previously examined the plaintiff, and stated that, if they were permitted to examine her, they could with reasonable certainty determine whether the stumps of her limbs would ever get well enough for her to wear artificial limbs. A physician for plaintiff had testified that she could not use artificial limbs, and under those circumstances the court said the proposed examination should have been allowed.

Appellant's second assignment of error complains of the following paragraph of the court's charge, viz.: "Now, if you find from the evidence that on that date, while plaintiff and three other men were engaged in operating a hand car on the defendant's road east of Greenville, going to their work, the bull wheel of the hand car gave way, and if you further find that it gave way by having been previously broken or by having been worn, and if you further find that the giving away of the bull wheel, if it did, caused plaintiff to be thrown on the car with great violence, and he was thereby injured as claimed in his petition, and if you further find that the defendant in equipping the hand car with a bull wheel which was defective or worn, as claimed in the petition, if you find that it was defective or worn, was guilty of negligence, as that term is defined in the first paragraph of this charge, and if you further find that such negligence, if any, was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries, if any, then you will find for the plaintiff, but, unless you so believe, you will find for the defendant." This clause of the charge is objected to on the ground (1) that it is upon the weight of the evidence, in that it assumes that the defendant equipped the hand car with a bull wheel which was defective or worn when there was no evidence tending to show that the defendant had equipped said car with a defective or worn bull wheel; (2) that the charge fails to submit to the jury the question of negligence as made by the pleadings and proof in this, the pleadings and proof raised the issue, whether the defendant negligently permitted a hand car having a broken or worn bull wheel to be operated, but that the court submits to the jury as a matter of negligence only the question, whether the defendant equipped its hand car with a defective or worn bull wheel. The charge was not upon the weight of the evidence, nor do we think appellant has suffered any injury by reason of the particular question of negligence on appellant's part, submitted for the determination of the jury or the manner in which it was submitted. We are unable to see any material difference in the issue submitted to the jury, and that which appellant contends should have been submitted. The substance of the issue made by plaintiff's petition, and the evidence offered by him was that appellant furnished him a defective hand car to be used in the discharge of his duties, which was negligence on its part, and that, by reason of such negligence, he was injured. This was the gravamen of the charge, and the testimony was amply sufficient to authorize the submission of the issue to the jury. Plaintiff alleged in substance that the defendant furnished the section gang of which he was a member three hand cars which were used, and necessary for the purpose, to carry the men to and from their work, and to carry the tools and material to the different points along the railroad; that, while he and other sectionmen were engaged in operating one of said cars for the purpose of carrying the men to their work, the bull wheel of the car gave way by having been previously broken or having been worn, etc., and he was thereby thrown upon the car and injured. Appellant was undoubtedly responsible for the equipment of the car, and the undisputed evidence shows, as we understand it, that the bull wheel was broken or defective by reason of having been badly worn previous to the day the accident occurred. So that the jury was authorized to find that appellant had equipped the car furnished appellee with a bull wheel which was defective or worn, and that in so equipping and furnishing said car appellant was guilty of negligence. The jury in our opinion was in no way misled by the form of the charge, and the assignment complaining of it will be overruled.

The third and fourth assignments complain, respectively, of certain remarks made by counsel for appellee in his closing argument to the jury. The record shows that plaintiff's attorney, after he had concluded his argument, and upon being informed that exceptions had been taken to the remarks complained of in the third assignment, again addressed the jury, and stated to them that said remarks may have been unjustifiable, and that he desired to withdraw them, and, in addition thereto, the jury was instructed by the court to disregard said remarks. This, in view of the character of the remarks, justifies the conclusion that appellant was not prejudiced by them. And if, in view of the evidence, it can be said that the remarks complained of by the fourth assignment were improper, still we are not prepared to say that they so far exceeded the bounds of legitimate argument as to warrant a reversal of the judgment.

Nor do we think this court would be justified in holding that the verdict is excessive. There was testimony from which the jury could conclude that appellee sustained serious injuries, from which he suffered much mental and physical pain, and which will, by reason of their injurious effects, cause him to continue to so suffer in the future, and impair his capacity to labor and earn money.

Finding no reversible error in the record, the judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from District Court, Henderson County; B. H. Gardner, Judge.

Action by R. C. Clayton against the St. Louis Southwestern Railway Company of Texas. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. B. Perkins, D. Upthegrove, R. S. Neblett, and W. R. Bishop, for appellant. Miller & Royall, for appellee.

BOOKHOUT, J. This suit was instituted on the 15th day of July, 1907, by appellee. On the 5th of February, 1908, amended petition was filed, upon which the case was tried.

The appellee sought to recover damages caused by the destruction of crops grown upon about 40 acres of land described in plaintiff's petition, and also sought to recover damages for depreciation in the land. The damages to the land and to the crops were alleged to have been caused by overflow brought about through the negligence of appellant in diverting the water from a creek running through appellee's land, and carrying the same off in ditches which were improperly and negligently constructed.

It was alleged that the railroad company had for years maintained a culvert in the channel of said creek where the said railroad crosses same, but that defendant during the two years immediately preceding the institution of the suit intentionally and negligently caused the dirt to be removed on each side of said culvert or bridge and railroad track, and opened up ditches on each side of said railroad track running in the direction of said railroad, but that said ditches were insufficient to carry the water, and that by reason of said excavation and the cutting of said ditches, and their insufficiency, the water flowing in said creek through its natural channel was caused to leave the same and flow over and across plaintiff's said land and crops washing the soil therefrom, which resulted in deep gullies being made through plaintiff's said land and depositing white sand from said branch or its tributaries on said land, and caused the water to remain on said land and crops for long periods of time, especially during the months of January, February, March, April, May, June, and July, 1907. A trial resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of plaintiff for $250. Defendant's motion for new trial having been overruled, an appeal was perfected.

Conclusions of Fact.

Appellee owns 40 acres of land in Henderson county through which the St. Louis Southwestern Railway Company of Texas constructed its railroad, the same running east and west through said land. Twenty acres of the land is cleared, and in the years 1905, 1906, 1907, and 1908 were fenced, and had crops growing thereon. Twenty acres of the land was not cleared. About 13 acres of the cultivated land lies south of the railroad and the remainder lies north of it. There is a branch running through the land in a northerly direction. When the railroad was constructed, a culvert was built under the track through which this branch flowed from the south side of the railroad to its north side. The appellee acquired the land after the railroad and culvert were constructed. The agents, servants, and employes of the appellant at various times dug its ditches on the north and south side of the railroad, and caused the water from the branch during wet seasons to be diverted through these ditches upon the land of appellee, overflowing the same at different times in 1905, 1906, 1907, and a part of 1908, destroying his growing crops thereon. The water thus diverted washed gullies in the land, and caused dirt and sand to be deposited thereon, permanently injuring the land. The appellant was guilty of negligence in causing these ditches to be dug and in diverting the water from the branch upon the property of appellee. By these acts appellee has sustained damage in the amount of the verdict and judgment.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Conclusions of Law.

Appellant assigns as error the court's refusal to give its special charge No. 5, as follows: "Gentlemen of the Jury: You are instructed at the request of the defendant that if you believe from the evidence that the defendant more than four years prior to the 15th day of July, 1907, by any of the acts alleged in plaintiff's petition, caused the water to leave the natural outlet through the creek and flow over the land of plaintiff and damage same, then you cannot find for plaintiff any damage to his land, if there was damage to his land, even though you believe from the evidence that the damage, if any, was done less than four years before the 15th day of July, 1907." The proposition presented is that the act of the defendant in minimizing the natural outlet of the water of the creek which flowed through plaintiff's land, and diverting the same through ditches illegally and negligently constructed, was unlawful, and an invasion of the rights of the landowner, and the cause of action accrued when the acts were done, and would be barred in two years from date, even though the actual overflow which caused the damage occurred less than two years before the institution of the suit. This proposition is not sustained. The ditches were dug on the railroad right of way, and not on the property of appellee. The injury to appellee resulted not from the digging of the ditches, but from the diversion of the water from the branch through these ditches, causing the same at times to overflow appellee's land, depositing sand and dirt thereon, and washing gullies therein, and destroying crops growing thereon at the time of such overflows. The appellant had the right to dig the ditches on its right of way. The appellee's cause of action did not arise until his land was overflowed and damaged and his crops destroyed. This occurred within two years prior to the bringing of the suit. Waterworks v. Kennedy, 70 Tex. 234, 8 S. W. 36; Railway Co. v. Goldman (Tex. Civ. App.) 28 S. W. 267.

The appellant requested and the court refused its special charge No. 7 as follows: "Gentlemen of the Jury: The proof shows that the ditch on the south side of the railroad was constructed before the plaintiff purchased the land. Now, if you believe from the evidence that such construction of the ditch caused the water to overflow the land of plaintiff and damage the same and damage his crops, then you will find for the defendant." It is contended that the court erred in refusing said charge. This contention is not sustained. The fact that the ditches were dug before appellee acquired the 40-acre farm furnishes no defense to his suit, since appellant could not acquire a permanent right to injure the property as against purchasers acquiring it subsequent to the digging of the ditches. T. & P. Ry. v. Maddox, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 297, 63 S. W. 134.

Error is assigned to the twelfth paragraph of the court's charge, reading as follows: "You will also allow plaintiff the difference between the market value just before and just after the injury of any land of plaintiff, if any, which the evidence shows to be permanently damaged, if any, as the proximate result of defendant's negligence, if any." There was evidence that the land was injured in value by the deposit of dirt and sand thereon and the washing of ridges or gullies therein. The witnesses for the plaintiff testified that the land was worth $100 per acre prior to the injuries complained of, and since the damage the land is worth only one-half that amount. Where the evidence shows permanent injury to the land, the measure of damages is the difference between the market value just before and just after the injury. Railway Co. v. Maddox, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 297, 63 S. W. 134; Railway Co. v. Elam, 1 White & W. Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 445. The charge was correct.

No reversible error having been pointed out in the record, the judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Jefferson Chancery Court; John M. Elliott, Chancellor.

Suit by the Bank of Pine Bluff and others against Minnie Levi and others. From a decree dismissing the complaint for want of equity, complainants appeal. Affirmed.

White & Althelmer, for appellants. Irving Reinberger, for appellees.

FRAUMENTHAL, J. The appellants are a part of the creditors of the estate of Hanchi Bloom, deceased, and they instituted this suit, by an original bill in equity, to set aside an order of the Jefferson chancery court confirming a sale of land made under a decree of foreclosure of a mortgage in that court in a cause wherein Eugene C. Arnold et al. were plaintiffs and Sidney Well, administrator of said estate, et al., were defendants. Hanchi Bloom departed this life intestate on November 2, 1905, and left surviving her two children, the appellees Minnie Levi and Edna Straus. The other appellee, Sidney Well, was appointed administrator of her estate. On June 14, 1905, Hanchi Bloom executed a mortgage upon two lots in the city of Pine Bluff, Ark., to Eugene C. Arnold, in order to secure the payment of a note for $3,000 and interest executed by her, to Rufus Arnold, trustee. After her death Eugene C. Arnold and Rufus Arnold, trustee, as plaintiffs instituted suit in the Jefferson chancery court against Sidney Well as administrator of said estate, and Minnie Levi and Edna Straus as heirs of Hanchi Bloom, deceased, for the foreclosure of said mortgage. A decree was duly entered in their favor for the amount of said note and subjecting said land to the payment thereof, and to that end decreeing the sale of said lots. Edward Brewster was appointed commissioner to make the sale, and, after due advertisement by published notice as prescribed by law, he sold the lots to said Minnie Levi and Edna Straus for $3,500 on December 27, 1906, and on the same day filed his written report of the sale in the said chancery court. On December 28, 1906, the said chancery court by decree confirmed said sale, and said decree, amongst other things, states: "And, it further appearing to the satisfaction of the court that said sum is a fair consideration for said property, the said report is in all things approved and the sale herein is confirmed." Thereafter, in pursuance of said sale, the commissioner executed a deed for said lots to said Minnie Levi and Edna Straus, which was approved by and duly acknowledged in said Chancery court. On January 25, 1907, this suit was instituted to set aside said decree confirming said sale, for the reasons as alleged in the complaint, that the price is inadequate, and the sale was not conducted in a fair manner, that there was collusion between the seller and buyer and bids were stifled, and also because there were certain irregularities in the making of said sale. Complainants offered to refund the full amount of the bid, and asked that the deed to the purchasers be canceled and a resale of the land be made. The appellees denied all the material allegations of the complaint in their respective answers. Upon a hearing of the cause upon the pleadings and testimony, the chancery court dismissed the complaint for the want of equity, and from that decree this appeal is prosecuted.

The cause that is now presented on appeal to this court is not an appeal from the order or decree of the chancery court confirming the sale of the land, but it is an effort by an original proceeding to set aside that decree. The order confirming a judicial sale is in the nature of a final judgment or decree, and has the same force and effect as any other final decree or judgment. In the original suit wherein the decree of sale is made there is some measure of discretion, both as to the manner and conditions of a sale as well as to ordering or refusing a resale. The chancellor will always make such provisions as to notice and other conditions as will protect the rights of all interested; and, after the sale has been made, he will before confirmation see that no wrong has been accomplished in and by the manner in which it was conducted. But the purpose of the law is that such sales shall be final; and, to insure reliance upon such sales, it is essential that no sale be set aside for reasons that are not cogent, or on account of matters which ought to have been attended to by the complaining parties before the sale. And so it has been held that, even before confirmation of sale, a party is not entitled to have the sale set aside upon an offer of a large advance upon the purchaser's bid if the land brought its market value. Colonial & U. S. Mortgage Co. v. Sweet, 65 Ark. 152, 45 S. W. 60, 67 Am. St. Rep. 910; Pewabic Mining Co. v. Mason, 145 U. S. 349, 12 Sup. Ct. 887, 36 L. Ed. 732. Before the confirmation of the commissioner's sale, irregularities may be shown that the sale was not made in accordance with the provisions of the decree, or any misconduct or unfairness may be shown, in order to set aside such sale. And upon all these matters the chancery court passes when it makes its decree of confirmation. And from such order or decree of confirmation an appeal lies. Rorer on Judicial Sales, § 182. But, after a confirmation of the sale has been made by order of the court, all defects and irregularities in the conduct of the sale are cured, and every presumption will be indulged in favor of its fairness and regularity. Waldo v. Thweatt, 64 Ark. 126, 40 S. W. 782; Du Hadaway v. Driver, 75 Ark. 9, 86 S. W. 807; Culver Lumber Co. v. Culver, 81 Ark. 102, 99 S. W. 391, 118 Am. St. Rep. 17; Updegraff v. Marked Tree Lumber Co., 83 Ark. 154, 103 S. W. 606. Such a decree is, in effect, the judgment of a superior court which may be set aside on appeal, but the validity of which cannot be attacked except on account of fraud. But the fraud which entitles a party to impeach a judgment must be fraud extrinsic of the matter tried in the cause. It must not consist of any false or fraudulent act or testimony, the truth of which was or might have been in issue in the proceeding before the court which resulted in the judgment that is thus assailed. It must be a fraud practiced upon the court in the procurement of the judgment. Scott v. Penn, 68 Ark. 492, 60 S. W. 235; James v. Gibson, 73 Ark. 440, 84 S. W. 485; Boynton v. Ashabanner, 75 Ark. 415, 88 S. W. 566, 1011, 91 S. W. 20; Parker v. Bowman, 83 Ark. 508, 104 S. W. 158; United States v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 61, 25 L. Ed. 93; Moffat v. United States, 112 U. S. 24, 5 Sup. Ct. 10, 28 L. Ed. 623.

Now, it is not contended in this case that any fraud was practiced in the procurement of the original decree of foreclosure in the case of Arnold et al. v. Weil, Adm'r, et al., under which the sale was made. The only attack that is made is on the decree or order of confirmation of that sale. In the making of this sale, Brewster was commissioner, and represented the court as the vendor. There is no contention, and not even a suggestion by appellants, that the commissioner was guilty of any act of omission or commission, or of any connivance with the purchasers or any other party in the conduct of the sale that was fraudulent or that had the semblance of fraud. He advertised the sale in the manner and for the time prescribed by the decree and the law. He conducted the sale in an open, public, and fair manner. He made report in writing of every act done in the conduct of the sale. Upon the hearing of this report of sale, these acts and the manner of the conduct of the sale were in issue. Every alleged irregularity in the sale was in issue. The adequacy of the price and the bid was inquired into, and all these issues were determined by the court when it entered its decree. The appellees, Minnie Levi and Edna Straus, had a legal right to bid and become purchasers at the sale; and their bid was reported to and passed on by the court. If by inattention to or lack of knowledge of the time of sale the appellants did not attend the sale, this could not effect the regularity or fairness of the sale or the invalidity of the order confirming it. The published notice was all the notice that the provisions of the decree or the law required, and all that was necessary.

It is contended by appellants that the attorney of the administrator of the estate of Hanchi Bloom procured the institution of the foreclosure suit. That is controverted, and the finding of the chancellor is against that contention. But the decree of foreclosure itself is not attacked by defendants. The plaintiffs in the foreclosure suit had the right to bring the suit, no matter at whose suggestion. It is conceded that their debt and mortgage were honest, and that the decree of foreclosure is just and correct.

It is insisted that the attorney of the administrator assisted in the preparation of the decree of foreclosure against the estate, and failed to notify these appellants, who were creditors of the estate, of the decree of foreclosure or of the date of the sale, and that his acts in being instrumental in and his activity for these foreclosure proceedings were inconsistent with his duties as such attorney of the administrator. The attorney insists that his acts were not inconsistent with his duties, that other attorneys instituted the foreclosure suit; and, though he suggested the suit and assisted in the preparation of the foreclosure decree, still that was not inconsistent with his duties to the estate, inasmuch as the debt and mortgage were just and there was no defense thereto. But, in whatever view the acts and conduct of the attorney of the estate may be looked upon, they did not constitute a fraud upon the chancery court in the procurement either of the decree of foreclosure or the decree of confirmation. The plaintiffs in that suit had the right to foreclose the mortgage and to procure the sale of the land thereunder, no matter at whose suggestion, and no fraud was practiced on the court when this was done.

Now, if the administrator of the estate or the attorney of such administrator had been the purchaser at the sale, then a different question would arise. "No one can be permitted to purchase an interest where he has a duty to perform that is inconsistent with the character of the purchaser." And so the policy of the law and of justice will not permit the administrator or the attorney of the administrator to buy property in the course of litigation, of which property they have the management or in which litigation they are engaged. A trustee and the attorney of a trustee cannot deal with trust property in any manner for his own benefit. Montgomery v. Black, 75 Ark. 184, 86 S. W. 1006; West v. Waddill, 33 Ark. 575; Wright v. Walker, 30 Ark. 44. But in this case the administrator of the estate and the attorney of the administrator did not purchase at said sale, and were not interested in any manner in said purchase. The appellees Minnie Levi and Edna Straus were the sole purchasers at the sale, and no other person was directly or indirectly under the evidence interested with them in the purchase. They occupied no position or relation of trust or confidence towards the estate or any of the appellants. They had the right to purchase at said sale as any person who was a stranger to the proceedings could have done. They were not affected by any act or conduct of the administrator or of his attorney, even if such act could be held to have been constructively fraudulent. Under the evidence, we do not find that there was any concert of action or any combination between these purchasers and the administrator or his attorney by which their purchase can be impeached for fraud either in fact or by construction. The plaintiff in the foreclosure suit proceeded, as he had a right to do, to secure the sale of the lots under the provisions of the law. The appellees Minnie Levi and Edna Straus had a right to purchase; and in such purchase, under the evidence, they were not connected directly or indirectly with the administrator or his attorney. Under the testimony they paid a reasonably fair price for the lots. The lots were variously estimated as being worth from $3,800 to $5,000, and they paid $3,500 therefor. Even if it could be found that this price was inadequate, it was not sufficiently inadequate to set aside the sale upon an original hearing of the report of the commissioner. George v. Norwood, 77 Ark. 216, 91 S. W. 557, 113 Am. St. Rep. 143.

The appellants refer to some other matters which they claim effect the merits of the case. They urge that there is evidence of stifling of bids, but we do not think they are sustained in this by the testimony. They suggest that the lots were sold jointly, that the notice of sale did not fix the hour of the sale, and some minor defects, all of which, if shown by the evidence, were cured by the decree of confirmation. The issues of fact involved in this suit were presented to the chancellor, and some of them on two occasions. Some of them were presented when the original decree confirming the commissioner's sale was entered; and all of them when the decree in this case was entered. On both occasions he found that the evidence justified the confirmation of said sale. Upon a careful examination of the evidence we cannot say that the finding of the chancellor is against the preponderance of the evidence. Under such circumstances his finding on appeal will not be disturbed. Whitehead v. Henderson, 67 Ark. 200, 56 S. W. 1065; Hinkle v. Broadwater, 73 Ark. 439, 84 S. W. 510.

The decree is therefore affirmed.

PRIEST v. HODGES et al.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. April 5, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1001*)—VERDICT—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—REVIEW.

The court on appeal in determining whether there is sufficient evidence to sustain the verdict must take that view of it which is most favorable to the successful party.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3923-3934; Dec. Dig. § 1001.*]

2. CHATTEL MORTGAGES (§ 235*)—PAYMENT OF DEBT SECURED—EVIDENCE.

On the issue whether a chattel mortgage debt was paid by the delivery of cotton to the creditor, the evidence held not to show payment of the debt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Chattel Mortgages, Dec. Dig. § 235.*]

3. SALES (§ 1*)—CONTRACTS—INTENTION OF PARTIES.

To constitute a sale of a chattel, there must be an intention and an offer to sell, and an acceptance of the offer and an intention to buy, and the court in determining whether title to a chattel has passed must consider the intention of the parties and the assent of both parties to a sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. 1; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 7, pp. 6291-6306; vol. 8, p. 7793.]

4. SALES (§ 208*)—PASSING OF TITLE.

Where, by the contract of sale, there remains something to be done as between the seller and buyer to ascertain the quantity or price of the article, the title does not pass; but, where it was the intention of the parties that the article should be considered as having been delivered, the intention will govern, though there remains something to be done to determine the quantity or value thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 561-564; Dec. Dig. § 208.*]

5. SALES (§ 212*)—ACTS CONSTITUTING SALE.

A seller of cotton considered it necessary to weigh it before the sale thereof was complete, and he placed it at scales to be weighed and interviewed the buyer about the weighing. The buyer was unable to attend to the matter, and did nothing to indicate an acceptance of the property. Held, that the sale was not complete, and title did not pass to the buyer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 569; Dec. Dig. § 212.*]

6. SALES (§ 212*)—ACTS CONSTITUTING SALE.

The fact that a seller has performed all he can do does not show a sale, but it is necessary to show that the buyer actually accepted the chattels, and, until the buyer does some act evincing an intention to accept, the title remains at the risk of the seller.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Lonoke County; Eugene Lankford, Judge.

Action by W. R. Priest against E. R. Hodges and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Thos. C. Trimble, Jr., for appellant.

FRAUENTHAL, J. This is a replevin suit, which was instituted by the plaintiff,

W. R. Priest, against the defendant E. R. Hodges for the recovery of the possession of a mule. The plaintiff claimed the property by virtue of a mortgage which had been executed to him by one W. I. Rainey to secure the payment of a note for $40 and interest. The defendant claimed to be the owner of the property by purchase from parties who had obtained it from said mortgagor; and, upon his motion, W. I. Rainey was made a party defendant to the suit. The defendants admitted the execution and validity of the mortgage and note, but alleged that all the indebtedness mentioned in the mortgage, except $5, had been paid, and in their answer made tender thereof. They also alleged that plaintiff had released the mule from the mortgage. The jury returned a verdict for the defendants; and, from the judgment rendered thereon, plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

The only question presented by this appeal is whether or not there is sufficient evidence to sustain the verdict of the jury. The only witnesses who testified in the case were the defendant Rainey and the plaintiff, Priest. We must in determining whether there is sufficient evidence to sustain the verdict take that view of it which is most favorable to the defendants. From the testimony of the defendant Rainey it would appear that he executed the note and mortgage to plaintiff, and that the mortgage conveyed the mule in controversy and one bale of cotton. On December 24th Rainey brought to town a bale of cotton, and threw the same on the scales on the platform at the depot where the plaintiff had his cotton weighed. He supposed that the scales were public scales, though plaintiff had his cotton weighed there. He then went to plaintiff's store and spoke to plaintiff of the cotton; and plaintiff, being busy with his customers, told him that he could not attend to it. He then left, and returned the same evening in order to weigh the cotton, but plaintiff was still busy, and nothing was done or said relative to the cotton. During the night the depot and cotton were destroyed by fire. He did not take any weight of the cotton, and no price for the cotton was mentioned, and plaintiff did not see the cotton, so far as the testimony shows, nor did plaintiff tell Rainey where to put the cotton, and did not speak to him relative to it, except to tell him that he had no time to attend to the matter. A few days before he brought the bale of cotton in, Rainey told plaintiff that he had traded the mule, but that he still had the cotton; and the plaintiff then told him that the cotton was what he wanted, and that if he would bring him the cotton and pay the indebtedness before Christmas, he would knock off the interest. This is the entire evidence in its most favorable aspect for defendants. From this we do not find any evidence which sustains the contention that plaintiff released the mule from the mortgage. Rainey traded the mule before speaking to plaintiff about it, and, after he had thus traded, he then told him that he had traded it, and, in order to placate him, told plaintiff that he still had cotton. The plaintiff did not say that he consented to the trading of the mule; but, like one who had by this information become anxious for the payment of his debt, he told Rainey that, if he would bring him cotton and pay the debt, he would knock off the interest. Neither by his words nor by act did plaintiff indicate that he gave his consent to the trading of the mule which had been done by Rainey, or that he released the mule. The above was all the testimony of any conversation or circumstance relative to the release of the mule; and we do not think that it is sufficient to sustain a finding that plaintiff released the mule from the mortgage.

It is contended by defendants that Rainey paid the mortgage debt. The only payment that it is claimed that he made is by the alleged sale of the bale of cotton to plaintiff. The undisputed evidence is that the amount of the debt was $40 and some interest. There is no evidence at all as to the weight of the bale of cotton or as to its quality or value. There is no testimony showing whether it was worth the amount of the debt. It is true that the answer of defendant tenders the sum of $5 which he claims he still owes on the indebtedness, but there was no testimony as to this. So that, even if Rainey sold the bale of cotton to plaintiff, the evidence is not sufficient to show that the mortgage indebtedness was thereby paid in full.

The question now recurs as to whether or not Rainey sold the cotton to plaintiff. It is an elementary principle of law that it is essential to the sale of a chattel, like in every contract, that there must be a meeting of the minds and an agreement by both of the parties to the sale and purchase; that is to say, upon the one part there must be an intention and offer to sell, and on the other part an acceptance of such offer and an intention to buy. The intention of the seller to sell and his offer of the property is not alone sufficient to constitute a contract of sale. The purchaser must also intend to buy and also accept the offer before there can be a completed sale. So that, in determining whether the title to a chattel has or has not passed, the primary consideration is the intention of the parties and the assent of both parties to the sale. 24 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law (2d Ed.) 1047; Ketchum v. Duncan, 96 U. S. 659, 24 L. Ed. 868.

It is urged by counsel for appellant that, when something remains to be done as between the vendor and vendee in relation to the chattel, the title will not pass; and so it is urged in this case that, inasmuch as the quantity and the price of the chattel were not agreed on, it was necessary before the title passed that the cotton should have been weighed and the price determined. This is correct in cases where by the contract or from the intention of the parties there remains something to be done as between the vendor and vendee of personal property, as, for instance, in order to ascertain the quantity or the price of the chattel. But, if it clearly appears that it was the intention of the parties that it should be deemed and considered that the property has been delivered and the ownership of the property has been abandoned by the one and accepted by the other, and the title has actually passed, then such intention will govern, although there remains something to be done to determine the total quantity or value of the article. Fagan v. Faulkner, 5 Ark. 161; Chamblee v. McKenzie, 31 Ark. 155; Gans v. Holland Adm'r, 37 Ark. 483; Shaul v. Harrington, 54 Ark. 305, 15 S. W. 835; Lynch v. Daggett, 62 Ark. 592, 37 S. W. 227. In this case the testimony of Rainey, the seller, indicates that he considered it necessary to weigh the cotton, because on the morning when he brought the cotton in he placed it at certain scales, and then went to see the plaintiff about the weighing of it, and, finding the plaintiff unable to attend to the matter, he left, and then returned in the evening in order to weigh the cotton; so that his testimony would indicate that it was the intention of the parties that the cotton should be weighed before the completed sale thereof should be made.

But, although this should be considered persuasive and not conclusive in the case, still there is another element necessary to a completed sale which is lacking in this case. It is essential that there must be an intention on the part of the alleged vendee to accept the property before the title passes. It is not sufficient to show that the vendor has performed all that he can do, that he has been willing to or has placed the property in such position as to turn it over to the vendee; but it is necessary to go farther, and show by evidence that the vendee has actually accepted the property. And, until the alleged vendee does some act or evinces an intention to appropriate or accept the property, the same will be and remain at the risk of the vendor. Kaufman v. Stone, 25 Ark. 336; Jones v. Pearce, 25 Ark. 545; Tierman v. Jackson, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 580, 8 L. Ed. 234. Now in this case there is no testimony or circumstance going to show that the plaintiff accepted the cotton or considered the cotton as belonging to him, or intended that the title should be in him. The evidence of the appellee is to the contrary. By his testimony it is shown that plaintiff never saw the cotton; that the only thing said about the cotton was relative to weighing it; and that he declined paying any attention to it. This shows that the plaintiff not only did not accept the bale, but intended that some other act should be done before he did accept it. It shows that plaintiff did not assume ownership over it, but indicates that he intended that it should be weighed and the price fixed before he did assume ownership over it. The evidence shows that Rainey did not abandon his control over the cotton because he left with the intention of returning in order to weigh the property and then to make all necessary transactions relative to the completion of the sale of the bale of cotton. But, no matter what the intent of Rainey may have been, the evidence in the case wholly fails to show that the plaintiff accepted the property, or that he intended that the ownership thereof should be in him. The evidence therefore does not show such a delivery as to pass the title to the property to the plaintiff. The simple hauling of the cotton to the depot platform and there placing it on the scale was not sufficient. The evidence must further show that the plaintiff also accepted the cotton and intended that it was then his property. There is no evidence that shows this. Giving the evidence its strongest probative force in favor of the appellees, it does not show that there was a completed sale of the bale of cotton.

It follows, therefore, that there is not sufficient evidence to sustain the verdict of the jury.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

GANTT et al. v. HILDRETH et al.

(Supreme Court of Arkansas. April 5, 1909.)

HOMESTEAD (§ 118*)—INCUMBRANCE—JOINDER OF HUSBAND AND WIFE.

A mortgage of the homestead wherein the wife expressly relinquishes all her rights of homestead and executed by her, though her name does not appear in the granting clause, satisfies Kirby's Dig. § 3901, avoiding a mortgage of the homestead of a married man, unless his wife joins in its execution.

Appeal from Columbia Chancery Court; E. O. Mahoney, Chancellor.

Action by N. J. Gantt and others against Ola Hildreth and others. From the decree in their favor, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed in part, and reversed in part and remanded, with directions.

Bridges, Wooldridge & Gantt, for appellants. Stevens & Stevens, for appellees.

BATTLE, J. N. J. Gantt and T. P. Gantt, partners doing business under the firm name and style of the Gantt Mercantile Company, and A. B. Henderson, trustee, instituted a suit against Ola Hildreth, the widow, and Bertha Hildreth, Chester Hildreth, and Dewey Hildreth, heirs at law of Will B.

Hildreth, deceased, to foreclose a deed of trust executed by Will B. Hildreth in his lifetime and by Ola Hildreth, his wife, to secure the payment of two promissory notes that were executed by Will B. Hildreth to the Gantt Mercantile Company. The deed of trust conveyed certain lands of Will B. Hildreth, which constituted his homestead, to A. B. Henderson in trust to secure the payment of the notes. It was executed on the 3d day of March, 1906. At that time Ola Hildreth was his wife, and joined with him in executing the deed, but not in the granting clause. The deed concludes as follows:

"And I, Ola Hildreth, wife of the said Will B. Hildreth, for and on my part and behalf, and for the consideration and purposes herein expressed do hereby freely and fully relinquish and release unto the said A. B. Henderson as trustee, all my rights of dower and homestead in and to the aforesaid granted and bargained lands and premises. * * *

"In witness whereof, we hereunto set our hands and seals.

"[Signed] Will B. Hildreth. [Seal.]

"Ola Hildreth. [Seal.]"

They acknowledged the deed; the wife, in the absence of her husband, declaring that she had of her own free will signed and sealed the relinquishment of dower and homestead for the consideration and purposes therein contained and set forth without compulsion or undue influence of her husband.

Will B. Hildreth died on the 10th day of August, 1906, leaving surviving him Ola Hildreth, his widow, and the defendants Bertha, Chester, and Dewey Hildreth, his children and heirs at law. The lands conveyed by the deed constituted his homestead at the time of his death, and his heirs and children were minors. He purchased one of the tracts constituting his homestead from one Manees at the price of $200, and the Gantt Mercantile Company furnished the money to pay the same, and it was secured with other indebtedness by the deed.

The court dismissed the complaint as to the lands, except the tract purchased from Manees, and as to that held and decreed that the plaintiffs had a lien for the $200 advanced to pay for it, and interest thereon, and ordered that it be sold to satisfy the lien. The plaintiffs appealed.

The court found that Ola Hildreth did not join in the execution of the deed of trust, nor acknowledge the execution of the same, and that the deed was void as to all the land, except the tract for which the $200 was paid. This finding was based upon section 3901 of Kirby's Digest, which provides: "No conveyance, mortgage or other instrument affecting the homestead of any married man shall be of any validity except for taxes, laborer's and mechanics' liens, and the purchase money, unless his wife joins in the execution of such instrument and acknowledges the same."

In considering this statute in Pipkin v. Williams, 57 Ark. 242, 246, 21 S. W. 433, 434, 38 Am. St. Rep. 241, this court said: "The requirements of the act are two: First, that the wife shall join in the execution of the deed; and, second, that she acknowledge it. It demands substantive acts only, and prescribes no particular manner of performing them. If she actually join in executing the deed, and then acknowledges its execution before an officer authorized to certify acknowledgments, she has done all the substantive acts required, and, as the statute prescribes no form or manner of doing them, there can be no noncompliance with its provisions for matter of form merely. Whenever a substantial compliance appears, the statute is satisfied, and the deed will be valid."

In speaking of the deed in question in that case, the court further said: "It is in form a deed poll, and its premises indicate that M. F. Lake is the sole grantor. The name of his wife does not appear in the granting part nor elsewhere in the body of the deed. It appears only after the usual covenants of warranty in a clause which declares that she releases to the grantee all her right or possibility of dower. If this clause were not in the deed, it would perhaps be proper to hold that the fact of her signing it evidenced an intention to join in its execution, and give it whatever effect might legally result from her executing it; but it expressly declares what her purpose was, and restricts the operation of the deed as against her to the release of her dower."

In Bluff City Lumber Co. v. Bloom, 64 Ark. 492, 43 S. W. 503, a conveyance of a married man's homestead was involved. The wife relinquished to the grantee her right of dower in the land, but did not join in the granting part of the deed. Mr. Justice Riddick, delivering the opinion of the court in that case, said: "But at the time her mortgage was executed the land mortgaged was the homestead of Floyd, and his wife did not join in the granting clause of the deed, as required by statute in mortgages or other conveyances of a homestead. Sand. & H. Dig. § 3713. By reason of the failure to comply with the statute in this respect the mortgage upon the homestead was, to quote the language of this court in a similar case, 'a nullity, and left the title as though it had never been made.' Pipkin v. Williams, 57 Ark. 242, 21 S. W. 433, 38 Am. St. Rep. 241."

Sledge & Norfleet Co. v. Craig, 112 S. W. 802, also involved a conveyance of a homestead of a married man. In that case the court said: "We find, however, from an inspection of the deed, which is copied in the transcript, that she did join in the execution and acknowledge the same before an officer authorized by law to take acknowledgments. It is true that her name is not mentioned in the granting clause of the deed along with the names of the other grantors, nor in any part of the deed, but the deed concludes with the statement that 'the parties of the first part have hereto set their hands and seals,' etc., and her name appears subscribed thereto with the names of the other grantors. The deed contains no clause relinquishing the wife's dower, and, in order to give effect to her signature, it must be construed to evidence an intention to join in the grant. Pipkin v. Williams, 57 Ark. 247, 21 S. W. 433, 38 Am. St. Rep. 241."

There can be no controversy as to the acknowledgment of the deed in this case. If defective, it was cured by a subsequent statute. Act 1907, p. 354. So the only question in this case is: Did the wife join in the execution of the deed in the manner required by the statute. The object of the statute is to prevent the alienation of the homestead of a married man without the consent of the wife. There is no efficacy in the requirements of the statute except for that purpose. It would seem, therefore, that the effect of the execution of a conveyance of a homestead by the husband and wife depends upon the intent of the wife as shown by the deed. Pipkin v. Williams, and Sledge & Norfleet Co. v. Craig, supra, so decide.

In the deed in this case the wife expressly relinquishes and releases all her rights of dower and homestead, showing clearly and unequivocally that her intention was to join her husband in the conveyance of the homestead, and such was the effect of her execution of the deed.

The decree is reversed as to so much thereof as dismisses the complaint, and affirmed as to the tract of land ordered to be sold, and the cause is remanded, with directions to the court to enter a decree in accordance with this opinion.

5. FORGERY (§ 34*)—INDICTMENT—VARIANCE—MATERIALITY.

In a trial for forging a bond to stay judgment, variance between the bond set out in the indictment and the bond proven, in that the bond pleaded recited that the obligors “undertake and bond” themselves, etc., whereas the bond proven used the word “bind” for “bond,” was immaterial, being manifestly a clerical error.

6. FORGERY (§ 7*)—ELEMENTS—NATURE OF INSTRUMENT.

Under Kirby's Dig. § 1714, providing for the punishment of one who forges a writing to fraudulently obtain possession of another's money or property, or to cause him to be injured in his estate or lawful rights, it is an offense to forge a bond to stay judgment.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Phillips County; Hance N. Hutton, Judge.

H. W. Holloway was convicted of forgery, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Fink & Dinning, for appellant. Hal L. Norwood, Atty. Gen., and C. A. Cunningham, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

MCCULLOCH, C. J. The defendant, H. W. Holloway, was indicted by the grand jury for the crime of forgery, alleged to have been committed by forging a bond staying a certain judgment of the circuit court of Phillips county, rendered in favor of E. M. Turner against the Dixie Mutual Fire Insurance Company. The instrument of writing alleged to have been forged is set out in full in the indictment, and the sufficiency of the indictment has not been questioned by demurrer or otherwise. A trial resulted in a verdict of conviction, and the court rendered judgment accordingly, and subsequently overruled defendant's motion for new trial. He brings the case here by writ of error.

The bond in question purports to have been signed by the judgment debtor and by certain sureties. The only evidence tending to establish defendant's guilt is this: The sheriff of Phillips county, to whom the bond was delivered, testified that he had no positive recollection as to what person delivered the bond to him, and could not swear who delivered it to him, but thought that it was done either by Judge Fink, the attorney for the insurance company, or by the defendant, and that he believed it was by the latter. Judge Fink testified that he prepared the bond as attorney for the insurance company; but the court would not permit him to state to whom he delivered it. The persons whose names appear as sureties on the bond testified that they neither signed it nor authorized the signatures, and one of them testified to a conversation with the defendant after he was informed that there was such a bond in the hands of the sheriff; but there was nothing in the conversation tending to incriminate the defendant. This evidence was not sufficient to connect the defendant with the alleged forgery. There is nothing in the evidence to show that he had anything to do with the instrument except to sign it. There is no proof whatever either that he signed the names of the sureties or that he delivered the bond to the sheriff. Of course, where the forgery is established, the accused may be connected with the crime by circumstances. But here we have no circumstances to connect the defendant with it, except the bare fact that he was one of the obligors in the bond, and that he was interested in the insurance company, and had employed Judge Fink to represent it in the litigation with Turner. This is not sufficient to justify a finding that the defendant forged the instrument, and for this reason the judgment must be reversed.

The indictment was based upon the following statute: “If any person shall forge or counterfeit any writing whatever, whereby fraudulently to obtain the possession or to deprive another of any money or property, or cause him to be injured in his estate or lawful rights, or if he shall utter and publish such instrument, knowing it to be forged and counterfeited, he shall, on conviction, be confined in the penitentiary not less than two nor more than ten years.” Kirby's Dig. § 1714. It is contended on behalf of the defendant that, even if he forged the names of the sureties and delivered the bond to the sheriff, the offense was not complete, for the reason that it was not filed with the clerk as required by statute, and therefore never became operative for any purpose. This contention involves a misconception as to the distinction between the crime of forgery and of uttering a forged instrument. A delivery of the forged instrument is not necessary to constitute and complete the crime of forgery. The elements of that offense are the false making or alteration of an instrument of writing which is apparently valid, with the fraudulent intent to make use of it to the injury of another. 19 Cyc. 1373; Clark on Criminal Law, p. 333 et seq. To utter a forged instrument is to put it in circulation, or to offer to do so, with such fraudulent intent. Elsey v. State, 47 Ark. 572, 2 S. W. 337.

It is also contended that there is a fatal variance between the writing set out in the indictment and the bond introduced in evidence, in that it uses the word "bind"; whereas, the instrument set out in the indictment uses the word "bond" at the place where it states that the parties and sureties "undertake and bind" themselves, etc., to pay the judgment. This is manifestly a clerical error in the preparation of the indictment, and does not constitute a material variance.

It is also contended that there is no evidence tending to show that the defendant forged the instruments for the purpose of cheating and defrauding Turner, the plaintiff in judgment. We are of the opinion that the evidence would be sufficient for that purpose if it connected the defendant with the crime. The statute is broad in its terms, and declares that it shall be unlawful for any person to forge any writing to fraudulently obtain possession or deprive another of property, or to cause any person "to be injured in his estate or lawful rights." Now, a bond executed pursuant to the terms of the statute for the purpose of staying a judgment has the effect, if valid, of delaying the enforcement of the judgment, and this injures the judgment creditor in his estate and also in the enforcement of his lawful rights. We are of the opinion that a forged stay bond, whether it accomplishes its purpose or not by delaying the enforcement of a judgment, falls within the letter as well as the spirit of the statute, and renders the person who commits the act guilty of a crime.

We find no other error in the record; but, on account of the insufficiency of the evidence to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime, the judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded for new trial.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County; Antonio B. Grace, Judge.

Action by H. S. White against G. B. Greer. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Partly affirmed, and partly reversed and dismissed.

White & Althelmer, for appellant. Bridges, Wooldridge & Gantt, Taylor & Jones, and Daniel Taylor, for appellee.

MCCULLOCH, C. J. Plaintiff, H. S. White, instituted this action against defendant, G. B. Greer, to recover damages on account of alleged slanderous words spoken about him in his presence and in the presence of others. The words were spoken in response to a request made by a Mr. Core for permission for the plaintiff to ride in a conveyance with defendant, and are as follows: "No, sir; no such man as that can ride with me at all. He burnt my house down. I shot him out of my house once. Let him walk to town—let him mud it." It is alleged in the complaint that the defendant in speaking the words meant that the plaintiff had committed arson in burning the defendant's house, and that such charge was false. The circumstances under which the words were spoken are about as follows: Plaintiff lived at England in Lonoke county, and the defendant lived at the city of Pine Bluff. The latter owned a plantation near England, and on the day of this occurrence had come to England on the train and driven out to his farm in a two-seated vehicle with a Mr. Cobb. Mr. Core also owned a farm in the same locality, and on the day in question the plaintiff, a driver for a liveryman in England, carried Core and a Mr. Rose out to the farm in a buggy. The parties met at one Kaufman's store, which is also in the same neighborhood. When they were ready to return, Core requested Cobb, who was in the conveyance with defendant, to let the plaintiff ride back with them, whereupon the defendant spoke the words referred to concerning the plaintiff in the presence of those assembled there. Plaintiff was standing within 12 or 14 feet of the vehicle in which defendant was seated when the words were spoke, and testified that he heard them and felt greatly humiliated thereby. He testified that, after they got back to England, he approached defendant and asked him why he had made use of the insulting language; that defendant, who was standing with one foot on the step of the train, in the act of boarding it, merely replied: "I don't want to talk to you." He also testified that he had met the defendant about six months before that time, and bought some goods from him; that there had never been any ill feeling between them; that he had never done anything to defendant, and knew of no reason why defendant should speak to him or about him in that way. There was no other evidence tending to show any malice or ill feeling on the part of defendant toward plaintiff. Defendant testified that he was not acquainted with plaintiff, had never seen him before, and that, when he made the remark, he thought he was speaking about a man named Locke, with whom he was slightly acquainted, and who had done him great injury. He gave the following account of his alleged trouble with Locke, which he said he had reference to when he made the remark in question: "There was a fellow named Locke who worked on the levee on my place, and there was a little old cabin that they were to tear down, and I told them not to tear it down, and we agreed that I was to move it if it had to be moved, and I told him he must not tear it down, and they brought the horse up there and put a rope around the shed room and pulled it down, and it made some racket, and they then put it around the farm house, and I told them to stop it—that I had already sent up here to get a restraining order. Well, after I went out in front of the house and motioned for them to get out, they all run out, and I shot bird shot in the door, and then I went to the post office, and after a while a couple of young men went by and said there was a big smoke over there, but they did not stop. I saw the house was burning up, and I went down there. It was a little cabin. A negro woman lived in it, but they had moved her things out, and, when I undertook to investigate the matter, they said the chimney pulled down, and it might have caught fire from that. * * * It never struck me that anybody burnt it, only that it caught from the chimney. I never thought of having anybody arrested. The little old cabin wasn't worth very much. They pulled down part of it, and then it was burnt, and that was all there was to it." There was also evidence which tended to show that plaintiff did not resemble Locke at all. The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff for $500 compensatory damages and $500 exemplary damages.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The court instructed the jury that the words spoken by defendant to and concerning the plaintiff charged the latter with the crime of arson, and were slanderous per se and actionable. This instruction is assigned as error. Mr. Newell says that "the rule which once prevailed, that words are to be understood in mitiori sensu, has been long ago superseded, and words are now to be construed by courts, as they always ought to have been, in the plain and popular sense in which the rest of the world naturally understand them." Newell on Slander & Libel, p. 304. See to the same effect, 25 Cyc. 335, and cases cited. The following statement, which seems to be well sustained by authority, is made on this subject: "Defamatory language must be interpreted as it would be understood by the reader or hearers, taking into consideration accompanying explanations and the surrounding circumstances which were known to the hearer or reader." 25 Cyc. 357. This implies that attending circumstances not known to the hearers are not to be considered in determining whether or not the words spoken are slanderous in themselves. It is immaterial what meaning the speaker really intended to convey by the language used if the words spoken are, in fact, slanderous. "If a man in jest," says Mr. Newell, "conveys a serious imputation, he jests at his peril. Or he may have used ambiguous language which to his mind was harmless, but to which the by-standers attributed a most injurious meaning. If so, he is liable for the injudicious phrase he selected. What was passing in his own mind is immaterial, save in so far as his hearers could perceive it at the time." Newell on Slander & Libel, p. 301.

Now, the real question in the case is whether or not the words used by the defendant to the effect that the plaintiff had burnt his house down amounted, in their common acceptance, to the charge of having committed the crime of arson. We think that they do, and that the learned circuit judge was correct in so informing the jury. This language is ordinarily susceptible of no other meaning, and it would be a strained construction of it to say that it merely meant that the person spoken of had by his negligence or inadvertence caused the destruction of the house by fire. The words, when considered in their ordinary acceptance, are not even ambiguous; and the ordinary hearer would not understand them as meaning anything except that a charge of willful burning was intended. An early case in Kentucky (Logan v. Steele, 1 Bibb, 593, 4 Am. Dec. 659) is very much in point. There the defendant said about the plaintiff: "I have every reason to believe he burnt said barn." The court held the language to be slanderous per se, and in the opinion said: "It is now settled that words are to be taken in that sense in which they would be understood by those who hear or read them. The judge will neither torture them into guilt nor explain them into innocence, but take them in their usual ac-ception, and understand them according to their obvious import and meaning. Tested by this doctrine, the words in question are clearly actionable. They carry with them an evident imputation of guilt, and it requires the most forced and far-fetched construction to give them an innocent meaning." The following cases are also closely in point, and sustain the views herein expressed: Tuttle v. Bishop, 30 Conn. 80; Nailor v. Ponder, 1 Marvel (Del.) 408, 41 Atl. 88; Frank v. Dunning, 38 Wis. 270. In the last-cited case the defendant accused plaintiff of burning his own house without stating the purpose for which it was done; and the court held that without the averment that the house was insured, and that the burning was done with the intent to defraud the insurance companies, the charge implied no unlawful act. The reasoning of the court, however, clearly indicates that, if the charge had been that of burning the house of someone else, these words in their ordinary acceptation would have amounted to a charge of arson. The jury might well have found that the defendant in this case did not really intend to make a charge of arson against the plaintiff, whom he took to be Locke, but merely that the house was burned by reason of the negligence of Locke. These circumstances, however, were unknown to the plaintiff and the other hearers, and they could not have understood the language otherwise than as meaning a charge of arson.

The court, at the request of plaintiff, gave the following instruction: "Although you should find that defendant, when speaking to or of plaintiff, believed him to be another person, yet if you find that defendant made the statements alleged by plaintiff, and that they were false as to him, and that he exercised so little care to know or ascertain that plaintiff was the person concerning whom he intended to make such statements as to show a reckless and wanton disregard of plaintiff's rights, feelings, and reputation, then you may award plaintiff punitive damages, as well as if the statements had been made by defendant through actual malice towards plaintiff." The effect of this instruction was to tell the jury that, notwithstanding the fact that the defendant believed at the time that he was speaking to or concerning Locke, yet, if he was guilty of gross negligence in reaching that conclusion as to the identity of the two men, a verdict for exemplary damages would be justified. This court has heretofore announced, and steadily adhered to the rule, that mere negligence, however gross, will not justify the infliction of exemplary damages. The injury must result from a willful wrong, or, what is its equivalent, conscious indifference to results, before such damages should be awarded. Railway Co. v. Hall, 53 Ark. 7, 13 S. W. 138; St. L., I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Stamps, 84 Ark.

241, 104 S. W. 1114; St. L., I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Dysart (Ark.) 116 S. W. 224. Now, if the defendant honestly believed, as recited in this instruction, that he was speaking to or about Locke, then his conduct, so far as plaintiff is concerned, could not at most have amounted to more than gross negligence. Therefore it did not call for infliction of anything more than compensatory damages. But, even if the instructions in this case had been correct, we are of the opinion that the evidence did not sustain a finding of such elements as would justify infliction of exemplary damages. There is not a particle of proof that the defendant entertained any actual malice or ill will towards plaintiff, nor any circumstances from which that could be inferred. The evidence is undisputed that there was a very slight acquaintance, if any at all, between the two men, and that nothing of an unpleasant nature had ever occurred between them. It is manifest that it was purely a mistake on the part of the defendant in confusing the identity of the plaintiff with some other man, for there was nothing in the attending circumstances which called for an insulting remark from the mere request on the part of Coxe for the plaintiff to be allowed to ride in the vehicle with defendant.

The judgment as to compensatory damages will be affirmed, there being no error in the record as to this part of the recovery; but the judgment for exemplary damages will be reversed, and the case as to that feature will be dismissed. It is so ordered.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Conway County; Hugh Barham, Judge.

Action by Edna Pate, administratrix of the estate of James A. Pate, deceased, against the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Lovick P. Miles, for appellant. Wm. L. Moore and Chas. C. Reid, for appellee.

BATTLE, J. On the 4th day of July, 1907, James A. Pate, in alighting from a train of the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway Company at Morrilton, Ark., fell and received injuries which caused his death. Edna Pate, as his administratrix, brought this action against the railway company to recover damages on account of such injury and death. She alleged in her complaint that James A. Pate boarded a train of the defendant at Morrilton for the purpose of going thereon to the town of Atkins; that after boarding the train, and before it left the station, her intestate concluded not to go to Atkins, but to remain at Morrilton; and that while in the exercise of due care he was leaving the train, when it was moving slowly, he stepped upon a plank in the platform of the station at Morrilton, which on account of it having been negligently permitted to become decayed, broken, uneven, and loose, gave way under her intestate, and caused him to slip under the moving train and receive injuries which caused his death.

The defendant answered and denied all the material allegations of the complaint, and pleaded that the intestate, James A. Pate, was guilty of contributory negligence which caused or contributed to his injury and death, and that defendant owed him no duty at the time he was injured, and that he assumed all the risk of injury in alighting from the train at the time, place, and in the manner he did.

A jury were impaneled to try the issues in the case, and after hearing the evidence and instructions of the court returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff in the sum of $1,000 for the estate and in the sum of $3,000 for the widow and next of kin; and judgment was rendered accordingly, and the defendant appealed.

At the beginning of the trial the defendant moved the court to exclude witnesses from the courtroom during the time they were not testifying, and the court denied the motion.

One of the appellant's defenses to the action was that the deceased was not a passenger at the time he was injured. This question was submitted to the jury upon instructions, and they found he was. The evidence adduced tended to prove that Pate was upon the platform while a train of the appellant was standing at the station, and a conversation between him and a passenger on the train, about a game of poker, took place, and the passenger offered to pay Pate's expenses to Atkins, if he (Pate) had as much as $50, and that Pate, in apparent acceptance of the offer, boarded the train, and remained there until the train commenced moving, when he attempted to alight, when the train was moving very slowly, and was fatally injured. There was no evidence to show that there was any necessity for his going upon the train, unless he intended to become a passenger. There was evidence to sustain the verdict upon this issue.

As to the defective platform, there was evidence tending to prove the allegations of the complaint. The evidence as to the manner in which Pate alighted is conflicting. There was enough, however, to show that no negligence of Pate, if any, contributed to his injury, or, at least, to leave that fact in doubt, and a question for the jury.

Appellant contends that $1,000 damages assessed for the benefit of the estate was excessive. But the evidence shows that Pate was conscious for 30 or 40 minutes after he was injured, and the pain he suffered in that time was intense, excruciating, and almost beyond endurance for the shortest time, and the injuries he received were shocking in the extreme. Under these circumstances it does not appear that the damages were excessive.

The excluding of witnesses from the courtroom when not under examination is within the discretion of the court. Kirby's Dig. § 3142. No reason for excluding the witnesses in this case, that does not apply to all cases, is shown. The hearing of the testimony of witnesses by a witness before testifying does not disqualify him, but may affect his credibility. We see no reversible error in the refusal to exclude witnesses in this case. Hlass v. Fulford, 77 Ark. 607, 92 S. W. 862.

Judgment affirmed.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Sequatchie County; Byron Pope, Special Judge.

William Hobbs was convicted of violating the liquor law, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Stewart & Stewart, for appellant. The Attorney General, for the State.

BEARD, C. J. This is an appeal from a judgment pronounced on the verdict of the jury, finding plaintiff in error guilty of selling intoxicating liquor without license. It is unnecessary to set out the evidence upon which the conviction rests. It is sufficient to say we are satisfied that the jury were warranted by the evidence in finding the plaintiff in error guilty of the offense charged within 12 months prior to the presentment in the case.

The ground, however, on which it is earnestly insisted a reversal should be had, is that the minute entry showing the arraignment, trial, and verdict failed to recite that the jury were sworn.

This objection is made for the first time in this court. If the fact was that the jury were not sworn, and this had been called to the attention of the court below, there is no doubt a new trial would have been promptly granted. That this was not done raises at least a presumption that they were sworn, but by a clerical omission the fact was not made a part of the minute entry. In addition, the failure to swear the jury would have been so great a departure from orderly procedure that it is hardly possible for this at the time to have escaped the attention of the court and of counsel. This being so, with the presumption, which exists in this court, of the regularity of judicial proceedings of trial courts, nothing appearing in the record of an affirmative character to the contrary, we are satisfied that the omission pointed out does not authorize a reversal of this case.

The principle controlling in this case will be found illustrated in Clark v. State, 8 Baxt. 591, and Robertson v. State, 4 Lea, 425. In the first of these cases the prisoner had appealed from a death sentence upon a conviction for murder, and it was earnestly pressed upon the court as reversible error that the record failed to show that the officer in charge of the jury was duly sworn. Notwithstanding the established rule that the jury in a felony case, on retiring, must be in charge of a sworn officer, and if the record attempts to set out the form of the oath it must be stated correctly, yet it was held in that case, in the absence of a recital in the record, it would be presumed that the officer was sworn and that the proper oath was administered to him. In the course of the opinion it was said: "We have no evidence in this case that the officer was not sworn, and we may safely rest the case upon the legal presumption in favor of the regularity of judicial proceeding." In the latter of these cases there was a conviction for voluntary manslaughter, and it was insisted on appeal that the case should be reversed, because, while the record showed that the jury upon their retirement was placed in charge of an officer properly sworn, yet it failed to state that upon the next day they returned into court in charge of that officer. To this insistence, however, the court replied: "There is no error in this. It is not necessary that the record should affirmatively show that the officer did his duty. In the absence of anything to the contrary, this will be presumed."

But it is not necessary to rest our conclusion in this case upon a mere presumption. We place it upon the stronger ground that the objection now urged was not made in the court below, and it comes, therefore, too late. Failing to present it at the proper time, we think, both on reason and authority, that it was waived. In the Encyclopedia of Pleading and Practice, vol. 12, p. 519, it is said: "Irregularity in the administration of the oath to the jury, or in the form of the oath, may be waived by going to trial without objection. When a party desires to avail himself of irregularity in the administration of the oath to the jury, the attention of the court should be called to it at the time the oath is taken, and he cannot sit by silently and take chances of a favorable judgment, and subsequently have advantage of objections to such irregularity."

Again, it is said in volume 2, on page 518, of the same work: "Where a party fails to object below to a proceeding, he is presumed on appeal to waive contention as to its validity."

The text of this work is abundantly supported by cases, both criminal and civil, found in reports of many states. In our own court, in the civil case of Looper v. Bell, 1 Head, 376, an objection was made to the manner in which the jury were sworn, and a reversal was asked on the ground of irregularity in this regard. The answer, however, was: "The defendant and his counsel were present when the jury were sworn, and did not then complain, and cannot now be heard in this court upon the question." The soundness of this rule was recognized in the case of Preston v. State, 115 Tenn. 343, 90 S. W. 856.

In State v. Baldwin, 36 Kan. 1, 12 Pac. 318, the minute entry did not set out the form of oath to be administered to the trial jury, as required by the statute of that state. On appeal, in answer to the insistence that this omission was fatal to the judgment of the lower court, in the course of its opinion, the Supreme Court said: "A still more conclusive answer on this point is that no objection was made to the form of oath when it was administered, or any time prior to its presentment in this court. If there was any irregularity in this respect, it should, and probably would, have been objected to at the time it occurred. It is quite unlikely that there was any departure from the form of oath so well understood, and which is in universal use in all the courts of the state; but, if the form of the oath was defective, the attention of the court should have been called to it at the time the oath was taken, so that it might have been corrected. A party cannot sit silently by, and take the chances of acquittal, and, subsequently, when convicted, make objections to an irregularity in the form of the oath."

This case was subsequently taken by Baldwin, the prisoner, by a writ of error to the Supreme Court of the United States, where it was urged that the jurors were not sworn according to the form of oath of Kansas, and that the prisoner, in effect, had been tried by an unsworn jury, and that, therefore, the jury was not a legally constituted tribunal, so that, if the judgment of the Supreme Court of Kansas was permitted to stand, the prisoner would be deprived of his life without due process of law. On the hearing of the case, in an opinion delivered by Blatchford, Justice, and reported under the title of Baldwin v. Kansas, 129 U. S. 52, 9 Sup. Ct. 193, 32 L. Ed. 640, the reasoning and holding of the Supreme Court of Kansas on this question were approved. See, also, the case of Smith v. State, 63 Ga. 168.

Cases to the contrary may be found; but we are satisfied, upon examination, it will be seen that they rest upon statutes peculiar to the states in which they originated. We have no statute in this state, called to our attention, which requires us to reverse a cause, either civil or criminal, where the merits have been reached, because of some irregularity, which would have been easily corrected upon the attention of the trial court being called to it, but presented for the first time on appeal. Objections going only to such irregularities must be made in the trial court, and, if not, they will be considered as waived by this court.

Bass v. State, 6 Baxt. 579, which seems to announce a contrary view, was overruled by this court at Nashville, December term, 1906, in the case of Arthur Pearson v. State, from Wayne county (not reported).

There is no error in the record, and the judgment of the circuit court is therefore affirmed.

WHEAT et al. v. COMMONWEALTH.

1. HOMICIDE (§ 255*)—MANSLAUGHTER—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to justify a conviction for voluntary manslaughter, notwithstanding the evidence of accused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 540; Dec. Dig. § 255.*]

2. HOMICIDE (§ 169*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where, on a trial for homicide, the evidence showed that the difficulty began after decedent had reprimanded accused by stating to him that he ought not to behave in the way he did, evidence that 15 or 30 minutes before accused made an indecent exposure of his person was competent to explain the circumstances inducing decedent to reprimand accused.

3. HOMICIDE (§ 122*)—DEFENSE OF ANOTHER.

A person attempting to excuse his killing of one on the ground that it was done in defense of a third person must show that the third person was without blame, and was in such a position that the law would have excused him if he had done the killing.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Boyle County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Thomas Wheat and another were convicted of voluntary manslaughter, and they appeal. Affirmed.

Jno. W. Rawlings and Robt. Harding, for appellants. Jas. Breathitt, Atty. Gen., and Tom B. McGregor, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the Commonwealth.

CARROLL, J. Thomas and Sam Wheat, the appellants, under an indictment charging them with the murder of Rolla Davis, were convicted of voluntary manslaughter and their punishment fixed at confinement in the penitentiary for a term of 11 years. They ask a reversal upon the ground that the court erred in the admission of evidence and in giving instructions.

Briefly, the facts are these: Tom Wheat and Rolla Davis were bystanders at a game of baseball in progress at Perryville, Ky. Sam Wheat, a brother of Tom, was playing second base. Tom Wheat was very drunk and disorderly, and Davis, who was standing near the home base, said to him: "You ought not to behave in this way. You have had better raising." And thereupon Tom said to Davis: "You are a G—d—cowardly s—o—b—if you don't hit me." When this most offensive of epithets was applied to Davis, he struck Tom in the face with his open hand or fist, and continued to strike or attempt to strike Tom as he backed away from him. This altercation only lasted a few minutes, as the combatants either quit quarrelling and fighting or were separated. While this quarrel was in progress, Sam Wheat left the second base where he was stationed, and came near the place where Tom and Davis were, but did not take any part in the affray at that time. Soon after this Tom Wheat again approached Davis, who was near the home base, and renewed the trouble by making some remark to Davis and striking him in the face. When he struck Davis in the face, Davis hit him, and probably knocked him down—at any rate, Tom backed or ran out in the diamond, Davis following him, striking or attempting to strike him with his hand or fist. When they had gone in this way some 60 or 70 feet from the home base, Tom retreating and Davis following him, Sam Wheat left the second base with a bat in his hand and started towards them. From this point on there is marked conflict in the testimony. The witnesses for the commonwealth say that, when Sam left his base, some one in the crowd hallooed to Davis "to look out, Sam was coming," and that, when Davis looked around to see where Sam was, Tom Wheat, who had a baseball bat in his hand, struck him on the head with it, and knocked him down, and while he was down on his knees and elbows Sam came up and hit him an awful blow on the head with the bat that he had in his hand, and that Tom told Sam to kill him. On the other hand, Sam Wheat and the witnesses in his behalf testify that Tom did not hit Davis with a bat or have a bat in his hand at all until after Sam had struck Davis. They further testify that Davis had an open knife in his hand, and was standing up in the act of cutting or striking Tom with the knife when Sam hit him with the bat. Sam states that he struck Davis with the bat in order to prevent him from cutting or stabbing his brother. All of the witnesses agree that Davis had a knife in his hand, but there is difference of opinion as to when he took it out of his pocket, and whether or not it was open. Looking at the testimony from the standpoint of the commonwealth, the difficulty was provoked and commenced by the conduct of Tom Wheat, and the striking of Davis by Sam was inexcusable. On the other hand, if the testimony of the Wickets and in their behalf is true, Tom Wheat did not strike Davis with a bat, and Sam only struck him in an effort to save the life of his brother. It is not, however, necessary that we should undertake to explain or reconcile this conflicting evidence. That was a matter entirely for the jury. They had the right to believe the story of the fight as told by the witnesses for the commonwealth, or the story as told by the witnesses in behalf of appellants. As they found the appellants guilty, it is evident that they accepted as true the testimony for the commonwealth in preference to that offered in behalf of the accused. There is no insistence that there is not sufficient evidence to support the verdict; and so, if no error of law was committed, the finding of the jury must be approved.

Witnesses for the commonwealth were introduced who testified that some 15 or 30 minutes before Davis said: "You ought not to behave in this way. You have had better raising." Tom had exposed his person in the presence of the crowd, among which were several ladies. This evidence was introduced over the objection of appellants, who insist that it had no connection with the difficulty, and its admission was prejudicial error. In our opinion the argument against the admission of this evidence is not well taken. It was the drunken disorderly conduct of Tom Wheat that brought on the difficulty, and caused Davis to make the appropriate remark that was the commencement of it. The observation of Davis was not offensive or calculated to provoke a difficulty, but was evidently induced by the bad conduct and misbehavior of Tom Wheat, and a desire on the part of Davis to prevail on him to act in a decent and becoming manner. Considering the previous misconduct of Tom, it was an appropriate reprimand; and, as it appears to have been the first words spoken between them, it was entirely competent to permit the commonwealth to show why Davis made the remark. If Tom had not been guilty of any previous misconduct, the criticism of Davis was uncalled for and unnecessary, and might be said to have been sufficient to anger or provoke Tom. But, when explained by the causes that brought it forth, the remark could not be construed in any other way than as a friendly admonition to Tom to behave himself. The indecent acts of Tom were so closely connected with the difficulty and had so much to do with bringing it about that it was proper to permit the commonwealth to explain the circumstances that induced Davis to make the remark that seems to have been the beginning of the trouble.

It is insisted in behalf of Sam Wheat that, as his entire defense was rested upon the proposition that he had the right to strike Davis to prevent him from killing or doing his brother great bodily harm, the trial court did not give an instruction that fairly presented this phase of the case to the jury. The court instructed the jury, in substance, that if they believed from the evidence that, at the time the defendants or either of them struck and killed Davis, they or either of them had reasonable ground to believe that the one or the both were then and there in danger of death or the infliction of great bodily harm at the hands of Davis, and that it was necessary or believed by the defendants or either of them in the exercise of a reasonable judgment to be necessary to strike and kill Davis in order to avert the danger, real or apparent, they should find them not guilty. This view of the law was qualified by the further statement that if the jury believed beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendants, one or both of them, when neither was in danger or apparent danger of death or great bodily harm, began the difficulty by coming on to or near to Davis with a bat or bats, and striking him, or making demonstrations to do so, they could not be excused on the ground of self-defense. They were further told that either of the defendants had the right to act for the other at any period of the difficulty if such other would be justified in doing such act or acts; but that anything done by one for and on behalf of the other was done at his peril in the sense that what he did must have been excusable if done by the one for whom he acted. The law is that, when a person attempts to excuse his act upon the ground that it was done in the defense of another, that other must himself be without blame; or, to put it in another way, be in such a position that the law would excuse him if he had done in his own behalf what the other did for him. The act of the intermeddler will be judged by the same rule that would be applied to the party in whose defense he acts, or to whose aid he comes. If the party to whose assistance the intermeddler comes would himself be excusable or justifiable at the time in taking the life of his assailant, then the third party will also be excusable and justifiable; otherwise, not. The instructions submitted this phase of the law in such a manner that the jury could not well have misunderstood it. If the jury had believed from the evidence that Tom Wheat's life was in danger at the time Sam struck Davis, they could not do otherwise than have acquitted Sam under the instructions given. The criticism of instruction No. 2 would be well taken if that instruction must be considered alone and apart from the others given; but, reading it in connection with and as a part of the other instructions, which presented the theory of the defense, it is not open to the objections urged against it. It is not practicable or necessary that each instruction should be complete in itself or contain the whole law of the case applicable to the phases that it treats of. The instructions are to be considered as a whole; and if, when so considered, they present the entire law of the case, it will be sufficient.

Perceiving no error to the substantial prejudice of the accused, the judgment is affirmed.

LOUISVILLE RY. CO. v. KUPPER.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. April 20, 1909.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 283*)—CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS—PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACT OF TRANSPORTATION.

A carrier is liable for the acts of the servant in charge of or having control over the passengers, amounting to a breach of the duty of transporting the passengers safely.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1119-1124, 1140, 1141; Dec. Dig. § 283.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 283*)—PERSONAL INJURIES—ASSAULTS BY EMPLOYÉ.

Plaintiff, a passenger on defendant's street car, was knocked from the car by the conductor, the assault being continued in the street, and on the approach of an officer the conductor directed him to arrest plaintiff, which he did. Held, that the whole affair was but a single transaction, and that defendant was liable for both the assault and the arrest if unlawful, and it was not error to omit from the instructions the question whether or not the conductor was acting within the scope of his employment at the time he directed the arrest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 283.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County, Common Pleas Branch, Second Division. "Not to be officially reported."

Action by Henry L. Kupper against the Louisville Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Fairleigh, Strans & Fairleigh and Howard B. Lee, for appellant. Edwards, Ogden & Peak, for appellee.

CLAY, C. Plaintiff, Henry L. Kupper, instituted this action against defendant Louisville Railway Company to recover damages for an unlawful assault alleged to have been committed by defendant's conductor, and for a false arrest alleged to have been brought about by defendant's conductor. The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $250, and the defendant appeals.

It appears from the record that while plaintiff was a passenger on defendant's car on Fifteenth street, in the city of Louisville, a discussion arose between him and the defendant's conductor as to whether or not he had spit on the floor of the car or through a crack in the floor onto the street. This discussion ended a few moments prior to the time that the assault took place. Just before the car approached Maple street, where the assault and arrest occurred, plaintiff asked of one Mr. Phillips, who was a passenger on the car, the question: "Is that your dog?" When this question was asked, the conductor began to look for the dog. As a matter of fact there was no dog on the car, and the passengers, entering into the joke, began to laugh at the conductor. This remark was evidently made for the purpose of teasing the conductor. The latter became incensed. According to the testimony for plaintiff, the conductor struck him in the face while he was standing on the steps, with his hand upon the railing. In falling plaintiff dragged the conductor from the platform into the street. There the fight was continued, several blows being struck on each side. While the fight was in progress, a police officer who was on the car came out. When he reached the plaintiff and the conductor, the latter directed him to arrest plaintiff upon the ground that he was drunk. According to the testimony for the defendant, the plaintiff first assaulted the conductor, and plaintiff was arrested merely because he was engaged in a difficulty, and not because of any direction given by the conductor.

The only error complained of is the giving of the following instruction: "(2) I further instruct you, gentlemen of the jury, that if you believe from the evidence that the plaintiff, Kupper, was arrested by the police officer for disorderly conduct, and such arrest was made by the police officer by reason or as a result of the representations and at the demand of the conductor of the car, and would not have been made by him but for such representations and demand by the conductor, and was not made by the police officer in the line of his duty and upon the information which he had other than the information and the demand of the conductor, and if you further believe from the evidence that there was no reasonable ground for the officer to believe at the time that the plaintiff was guilty of disorderly conduct or violation of the law, then the law of the case is for the plaintiff as to the false arrest, and you should so find." There was evidence to the effect that plaintiff intended to get off the car at the point where he was assaulted by the conductor, and, as the direction given to the policeman to arrest him was given by the conductor after plaintiff was off the car, it is insisted that plaintiff was no longer a passenger, and defendant cannot be held responsible.

In the case of Wise v. Covington & Cincinnati Street Ry. Co., 91 Ky. 537, 16 S. W. 351, the rule is thus stated: "If he was compelled or was justified in leaving the car on account of the abuse of the driver, and the driver followed him, continuing the abuse, or for the purpose of beating him, it must all be regarded as one continuous wrong, and the company is as much liable as if the beating took place on its car. It is the duty of the driver to protect the passenger from insult and harm, unless the passenger is himself the aggressor, and when he insults the passenger, and then at once pursues him and beats him, returning again to his car, it is all one tort, and cannot be so separated by the acts done as to relieve the company from liability." It is also well settled that an act which amounts to a breach of duty on the part of a carrier towards a passenger, whether an assault, false arrest, insult, or abusive language, etc., makes the carrier liable for the acts performed by the servant who is placed in charge of or has control over the passengers. The law makes no distinction in the kind or character of the wrong done if such wrong amounts to a breach of the undertaking to transport the passenger safely. Mulligan v. Railroad Co., 129 N. Y. 506, 29 N. E. 952, 14 L. R. A. 791, 26 Am. St. Rep. 539; Lafitte v. Railway Co., 43 La. Ann. 34, 8 South. 701, 12 L. R. A. 837; Stewart v. Railway Co., 90 N. Y. 588, 43 Am. Rep. 185. It is insisted, however, for defendant that, while the rule stated applies to assaults where the assault is begun on the car and continued after the passenger leaves it, it is not applicable to a case of this kind, where the direction to make the arrest was made after the passenger ceased to be a passenger. The evidence in this case shows that plaintiff was a passenger when the assault was first committed. The tort was then begun. The fight between the plaintiff and the conductor was continued on the street. It lasted but for a short time. When the officer approached, the direction to make the arrest was given. The conductor then returned to his car, and the plaintiff was arrested. He was tried the next day in the police court, and discharged. It is manifest that the whole affair of the assault and arrest was but one single transaction. We are unable to see upon what reasoning it can be said that the plaintiff was a passenger while the assault was going on, and not a passenger when the direction to arrest him was given by the conductor. If, as the plaintiff's evidence tended to prove, he was unlawfully assaulted and knocked from the car, and the assault was continued, and the order to make the arrest was immediately given, the company was liable both for the unlawful assault and for the unlawful arrest; and it was not error to omit from the instructions the question whether or not the conductor was acting at the time within the scope of his employment.

Finding no error in the record prejudicial to the substantial rights of appellant, the judgment is affirmed.

NEWELL v. BURNSIDE BANKING CO.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. April 23, 1909.)

1. ESTOPPEL (§ 38*)—DEED—SUBSEQUENTLY ACQUIRED PROPERTY.

A deed, conveying with general warranty land which the grantor does not own, passes the land by estoppel on the grantor subsequently acquiring title thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Cent. Dig. §§ 99-107; Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

2. ESTOPPEL (§ 12*)—DEED—SUBSEQUENTLY ACQUIRED PROPERTY.

Estoppels are not favored, and a deed will never be construed to operate by way of estoppel beyond the clear meaning of the words used.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

3. ESTOPPEL (§ 47*)—MORTGAGE—PROPERTY CONVEYED—SUBSEQUENTLY ACQUIRED PROPERTY.

A mortgage conveyed property described as "one-eighth undivided interest in the estate of" decedent, consisting of a farm containing 270 acres. One-half of the farm belonged to the estate of decedent, and one-half belonged to the mortgagor's uncle, who subsequently died, leaving a will devising the land, so that the mortgagor received another one-eighth of an undivided half of the farm. Held, that the mortgage, though containing a general warranty, conveyed only the interest which the mortgagor had in the land at the time of the execution of the mortgage, and did not pass the interest received under his uncle's will.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Dec. Dig. § 47.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Pulaski County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Action by the Burnside Banking Company against S. D. Newell. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Virgil P. Smith, for appellant. O. H. Waddie & Son, for appellee.

HOBSON, J. On June 30, 1903, S. D. Newell had overdrawn his account with the Burnside Banking Company in the sum of $3,600, and to cover the overdraft he executed to it a note and a mortgage to secure the note. He was a son of John B. Newell. The mortgage thus described the property conveyed as far as it is here material: "Also (1/8) one-eighth undivided interest in the estate of John B. Newell, deceased, consisting of one farm with improvements thereon, said to contain 270 acres, more or less, lying on the waters of the Cumberland and South Fork rivers near Burnside, Ky. For a further description see records of county clerk's office, Somerset, Ky." The farm of 270 acres belonged one-half to John B. Newell and one-half to Samuel Newell, who was his bachelor brother. This was known to both the parties when the mortgage was executed. After the mortgage was made Samuel Newell died, leaving a will by which he devised to his brother's children his half of the farm, so that at the date of the mortgage S. D. Newell owned an undivided one-eighth of one-half of the land, and after it was executed and before the suit was brought he received under his uncle's will another eighth of an undivided one-half of the land. The bank insists that, as the mortgage contained a general warranty, the interest which S. D. Newell received under his uncle's will passed to it by reason of the warranty. The circuit court so held, and S. D. Newell appeals.

There are numerous cases holding that, if a man conveys with general warranty that which he does not then own, but subsequently acquires, the after-acquired title will pass to his vendee by estoppel. See Perkins v. Coleman, 90 Ky. 611, 14 S. W. 640. But the deed in this case does not convey an undivided one-eighth of the tract of land. The language is "one-eighth undivided interest in the estate of John B. Newell, deceased, consisting of one farm with improvements thereon, said to contain 270 acres, more or less." The thing that is conveyed is S. D. Newell's undivided interest in the estate of John B. Newell, deceased, in the farm. The deed purports to convey, not an undivided one-eighth of the farm, but an undivided one-eighth of the estate of John B. Newell in it. It is manifest from the language of the deed that the parties had in mind only the interest in the land which S. D. Newell had inherited from his father. The deed does not purport to convey any other interest. The warranty only refers to the interest conveyed. It does not enlarge the operation of the granting clause. The deed does not refer to any interest in the land owned by Samuel Newell, or to be received by S. D. Newell from him. To make this deed cover anything more than one-eighth of the estate of John B. Newell in the land would be to extend its terms beyond their fair meaning. Estoppels are not favored, and a deed will never be construed to operate by way of estoppel beyond the clear meaning of the words used. If the parties had contemplated a conveyance of an undivided one-eighth of the land, there was no need to insert in the deed the words "the estate of John B. Newell, deceased." To hold that this deed covers anything more than S. D. Newell's interest in his father's estate in the land would be to reject these words entirely from the deed, and make it read as though they were not in it. We therefore conclude that the deed only covers the one-eighth interest in the land which S. D. Newell inherited from his father.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a judgment as above indicated.

CAMDEN INTERSTATE RY. CO. v. LESTER.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. April 20, 1909.)

1. RELEASE (§ 55*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action by an injured servant on a contract, whereby defendant master, in consideration of a release from liability, agreed to pay him a stated sum daily until defendant's physician certified that he was able to resume work, the burden of showing that the certificate, if given, was falsely or fraudulently made, was on plaintiff.

2. RELEASE (§ 56*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—EVIDENCE.

In an action by an injured servant on a contract, whereby defendant master in consideration of a release agreed to pay him a stated sum daily until defendant's physician certified that he was able to resume work, evidence as to the extent of plaintiff's injuries and of his condition when the certificate was alleged by defendant to have been given was admissible on the issue as to whether the certificate was falsely or fraudulently made.

Though evidence should have been introduced in rebuttal, its introduction in chief was not error where it did not prejudice defendant's substantial rights.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 882*)—INVITED ERROR.

An instruction, though erroneous, is not ground for reversal where identical with an instruction offered by the complaining party.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Boyd County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Action by W. L. Lester against the Camden Interstate Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Brown & Martin, for appellant. Dinkle & Prichard and Malin & Malin, for appellee.

CLAY, C. Plaintiff was employed by the defendant as a lineman. His duty was to climb poles and string electric wires. On July 24, 1901, he came in contact with one of defendant's wires, and was thrown to the ground, and his head, back, and spine injured. On August 1, 1901, he entered into a contract with the defendant, whereby it agreed to pay him $2 per day for all working days until its physician certified that he was able to resume his duties. In consideration thereof the plaintiff agreed to release defendant from all claims or demands against it growing out of the injuries which he received. The defendant carried out its agreement by paying to the plaintiff $2 for each working day until the 23d day of September, 1901, when it ceased to pay, claiming that its physician had certified that plaintiff was able to resume his work. This action was instituted on December 23, 1904. Plaintiff charged in his petition that, while an employé of defendant, he had been injured by its negligence, and then set forth the contract referred to above. He further stated that at the time of the filing of the petition he was not, and had not theretofore been, able to resume his duties; that, if a certificate to the effect that he was able to resume his duties had been made by defendant's physician, the same was false and untrue, and made with the fraudulent purpose of preventing plaintiff from receiving from defendant $2 per day during the time he was unable to resume his work with the defendant. The defendant denied that the injuries were caused by its negligence, and admitted the execution of the contract, but denied that the certificate made by its physician was false or untrue, or made with the purpose or attempt to prevent plaintiff from receiving his wages from the company. It also denied that he had been unable to resume his duties, and pleaded affirmatively that on the 23d day of September, 1901, its physician had certified that plaintiff was able to resume his duties, and that between the time of his injuries and the time of making said certificate the defendant had paid to plaintiff his wages of $2 per day for all working days. The affirmative allegations of the answer were denied by reply. The trial resulted in a verdict in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $615, subject to a credit of $115, and, from the judgment based thereon, this appeal is prosecuted.

According to the proof of plaintiff, the latter, at the time defendant's physician certified that he was able to resume his duties, was as a matter of fact unable to work, and at the time of the filing of the suit he was still unable to work. No certificate from defendant's physician to the effect that plaintiff was able to resume his duties was introduced in evidence. The defendant's physician testified that he did not know whether it was made orally or in writing. There appears in the record a letter addressed to plaintiff from defendant's general manager, dated September 17, 1901, in which he stated that he was in receipt of a letter from the company's physician advising him that plaintiff would be able to resume his work on September 23d.

In support of his case the plaintiff offered in chief evidence of the extent of his injuries and of his condition at the time the certificate is said to have been made to the company. It is insisted by defendant that the court erred in admitting this evidence in chief; that, under his contract, the plaintiff was entitled to be paid for all working days until the company's physician certified that he was able to resume work; that the only issues to be decided were whether or not the company had made the payments until the physician had given his certificate, whether a certificate was made, and whether this certificate was false or fraudulent; that the burden on all these issues was upon the defendant. The trial court admitted evidence of the extent of plaintiff's injuries and of his condition, with the admonition to the jury that it was admitted only for the purpose of bearing upon the issue as to whether or not the certificate of the company's physician was falsely or fraudulently made. Under these circumstances, the evidence was certainly admissible. Of course, the burden of showing that the certificate, if one had been given, was falsely or fraudulently made, was upon the plaintiff. Under the circumstances we are unable to see how the introduction in chief of the evidence complained of, even though it should have been introduced in rebuttal, could have in the least prejudiced the substantial rights of the defendant.

It is next insisted that the court erred in giving to the jury the following instruction: "The court instructs the jury that they shall find for plaintiff $2 for each working day from August 1, 1901, until plaintiff was able to resume his duties with defendant company, subject to a credit of $115; but the finding shall not exceed the sum of $2,000. But, if the jury shall believe and find from the evidence that Dr. A. H. Moore certified to the defendant that the plaintiff was able to resume his duties to it, then the jury shall not find for the plaintiff for any working days after Dr. Moore so certified, unless they shall believe and find from the evidence that the said Moore in so certifying was guilty of fraud or such gross mistake as necessarily implied bad faith, or the failure to exercise an honest judgment." The defendant contends that this instruction is erroneous in two particulars: First, in arbitrarily fixing the credit to which was entitled at $115; second, in allowing a recovery in case of "such gross mistake as necessarily implied bad faith," when there was no plea of mistake. Upon the first point it is said that from July 24, 1901, until September 23, 1901, were included 62 days. At $2 per day this would make the credit $124. It will be observed, however, that the contract provides for $2 per day for each working day. There is nothing in the record to show that Sundays were to be considered working days. Eliminating the Sundays, the amount of the credit did not exceed $115 allowed in the instruction referred to. Even if it had exceeded that amount by a few dollars, the sum involved would be too insignificant to justify a reversal of this case. As to the second point, that a recovery was allowed for "such gross mistake as necessarily implied bad faith" without a plea of mistake, it is sufficient to say that the language employed in this instruction is almost identical with the language of an instruction offered by counsel for defendant. Even if the instruction be erroneous in the respect referred to, it would not justify a reversal of this case; for counsel will not be permitted to lead the court into error, and then secure a reversal for the very error which they themselves brought about.

Judgment affirmed.

RICE et al. v. RICE.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. April 21, 1909.)

1. WILLS (§ 602*)—CONSTRUCTION—ESTATES CREATED—"DIE WITHOUT CHILDREN."

A will made certain devises to testator's two sons, and provided that if either should die without legal heirs then his portion should go to the other, or his children, if any, and that neither should have power to sell unless the proceeds should be invested in other real estate. Held, that in view of the provision for sale the phrase "if either should die without children" referred to the death of either son at any time before or after testator's death, and each son took a defeasible fee, which would be defeated by the death of the devisee at any time without issue then living.

2. DOWER (§ 13*)—INTERESTS SUBJECT TO DOWER—DEFEASIBLE FEE IN LAND.

The interest of the deceased devisee being a defeasible fee which the issue of his wife would have inherited as his heir, his wife was entitled to dower therein.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Boyle County: "To be officially reported."

Action between M. B. Rice and others and J. A. Rice. From the judgment, M. B. Rice and others appeal. Affirmed in part, reversed in part, and remanded.

Breckinridge & Breckinridge and Fox & Jackson, for appellants. Geo. E. Stone, Robert Harding, and C. H. Rodes, for appellee.

NUNN, J. One R. B. Rice died in Boyle county, Ky., the place of his residence, leaving a will which was executed in 1896. He left a widow and two children. By his will he made provisions for the settlement of his debts and for the benefit of his wife, which she afterwards renounced, and then devised to his two boys, John Andrew and James Howard Rice, certain lands. In making these bequests, he used the following language: "I will to my son John Andrew Rice the east end of my land with general boundary as follows: [Describing it] containing two hundred and fifty acres. I will to my son Joe Howard Rice the balance of the Ephram Smith tract of land containing 190 acres and the Blas Smith tract of 144 acres. If either should die without legal heirs then his portion shall go to the other, or his children if any. Neither shall have power to sell and convey except the proceeds shall be invested in other real estate." These sons married. John Andrew is alive and has living children. James Howard is dead. He left a widow, M. B. Rice, one of the appellants, but left no children surviving him. James Howard Rice became indebted to appellant Garr, Scott & Co., and, with his wife, executed a mortgage to this company to secure the payment of the indebtedness, and it brought this action to enforce its mortgage lien. N. K. Tunis, the administrator, intervened by a pleading and sought to have the 190 and 144 acres sold for the purpose of paying the debts of J. H. Rice. Appellant M. B. Rice sought to have dower allotted to her in the land referred to. John Andrew Rice presented his petition and was made a party to the action, in which he claimed to be the owner in fee simple of the land by virtue of the provisions of his father's will above copied. He alleged that his brother, John Howard, took the land under his father's will and died without issue having been born. The lower court sustained his contention.

Appellants contend: That James Howard Rice took the fee-simple title to the land devised to him; that the words, "if either should die without children" referred to the death of either in the lifetime of their father, the testator; that he outlived his father, and therefore took the absolute title. We cannot agree to this construction of the will. The testator had reference to the death of either taking place at any time, either before or after his death. This is evident, according to the sentence immediately following limiting their right to sell the land to the extent that if they sold it they were required to reinvest the proceeds in other real estate. The will speaks from the date of the death of the testator, and they did not own the land or have any power to sell it until after the death of their father.

In the case of Harvey v. Bell, 118 Ky. 512, 81 S. W. 671, the court undertook to classify all the cases with reference to the construction of wills. The will under construction in the case at bar comes under the fourth class referred to in that opinion. The court in that case said: "On the other hand, where there is no intervening estate, and no other period to which the words 'dying without issue' can be reasonably referred, they are held, in the absence of something in the will evidencing a contrary intent, to create a defeasible fee which is defeated by the death of the devisee at any time without issue then living." In the case of Smith v. Ballard, 117 Ky. 179, 77 S. W. 714, the language construed was as follows: "In the event of Low Bell Ballard's death without bodily issue then her portion of my estate shall be equally divided between Martha Hitt," etc. In construing this clause the court said: "When a devise is made to one person in fee, and in case of his death to another in fee, courts interpret the devise over as referring only to death in the testator's lifetime. The courts were led to so interpret such devises, because of the absurdity of speaking of the one event which is sure to occur to every one living as uncertain and contingent. 2 Jarman, Wills, c. 43. The rule is different, however, when the death of the testator [evidently the word 'devisee' was the one meant to be used instead of 'testator'] is coupled with other circumstances which may or may not take place, as, for instance, death without children. In such case the devise over takes effect according to ordinary and literal meaning of the words, 'upon death,' under the circumstances indicated, at any time, whether before or after the death of the testator. 2 Jarman, Wills, c. 49; Sale v. Crutchfield, 8 Bush, 649. In Thackston v. Watson, 84 Ky. 206, 1 S. W. 398, the same doctrine is recognized. The death of Lou Ballard was not uncertain, but the event of her death 'without bodily issue' was uncertain, for it might occur with or without bodily issue. So under the plain language of the will, if her death occurred either before or after the death of the testator, then the estate devised to her goes to the persons designated in the will."

Under these authorities the court properly adjudged that John Andrew Rice took the land under his father's will. But under the opinions of this court in the cases of Northcut v. Whipp, 12 B. Mon. 65, Fry v. Scott, 11 S. W. 426, and Webb v. Trustees of First Baptist Church, 80 Ky. 117, 13 S. W. 362, the court wrongfully adjudged that M. B. Rice, the widow of John Howard Rice, had no dower interest in the land. These cases expressly determine that she has such an interest. In the case of Fry v. Scott, supra, the court, after quoting the statute with reference to dower, said: "In Northcut v. Whipp, 12 B. Mon. 65, it was expressly held that the widow of a husband who had a defeasible fee in land was entitled to dower. In that case the question was fully considered and the rule laid down, which has since been adhered to, that in all cases where the husband is seised of such an estate in land as that the issue of the wife may inherit, if any she have, as heir to the husband, the widow is dowerable out of such estate." Appellee's counsel presents a strong argument and asks that the court overrule the decisions referred to. There may be a great deal said upon either side of the question, which is a very close one; but the construction of the statute giving the widow, in such cases, a dower interest, was established by this court more than 50 years ago, and has been consistently followed to the present time. Therefore we decline to change the rule of construction.

For these reasons, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed as to appellants Tunis, the administrator, and Garr, Scott & Co., and reversed as to appellant M. B. Rice, and remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

MEADE v. RATLIFF.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. April 21, 1909.)

1. CHAMPERTY AND MAINTENANCE (§ 7*)—GRANTS OF LAND HELD ADVERSELY.

A deed conveying land held adversely is not void as being within the champerty statute, but only voidable at the instance of the parties in adverse possession, and one claiming under a subsequent deed from the grantor cannot recover the land on the ground that no title passed by the former deed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Champerty and Maintenance, Cent. Dig. § 54; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

2. CHAMPERTY AND MAINTENANCE (§ 7*)—GRANTS OF LAND HELD ADVERSELY.

A deed conveying lands held adversely is champertous, though made in good faith and for valuable consideration; but the parties may rescind it, and this right is not affected by St. 1909, § 216 (Russell's St. § 1783), declaring that neither party to a contract made in violation of the statute shall have any right of action thereon, which applies only to contracts or conveyances made in consideration of services to be rendered in the prosecution or defense of any suit, whereby the thing sued for is to be taken for such services.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Champerty and Maintenance, Cent. Dig. §§ 54, 55; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

3. CHAMPERTY AND MAINTENANCE (§ 7*)—GRANTS OF LAND HELD ADVERSELY.

The sufficiency of evidence introduced by the plaintiff in ejectment to show that a champertous deed by his ancestor was rescinded by the parties is a question for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Champerty and Maintenance, Cent. Dig. §§ 62-65; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

4. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 97*)—EFFECT—EXTENT OF POSSESSION.

An entry, without color of title, on a parcel of land embraced within a patent boundary claimed by another, who is in actual possession of the whole, does not oust him from the possession thereof, except to the extent of the actual inclosures made by the person making such entry.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Cent. Dig. § 537; Dec. Dig. § 97.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Pike County.

"To be officially reported."

Action by John L. Meade against John Ratliff. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

E. D. Stephenson, F. W. Stowers, Jno. L. Meade, and Hazelrigg & Hazelrigg, for appellant. York & Johnson, for appellee.

NUNN, J. Appellant sued appellee in ejectment to recover about 100 acres of land. On the trial the lower court gave a peremptory instruction to the jury to find for appellee. The only question necessary to be considered is whether there was any evidence introduced by appellant sustaining his claim to the land. It appears that in the year 1844 there was issued by the commonwealth a patent to Chas. Trout covering about 300 acres of land. This patent has a well marked and defined boundary. Appellant's testimony shows that this patent boundary includes the land in contest. Appellant introduced as evidence this old patent and the conveyances intervening between the patentee and the one which conveyed the land to Rhodes Meade, the father of appellant. In 1881 Rhodes Meade conveyed to appellant, his son, the whole of this patent boundary. The testimony, without contradiction, shows that the patentee and the intervening purchasers thereof lived within the patent boundary and claimed to the extent thereof from soon after the date of the patent to the time of the trial in the lower court. Their inclosures, however, did not include any part of the land in controversy. About the year 1871, one Ratliff, father of appellee, entered within this patent boundary and erected a cabin and inclosed four or five acres of land around it, and at another point inclosed about three acres. Since that date no part of the land in contest has ever been cleared or inclosed. Immediately prior to the year 1871, Rhodes Meade conveyed the land in contest to one Ferguson, who instituted an action against Ratliff, father of appellee, to recover it. Ratliff interposed a plea of champerty and succeeded in defeating Ferguson in the lower court, and no appeal was ever taken. No further proceedings were had to oust Ratliff, nor was there any other conveyance made of the land, until Rhodes Meade made the conveyance to his son in 1881. The father remained in possession of the land with his son until 1896, at which time the father died. This action was brought in 1906 by appellant to oust appellee from the possession of the 100 acres. Appellee denied the ownership of the land by appellant, and alleged ownership in himself, and interposed a plea of champerty as to his title of actual adverse possession of the land for more than 15 years, and pleaded the former judgment in the case of Ferguson, the vendee of Rhodes Meade, against the father of appellee, as a bar to this action. Appellee concedes that this last defense cannot apply to this case, for neither appellant nor his father, Rhodes Meade, were parties to that action.

We are not called upon nor can we determine whether or not appellee is the owner of the land in contest, for he was not put to the necessity of introducing testimony on the trial to show by what right he claimed to own the land. What we have stated with reference to the property appears from appellant's testimony alone. Appellee also claims: That, when Rhodes Meade conveyed this 100 acres of land to Ferguson, the title passed from him to Ferguson, although the deed was afterwards declared void in the action of Ferguson against appellee's father; that when he attempted to convey to appellant, his son, in 1881, he had no title to pass to him, and therefore the lower court properly instructed the jury to find for appellee. Appellant contends that, as the deed was champertous and void, no title passed, and therefore remained in Rhodes Meade. Some of the cases tend strongly to support this theory, but other and later cases construing the statute establish what we conceive to be a better principle. These opinions properly hold that the champerty statute, in so far as it applies to the sale and conveyance of real estate, was enacted for the benefit of those in the adverse possession and claiming the land. It leaves the vendor and vendee in the position they placed themselves by the sale and conveyance.

In the case of Ft. Jefferson Improvement Co. v. Dupoyster, 108 Ky. 792, 51 S. W. 810, 48 L. R. A. 537, the court, in considering the effect of a champertous conveyance, said: "Taking this view of the case, counsel contends that the deed is therefore absolutely void, as being within the champerty statute, and respectable authority is cited sustaining counsel's position; but, construing the statute as a whole, and in view of the decision of this court in the case of Luen v. Wilson, 85 Ky. 503, 3 S. W. 911, we are of opinion that the deed is not void, but only voidable at the instance of the parties in adverse possession." In the case of Luen v. Wilson, 85 Ky. 503, 3 S. W. 911, the court said: "It has been held by this court in more than one case that, if one who has previously sold land to another seeks to recover it, he cannot maintain his action upon the ground that the sale was champertous. The champertous contract must be abandoned or rescinded in good faith before he brings his action. Hobson v. Hendrick (November 12, 1885) 7 Ky. Law Rep. 362; Harman v. Brewster, 7 Bush, 355. * * * In such case the appellant can rely upon the still existing champertous contract. The law of champerty was intended as a shield to the possession, and not as a weapon of offense, as a defense to the remedy sought by a plaintiff, and a grantor after he has conveyed property adversely held cannot, without first rescinding or abandoning the contract in good faith, be heard to say that it was champertous, and it cannot therefore affect him. This is the right of the occupant, and his protection was clearly the aim of the statute."

This construction of the statute is a just one. Often such conveyances are made in the best faith, and the purchaser pays a valuable consideration. Nevertheless the conveyance is champertous if there be an adverse claimant in possession. The parties in such cases should be allowed to rescind and put themselves in statu quo. Section 216, Ky. St. (Russell's St. § 1783), declaring that "neither party to any contract made in violation of the provisions of this chapter shall have any right of action or suit thereon," has no application to a case like the one last stated. The section referred to applies only to contracts or conveyances made in consideration of services to be rendered in the prosecution or defense, or the aiding in the prosecution or defense, in or out of court, of any suit, whereby the thing sued for, or any part thereof, is to be taken or received for the services or assistance. The testimony in the case at bar did not show that the conveyance from Rhodes Meade to Ferguson was of the character described. It was such a conveyance as could be rescinded or abandoned. We do not want to be understood as holding that there was sufficient evidence introduced by appellant to show that this deed was rescinded or abandoned by the parties. This was a question for the jury to determine. It is sufficient to say there was some evidence introduced to that effect. Green Meade, a brother of appellant, who has never had any interest in the matter in controversy, stated that, soon after the trial of the case of Ferguson against Ratliff, Ferguson told him that he would have nothing more to do with the matter, that he stated, in effect, that he had no interest in the land, and that Rhodes Meade could sue for it if he wanted to. This tended to show a rescission or abandonment of the conveyance made by Rhodes Meade to Ferguson. Rhodes Meade, afterwards, in the year 1881, conveyed the land to appellant. He claimed the land as his until this conveyance to appellant, his son, and the court erred in not submitting this question to the jury for its determination. Under the proof as introduced by appellant, his father and those under whom he was claiming had had the actual possession of the whole of the Trout patent boundary, which includes the land in contest, before appellee or his ancestors obtained possession of any part of the land in controversy. If this be true, the entrance by Ratliff, father of appellee, upon the land sued for, did not have the effect to oust Meade from the possession thereof, except to the extent of the actual inclosures made by Ratliff, unless it appears that he had a superior title to Meade.

It is our opinion that appellant's testimony made out a case for him which should have been submitted to the jury, and the court erred in giving the peremptory instruction. See Miller v. Humphries, 2 A. K. Marsh. 447, Shrieve v. Summers, 1 Dana, 239; Moss v. Currie, 1 Dana, 266. Many others and more recent decisions to the same effect could be cited.

For these reasons the judgment of the lower court is reversed and remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.

EDWARDS v. KEVIL.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. April 20, 1909.)

1. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 93*)—PLEA OF PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATION—SUFFICIENCY.

In slander the words charged to have been spoken were: "I reckon E. (plaintiff) is satisfied now, he burned this out. I received word some time ago that he intended to burn them." And when asked what he meant: "Well, I heard that he (E.) was going to burn them." The answer averred that the words were spoken under circumstances making them privileged, and that the words used were: "I reckon E. is satisfied now my house is burned. I was notified he intended to burn it. I couldn't think he was mean enough to do it, but I took additional insurance." Held, that the words admitted to have been spoken, though not the identical words charged, were in effect the same, and actionable, and the answer good within the rule that a defendant in slander, pleading that the words spoken were privileged, must admit that he spoke the words charged, or words of similar import in themselves actionable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. § 218; Dec. Dig. § 93.*]

2. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 45*)—PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS—ORIGIN OF FIRE.

A statement confidentially and in good faith, by a person whose property has been destroyed by fire, of one whom he suspects to be the incendiary, in an effort to get advice and assistance from a friend whose property also has been injured, is a privileged communication.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Dec. Dig. § 45.*]

3. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 123*)—ACTIONS—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

Whether a charge of having set fire to a building was made under such circumstances as to constitute it a privileged communication held for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. § 362; Dec. Dig. § 123.*]

4. LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 103*)—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In slander for having charged plaintiff with burning a building, the defense of privileged communication was made, and evidence introduced of statements by plaintiff indicating an intention or desire to burn or have burned the building, and that such statements were communicated to defendant previous to the fire. Held, that evidence by plaintiff that he had not, in fact, made such statements, was properly excluded, for if defendant in good faith believed what was communicated to him, and it was such as a reasonably prudent man would believe, it was immaterial for the purposes of his defense whether plaintiff made the statements or not.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Caldwell County.

"To be officially reported."

Action by Ed Edwards against M. R. Kevil. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Ward Hedley and S. D. Hodge, for appellant. R. W. Lisanby, for appellee.

CARROLL, J. This action in slander was instituted by the appellant, who was plaintiff below, against the appellee, defendant below. The actionable words, which were charged to have been spoken during a fire that destroyed a building owned by appellee, are these: "I reckon Ed Edwards is satisfied now, he burned this out. I received word some time ago that he intended to burn them." When asked what he meant by this language, he replied: "Well, I heard that he (Edwards) was going to burn them."

In the first paragraph of his answer, the appellee denied speaking the words charged; and, in the second paragraph, set up that the appellant previous to the fire had threatened frequently to burn the building, and during the fire he (appellee), in a conversation with G. C. Dollar, the owner of a building that was injured by the fire, communicated to Dollar in confidence, and for the purpose of aiding him and securing his assistance and co-operation in investigating the origin of the fire, the information he had received concerning the threats of appellant, and, in the course of the conversation with Dollar, said to him without malice, and for the sole purpose of procuring his aid in ascertaining the author of the fire, "I reckon Ed Edwards is satisfied now my house is burned. I was notified he intended to burn it. I couldn't think he was mean enough to do it, but I took additional insurance." It will thus be observed, that appellee, while admitting he spoke substantially the language charged, claimed that it was under the circumstances a privileged communication. The point is made, however, that appellee, if he desired to justify or to claim that the words were spoken under circumstances that amounted to a privilege, must admit speaking the identical words charged in the petition.

The rule is that, when the defendant, in an action for slander justifies, or when he pleads that the words spoken were a privileged communication, he must admit that he spoke the words charged, or words of similar import that would in themselves be actionable. It is not necessary that the defendant should admit speaking the precise words charged in the petition. It will be sufficient if he admits the substance of the words, or so much of them as would sustain an action for slander. Thus, in Shipp v. Patton, 123 Ky. 65, 93 S. W. 1033, the words upon which the action was based were these: "Miss Nellie, when she was employed as a clerk in my store, dishonestly took away goods from the store that did not belong to her. I found in her grip a lot of goods that she had dishonestly taken from my store and put in the grip, and I accused her of dishonesty taking these goods, and she broke down and cried and begged me not to discharge her because it would disgrace her, and I kept her a few days longer in the store, and then discharged her. I would say this to anybody, because I can prove it, and I wouldn't hesitate to go into her own family and say just what I have said to you." The defendant in that case filed an answer, in which, after admitting that he spoke the words as charged, except that he did not use the word "dishonestly," denied that he spoke them maliciously, and further averred that they were spoken under circumstances that made them a privileged communication. The lower court required the defendant, before permitting him to rely on the defense that the words were privileged, to admit speaking the identical words charged in the petition. In criticising this ruling of the lower court, this court said: "To say that a defendant in a slander suit must admit all the words charged, before he is allowed to plead a qualified privilege, places the defendant in a dilemma. If he denies the speaking of the words, the plaintiff will often prove the substance of them and recover. If he is compelled to admit all the words to plead the privilege, then he must often admit that which is not true in fact, and enough to show that he was actuated by malice, which will defeat him. The plea of the defendant in this case was in its nature a plea of confession and avoidance, and, while denying the use of the word 'dishonestly,' confessed enough to give 'color' to appellee's petition; that is, left uncontroverted enough of it to give her a cause of action." Adhering to the ruling of the court in the Shipp Case, which we believe to be correct, it follows that in an action for slander, when the defendant pleads that the words spoken were privileged, he may deny that they were spoken maliciously and set out the exact language used by him, although it may not be identical with that charged in the petition; but it must be so nearly similar to it, and admit enough of the language charged to maintain an action. Applying this principle to the case before us, it is manifest that the words admitted by appellee to have been spoken were actionable, and, although not the identical words charged, they were in substance and effect the same, and so the court did not err in holding the answer to be good.

Nor is there any doubt that, if the words were spoken under the circumstances described by appellee in his answer and evidence, they were privileged in the sense that appellee has the right to show the facts surrounding their publication as an excuse or justification for the utterance. A person whose property is destroyed by fire may in a confidential way confide to his neighbors and friends whom he suspects as the incendiary, if his suspicions are based upon reasonable information or grounds, and his declarations are made in good faith. Faris v. Starke, 9 Dana, 128, 33 Am. Dec. 536; Grimes v. Coyle, 6 B. Mon. 301; Harper v. Harper, 10 Bush, 447; Campbell v. Banister, 79 Ky. 205; Nix v. Caldwell, 81 Ky. 293, 50 Am. Rep. 163; Townsend on Slander & Libel, p. 440. There was sharp conflict in the evidence as to the circumstances under which the words were spoken. According to the evidence for appellant, they were not spoken confidentially, or in good faith, or in an effort to advise and consult with friends concerning the origin of the fire. On the other hand, the appellee testified that, in confiding his suspicions to a fellow sufferer at the fire, he believed that the information previously conveyed to him that appellant was the incendiary was true, and used the language imputed to him in an effort to get advice and assistance from his friend, whose property was also injured. It is however, sufficient to say, in respect to this conflict in the evidence, that it was a matter for the jury, under proper instructions, to decide which story they would accept as true. If the version of appellant and his witnesses was believed by the jury, the communication complained of was not a privileged one; but the jury evidently accepted appellee's account of it as correct.

On the trial of the case the appellee introduced several witnesses, who testified that previous to the fire they heard appellant make remarks that indicated an intention or desire upon his part to burn or have burned the building of appellee, and that previous to the fire they communicated to appellee these threats. After this evidence was introduced, the appellant offered to show by his own testimony that he had not made any of the statements attributed to him by the witnesses; but the trial judge refused to permit him to deny that he had made these statements, putting his ruling upon the ground that it was immaterial, so far as the question of privilege was concerned, whether he in fact made the statements or not, if the statements previous to the fire had been communicated to appellee as coming from him. Of this ruling serious complaint is made. In our opinion the decision of the trial court upon this point was correct. For the purposes of appellee's defense, it was not material whether or not appellant made use of the language attributed to him by the informants of appellee. If the appellee in good faith believed what was communicated to him, and it was such as a man of reasonable prudence would believe, he had the right to act upon the assumption that it was true, although as a matter of fact it may have been false. Shipp v. Commonwealth, 124 Ky. 643, 99 S. W. 945, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 335. If appellant had been permitted to deny the remarks, the effect would be to inject into the case a question of veracity that threw no light upon the issues being tried. Under circumstances like those developed in this case, when information, such as a reasonably prudent man would believe, is communicated to him, he is not required, before acting upon it in a natural and reasonable way, to investigate its truthfulness.

The judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

SPEARS et al. v. SPAW.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. April 23, 1909.)

1. ASSIGNMENTS (§ 8*)—VALIDITY—EXPECTANCY.

A deed by which the grantors assumed to convey their interest in land which their mother owned in fee during the mother's life, subject to her use for life, with the mother's consent, was void, both at law and in equity, as against public policy.

2. ASSIGNMENTS (§ 8*)—EXPECTANCY.

Where a deed by which the grantors assumed to convey their interest in land owned by their mother in fee during the mother's lifetime was void, as against public policy, a covenant of warranty contained therein was void also.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Pulaski County.

"Not to be officially reported."

Action by Isabella Spears and others against A. J. Spaw. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed and remanded.

T. Z. Morrow and Simpson Phelps, for appellants. Sharp, Bethurum & Cooper, for appellee.

NUNN, J. In 1907 Mrs. Fanny Spaw died, the owner of a tract of land containing about 200 acres, situated in Pulaski county, Ky. She left surviving her three children, appellants, Isabella Spears and Sarah A. Whiles, and appellee, A. J. Spaw, as her only heirs at law. Soon after her death Isabella Spears and Sarah A. Whiles instituted this action for the purpose of having the land sold and the proceeds divided among the three children. A. J. Spaw, appellee, answered, denying their ownership of any interest in the land, and alleged that he purchased their interests in the lifetime of their mother at the price of $250 each, and that their mother consented to the sale and conveyance. The lower court, considering that appellee obtained title to appellants' interests in the land, dismissed their petition, and they have appealed.

It appears, without contradiction, that this conveyance was made and executed in the lifetime of their mother, who held the fee-simple title to the land, and that she verbally consented to the sale and purchase. The only question to be determined is: Was this conveyance valid for any purpose? The following language occurs in the deed, to wit: "The parties of the first part (meaning appellants) hereby convey their interest, being two-thirds of the said Fanny Spaw estate, subject to her lifetime estate, and at the death of said Fanny Spaw to be in full force and effect, * * * to have and to hold the same, together with all the appurtenances thereunto belonging, unto the party of the second part, his heirs and assigns, forever; and the said parties of the first part hereby covenant with the said party of the second part that they will warrant the title to the property hereby conveyed unto the said party of the second part, and their heirs and assigns, forever."

It is certain that this conveyance passed nothing to appellee but appellants' expectancy in the land. They had no interest in the land at that time. The mother's verbal consent to the sale of the land did not prevent her from afterwards disposing of it by will or descent. It remained within her power to prevent any of her children from receiving any part of this land or her estate. The result was that appellants had nothing to sell, and, therefore, appellee received nothing by reason of his deed. The rule is that it is essential to the legal validity of a contract that the thing sold have an actual or potential existence, and that a mere possibility or contingency, not founded on a right or coupled with an interest, cannot be the subject of a sale or assignment. In the case of Wheeler's Executors v. Wheeler, 2 Metc. 474, 74 Am. Dec. 421, the court held that a son, who had executed a deed purporting to convey his interest in his father's estate, the father then being alive, to his brother, was notwithstanding that fact entitled to recover the interest in the estate which his deed purported to convey. At common law such contracts were declared to be void; and this court in several cases, and many other courts have also, declared them to be void.

In the case of McCall's Adm'r v. Hampton, 98 Ky. 166, 32 S. W. 406, 33 L. R. A. 266, 56 Am. St. Rep. 335, this court said: "If it is wholesome to declare such contract invalid, why should courts of equity enforce such contracts in defiance of the law and a wise public policy? If this is to be the practice of courts of equity, then the common law on this subject is a dead letter and inoperative. Why should the common law declare such contracts invalid and void if courts of equity have the power to vivify and enforce them? If this is to be the rule, why not declare the common law not in force on this subject? It seems to us to be a travesty upon common sense for the law to declare a contract void, and yet say that it is enforceable in a court of equity. Some courts hold that the expectancy of an heir to inherit his father's estate is not an interest capable of assignment in equity, any more than at law, and we agree with such courts upon the question. It seems at this late day it is needless to discuss the wisdom and policy of a law which has been sanctioned for so many generations, and we do not feel that we are called upon to defend it. A strict adherence to it will save multiplying contentions, protect the improvident children and heirs at law from fraud and deceit, and save free and untrammelled the actions of the possessors of estates in their distribution."

Appellee contends that as the deed contains a general warranty of title, and that as appellants have become possessed of the property by descent, their mother having died, the warranty of title is binding upon them, and that the title to the land is in him by reason thereof. The contract and conveyance being void, the warranty is also. As stated, the conveyance of a thing not in being—i. e., an expectancy—is invalid, and the whole contract with reference thereto is void.

A reversal of this case will not create any great hardship upon appellee, as the land is worth much more than it was at the time of the making of the deed to him, and as he has obtained and sold timber trees from the land of the value of several thousand dollars; but this does not affect the legal question.

For these reasons, the judgment of the lower court is reversed, and remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.

LOUISVILLE RY. CO. et al. v. GAUGH.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. April 22, 1906.)

1. DAMAGES (§ 158*)—PLEADING—ISSUES, PROOF, AND VARIANCE.

In an action against a street railroad company to recover for injuries received while crossing defendant's track, evidence that plaintiff's sense of hearing had been injured was not admissible under a complaint charging injury to her head, except, perhaps, for the purpose of showing the extent of the injury to her head, not as a cause for which damages could be allowed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 441-446; Dec. Dig. § 158.*]

2. DAMAGES (§ 143*)—PLEADING—PERSONAL INJURIES.

In personal injury cases, plaintiff should so describe his injuries that defendant from an inspection of the pleading may have reasonable notice of the injuries for which a recovery will be sought.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. § 410; Dec. Dig. § 143.*]

3. STREET RAILROADS (§ 113*)—ACTIONS FOR INJURIES—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY OF COMPANY'S RULES.

In an action for injuries by being struck by defendant's car while crossing its track, the rules of the company regulating its employees in the operation of its cars are not admissible in evidence, as the question of negligence of defendant's employees cannot be tested by the manner in which they have followed the company's rules, but such negligence must be tested by the rules of law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 113.*]

4. STREET RAILROADS (§ 118*)—ACTIONS FOR INJURIES—INSTRUCTIONS—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Plaintiff was injured while attempting to cross a street railroad track by being struck by a car and being thrown in front of a car going in the opposite direction. The court instructed as to the care required of the operators of the cars, as well as by plaintiff, and gave an instruction defining "contributory negligence" that would defeat a recovery. Held, that the court should also have instructed that if plaintiff, after she saw the car approaching, undertook to cross the track so close to the car that the motorman in charge of it could not, by the exercise of ordinary care with the means at his command, stop the car or check its speed in time to avoid striking plaintiff, and that plaintiff after being struck fell in front of the other car so close to the same that the motorman in charge could not, by the exercise of ordinary care with the means at his command, prevent striking plaintiff, then the law is for the defendants, unless the jury believe that the inability of the motorman in charge of either of the cars to stop the cars was due to the unusual, dangerous, or reckless speed at which said cars or either of them were running at the time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 118.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County, Common Pleas Branch, Third Division. "To be officially reported."

Action by Emma C. Gaugh against the Louisville Railway Company and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Fairleigh, Straus & Fairleigh, David W. Baird, and Howard B. Lee, for appellants. Bennett H. Young and Gregory & McHenry, for appellee.

CARROLL, J. The appellant railway company has two tracks on Payne street in the city of Louisville, at the point where it intersects with Spring street. At the time appellee was injured, the interurban car that runs from La Grange to Louisville was going west into the city on one of the tracks of the railway company under an arrangement with that company, and a Crescent Hill car of the railway company was coming east on the other track. The appellee, who was on Spring street at its intersection with Payne street, desiring to take the Crescent Hill car, found it necessary to cross the two tracks at Spring street, so that she might be at that corner at which the Crescent Hill car stopped to take on passengers. As she was in the act of crossing the tracks, she was struck by the west-bound interurban car and knocked in front of the east-bound Crescent Hill car, and as a result was severely injured. The negligence complained of consisted in the fact that the cars at the time they struck appellee were running at a high rate of speed, and that no gong was sounded or bell rung or notice given of the approach of either of them to the crossing. The petition further avers that she was greatly injured in her "head, sides, hips, shoulders, breast, back, limbs, and internally." Upon the trial of the case before a jury, a substantial verdict was returned in favor of appellee against both the companies. Of a judgment entered upon this verdict they complain and ask a reversal: (1) Because the verdict is not sustained by sufficient testimony and establishes conclusively that appellee's contributory negligence brought about the accident and injuries resulting therefrom; (2) because the court erred in permitting appellee to testify that her hearing on the left side had been destroyed by the injury she received in the collision with the cars; (3) for error in permitting the rules of the company regulating and governing their employees in the operation and control of the cars to be read in evidence; and (4) for error in giving and refusing instructions.

In respect to the first assignment of error, it is sufficient to say that, although the evidence was very conflicting, there was sufficient to take the case to the jury, and we are not prepared to say that the verdict was so flagrantly against the evidence as to authorize a reversal upon this ground. Further comment upon the evidence would not be proper in view of the fact that there will probably be a retrial of the case.

During the examination of appellee, she was permitted, over the objection of counsel for appellant, to state that her hearing was partially destroyed as a result of the injuries she sustained. The point is made that this evidence was incompetent because outside of, or at least not embraced by, the injuries described in the petition. The averments of the petition describing the injuries received by appellee covered every part of her person, including her head; and the argument is made that, under the allegation that her head was injured, appellee had the right to recover for injury not only to the head strictly speaking, but to any of the organs of sense located in the head, as to illustrate, seeing or hearing. A charge that a person has received injuries on or about the head will ordinarily only convey notice to the adverse party that a recovery will be sought for injuries to the head as that part of the body is ordinarily understood in speaking of it. The sense of hearing, as well as the sense of sight, is located in the head; but, if a person should say that his head was injured, it would scarcely convey information that his hearing was diminished or his eyesight impaired. The purpose of a pleading is to give notice to the adverse party of the grounds upon which a recovery will be sought against him, and in personal injury cases the plaintiff should so describe his injuries as that the defendant, from an inspection of the pleading, may have reasonable notice of the injuries for which a recovery will be sought, and thus be prepared to meet the evidence tendered by the plaintiff in support of his pleading. It is true that, if the pleading is indefinite or obscure, the defendant may move the court to require the plaintiff to make the allegations more specific; but the duty of preparing the petition in such a manner that it will inform the defendant with reasonable certainty concerning the injuries received is upon the plaintiff. The pleader is supposed to be informed with reference to the injury his client has sustained, or, at any rate, he can readily obtain this information; and so it would seem that justice to the adverse party requires that the petition in cases of personal injury should set out with reasonable certainty the particular injuries received.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

ed. We do not hold that it is necessary to specify with minute particularity all the injuries for which a recovery will be asked, but only that the petition shall give to the defendant reasonable information touching the injuries complained of for which damages will be sought and concerning which evidence will be offered. In many cases remote or consequential injuries may follow from the direct blow or wound received and be directly traceable to it, and yet it could not be said that they were the natural or probable result of the injury. To illustrate, rheumatism might follow an injury to the leg, and as a consequence of the injury; but we should say that, if it was sought to recover damages on account of the rheumatism, the pleader should specify it. And so loss of memory might result from an injury to the head, but it could not well be said that this misfortune was a reasonable or natural sequence of the injury. In short, without attempting, except in this general way, to formulate any rule, we may say the plaintiff can introduce evidence concerning and recover damages not only for the specific injury complained of, but for such other injuries as might reasonably and naturally be presumed to result from it without pointing out such injuries; but, unless the resultant injuries are such as would reasonably and naturally be presumed to follow the injury specified, a recovery cannot be had for them.

Although there is a wide difference in the opinions of the courts of last resort touching the question under consideration, the views we have presented are in accord with the rulings of this court upon similar questions as found in Louisville Railway Co. v. Ellerhorst, 110 S. W. 823, L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Roney, 108 S. W. 343, and L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Richmond, 67 S. W. 25. And, also, in Atchison Ry. Co. v. Willey, 57 Kan. 764, 48 Pac. 25; Montgomery v. Lansing City R. Co., 103 Mich. 46, 61 N. W. 543, 29 L. R. A. 287.

It should further be said, as illustrated in the cases mentioned, that "where specific injuries are sued for, any external symptoms which are evidence of the injury may properly be admitted, for it is only by the external symptoms that an internal injury may be judged"; but, when evidence is offered to show that injuries described in the petition have manifested themselves in symptoms not described in the pleading, the court should instruct the jury that the testimony relating to the symptoms not pointed out is admitted only as evidence of the injuries described. It follows from this that the court should have excluded the evidence offered to show that appellee's hearing was impaired; or, if it was permitted to be introduced, should have instructed the jury that the testimony concerning her hearing was only admitted for the purpose of showing the extent of the injury to her head, and not as a cause for which damages could be allowed.

In permitting the rules of the company regulating and governing its employees in the operation and control of cars to be read to the jury, over the objection of appellants, the court in our opinion erred. The care employees of companies must exercise in the operation of cars, so far as the general public is concerned, is to be determined by the principles of law, and not by the rules adopted by the company for the guidance of its employees. The measure of the company's duty to appellee was not to be judged by any rule of the company, but by the rules established by this court, in the absence of a statute, regulating the care that the persons in charge of a car must exercise to prevent injury to passengers or persons upon the street. If the rules adopted by the company imposed a less degree of care upon employees than the law exacted, the company could not shield itself from liability upon the ground that the rules it established were being obeyed when the accident complained of occurred; and so, if the rules of the company imposed a higher degree of care than the law demanded, the measure of the company's responsibility would be tested, not by its rules, but by the law. The appellee did not, so far as this record shows, know anything about the rules of the company. So far as she was concerned, it was wholly immaterial whether any rules had been adopted or not. Not being in the service of the company, she had no right and was under no duty to depend upon the rules for protection. C. & O. Ry. Co. v. Barnes (Ky.) 117 S. W. 261. Whether the employees violated or observed them did not in any wise affect or change the liability of the company, or lessen or increase its duty or responsibility to appellee. Nor did their observance or nonobservance of the rules relieve appellee of the duty she was under to exercise care for her own safety. It would therefore seem clear that the rules had no place in the case. They did not explain or illustrate any phase that was relevant or pertinent to the issue being tried. Fonda v. St. Paul City R. Co., 71 Minn. 438, 74 N. W. 166, 70 Am. St. Rep. 341; Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Clark, 136 Ala. 450, 34 South. 917.

The next error complained of is in respect to the giving and refusing of instructions. The instructions given did not conform to those directed to be given in this class of cases in Louisville Ry. Co. v. Gaar (Ky.) 112 S. W. 1130, and Louisville Ry. Co. v. Byer's Adm'r (Ky.) 113 S. W. 463, and for this reason are open to the objections urged against them. The defense of the company was that appellee came upon the track of the interurban car so suddenly and so close to the approaching car that it was impossible for the motorman to stop the car or slacken its speed in time to avoid striking her, and that she was thrown in front of the other car too near to it to prevent injury. The trial court gave the usual instructions as to the care necessary to be exercised by the operators of the cars, as well as the appellee, and also one defining correctly the "contributory negligence" upon the part of appellee that would defeat a recovery, but declined to give an instruction presenting the view that if appellee, after she saw the car approaching, undertook to cross the track so close to the car that the motorman in charge of it could not by the exercise of ordinary care and the means at his command stop the car or check its speed in time to avoid striking the plaintiff, they should find for the defendant. The facts of this case are almost identical with the facts of the Byer Case, and the court should have given an instruction similar to that approved in the Byer Case; in other words, the court should have told the jury that: "If they believed from the evidence that plaintiff, after she saw the interurban car approaching, undertook to cross the track in front of it, and so close to the front end of the approaching car that the motorman in charge of the same could not, after discovering her peril, by the exercise of ordinary care and the means at his command, stop the car or check its speed in time to avoid striking her, and further believe from the evidence that the plaintiff, after being struck by said car, fell in front of the other car, so close to the same that the motorman in charge of said car could not by the exercise of ordinary care and the means at his command prevent striking or running upon the plaintiff, then the law is for both of the defendants, and the jury should so find, unless they believe from the evidence that the inability, if any, of the motorman in charge of either of the cars to stop the cars, was due to the unusual, or dangerous, or reckless speed at which said cars, or either of them, were running at the time." And so, the other instructions should be modified to conform to the views expressed in the Gaar Case.

The judgment is reversed, with directions for a new trial in conformity with this opinion.

CHOTEAU TRUST & BANKING CO. v. SMITH et al.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. April 21, 1909.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 356*) — CHECKS — "HOLDER IN DUE COURSE."

Where a bank in the usual course of business took a check in good faith and without notice of any infirmity in it, paying the holder part of the proceeds and depositing the remainder to his credit, the bank was a "holder in due course" under St. 1909, § 3720b, subsecs. 51, 52

(Russell's St. §§ 1920, 1921), defining such a holder.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 906; Dec. Dig. § 356.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, p. 3320.]

2. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 363*) — HOLDER IN DUE COURSE—ACTIONS.

Under St. 1909, § 3720b, subsec. 57 (Russell's St. § 1926), providing that a holder in due course holds the instrument free from any defect of title of prior parties and from defenses available to prior parties among themselves, and may enforce payment for the full amount thereof against all persons liable thereon, a bank which was the holder in due course of a check received from an indorser could upon the dishonor elect to sue the maker and indorsers or any one of them for the full amount of the check.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 790; Dec. Dig. § 363.*]

3. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 363*) — CHECK — BONA FIDE HOLDER — RIGHT OF ACTION AGAINST MAKER.

Though a bank was a bona fide holder of a check for value when it acquired it, it could not recover thereon against the maker if the maker should plead and show that the bank had parted with its interest and was simply suing for the benefit of an indorser who had paid back to the bank the money it had paid him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 790; Dec. Dig. § 363.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Scott County.

"To be officially reported."

Action by the Choteau Trust & Banking Company against O. T. Smith and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Jas. B. Finnell and Jas. F. Askew, for appellant. Bradley & Bradley, for appellees.

HOBSON, J. On October 31, 1906, O. T. Smith gave to H. B. Kinsolving a check for $380 on the Deposit Bank of Sadleville, Ky. Kinsolving indorsed the check to J. B. Dunn, and Dunn indorsed it to the Choteau Trust & Banking Company. The check when presented for payment was protested by the direction of Smith, and the Choteau Trust & Banking Company brought this suit against Smith to recover on the check in the Scott circuit court. W. A. Hinton on his petition was made a party defendant to the action. He and Smith in defense of the suit charged that the check had been obtained by fraud, and denied that the bank was a bona fide holder for value. By an amended answer they pleaded that the bank was fraudulently conniving with Kinsolving and Dunn to assist them in collecting the check and to use the name of the bank as plaintiff for the fraudulent purpose of preventing them from relying upon their defenses to the paper as against the original payee. The case was heard before a jury, who entered a verdict in favor of the defendants. Judgment was entered on the verdict, and the plaintiff appeals.

ritory. In October, 1906, the Howey Realty & Financing Company had a sale and drawing of lots there and ran an excursion from Lexington, Ky., out to the drawing; the realty company paying the expenses of any person who bought 10 lots at $45 each. Kinsolving was an agent of the company. Smith and Hinton were on the train. On the way out Kinsolving persuaded Hinton to buy 10 lots. His traveling expenses were deducted from the amount the lots cost, and Hinton then got Smith to give Kinsolving his check for $380, as Hinton was in some doubt that he had this much to his credit in bank. When they got to Choteau, and Hinton saw the lots, he became dissatisfied and demanded the return of his check. In the meantime, however, Kinsolving had indorsed the check to Dunn, and Dunn had indorsed it to the plaintiff. When Kinsolving refused to return the check, Smith telegraphed the bank at Sadieville not to pay it, and for this reason the check was not paid when it finally reached there. The evidence is very conflicting as to what took place between Kinsolving and Hinton on the train; but there was sufficient evidence to submit to the jury the question whether the check was obtained by fraud, under the rule in this state that where there is any evidence the question is for the jury; but the evidence is conclusive that the bank took the check in good faith and without notice of any infirmity in it, and that at the time it paid Dunn $125, he depositing the remainder with it. He checked this out a day or so afterwards and before the check was protested. The bank had no interest in the sale of the lots or in the realty company, and the transaction with Dunn was in the usual course of business. It does not appear from the record where Dunn lived, although it may perhaps be inferred from some of the proof that he lived in St. Louis. It is said that he was solvent, and there is no evidence to the contrary. The defendants showed by a number of Kentucky bankers that by the usual course of banking, when a check which had been received was dishonored, the bank would look to the person who had indorsed the check to it, if he was solvent, rather than to the maker of the check, and upon this evidence the court gave the jury the following instruction: "The jury are instructed to find for the plaintiff, the Choteau Trust & Banking Company, unless they believe from the evidence that the plaintiff conspired with H. B. Kinsolving and J. B. Dunn, the payee and indorser of said check, respectively, to defraud the defendant Hinton by depriving him of any right or rights he had to resist and refuse payment of said check, because of misrepresentations made, if any were made, to Hinton by the agent or agents of the Howey Realty Company concerning the lots alleged to have been purchased by said Hinton from said company. Then they ought to find for defendant."

It is evident from the proof that the bank was a holder of the check for value; but it is insisted that its not looking to Dunn for the money, and insisting on collecting it from Smith, is evidence that it is no longer a holder of the paper for value, and that the suit is brought under an arrangement with Dunn to defraud Smith and Hinton, by depriving them of their right to show the check was obtained by fraud. Section 3720b, subsecs. 51, 52, 56, 57, Ky. St. (Russell's St. §§ 1920, 1921, 1925, 1926), provides as follows:

"The holder of a negotiable instrument may sue thereon in his own name, and payment to him in due course discharges the instrument." Subsection 51.

"A holder in due course is a holder who has taken the instrument under the following conditions: (1) That the instrument is complete and regular upon its face. (2) That he became the holder of it before it was overdue, and without notice that it had been previously dishonored, if such was the fact. (3) That he took it in good faith and for value. (4) That at the time it was negotiated to him he had no notice of any infirmity in the instrument or defect in the title of the person negotiating it." Subsection 52.

"To constitute notice of an infirmity in the instrument or defect in the title of the person negotiating the same, the person to whom it is negotiated must have had actual knowledge of the infirmity or defect, or knowledge of such facts that his action in taking the instrument amounted to bad faith." Subsection 56.

"A holder in due course holds the instrument free from any defect of title of prior parties and free from defenses available to prior parties among themselves, and may enforce payment of the instrument for the full amount thereof against all parties liable thereon." Subsection 57.

As the plaintiff is a holder in due course, it has a legal right under the statute to enforce payment of the instrument for the full amount of it against all parties liable thereon. When the plaintiff has the right to sue all or any of the makers of an instrument at his election, the person who is sued cannot complain that others equally liable are not sued. If six persons sign a promissory note, and the payee sues one of them, he cannot complain that suit was not brought against the other five. The exercise of a legal right cannot be made the basis of a defense to an action. If Dunn is good, and Smith has to pay this check to the bank, he can then sue Dunn for the money which he has paid; but he cannot demand of the bank that it shall forego its action against him, and bring an action against Dunn before it requires him to pay the debt. The purpose of the statute is to give the holder of the paper an election as to whom he will sue. A large part of the business of the country is done on checks. Checks are taken as money, and pass from hand to hand as such, because it is understood that an innocent holder can enforce payment against the maker without regard to any defense he may have against the payee; but if the rule were laid down that the banks who cash checks must in the first place look to the indorser, or that their failure to look to the indorser is evidence of a fraudulent conspiracy, the whole value of checks for commercial purposes would be destroyed, and the manifest intention of the statute would be defeated. We had a similar question before us in Sabel v. Planters' Bank, 110 Ky. 299, 61 S. W. 367. The bank there had cashed a draft to which a bill of lading was attached as security. The drawee refused to accept the draft and then undertook to attach the goods covered by the bill of lading, insisting that the bank was not a holder for value and was only prosecuting the suit to cut off his defense against the drawer. It was held that the attachment could not prevail. To hold that the failure of the bank to follow the custom of looking to the indorser is evidence of a fraudulent conspiracy with him to defeat the equities of the maker would be to require the bank to follow the custom in order to be safe in its suit, and the result in the end would be practically to deny to it the right to look to any or all of the parties at its election. The statute is only declaratory of the common law and the rule heretofore in force in this state: "A bona fide holder for value of negotiable paper is one who has acquired title in the usual course of business, for a valuable consideration, in good faith, from one capable of transferring it or from one in possession of the paper with an apparent right to transfer it and without notice or knowledge of defenses or circumstances which should put him on inquiry." 7 Cyc. 924. "Defenses available against the real party in interest may be set up, although the action be brought by a nominal party." 8 Cyc. 25. "The real party in interest is the person beneficially entitled to the proceeds of the bill or note. As a rule the holder is presumptively the owner, and as such is the real party in interest and entitled to bring suit." 8 Cyc. 69. "At common law the holder of a bill might bring several simultaneous actions against all or any of the prior parties liable to him. He could not, however, maintain a joint action against parties severally liable. By statute in many of the United States, in England, and in Canada the holder of a bill of exchange or promissory note may bring suit against the drawer or maker, acceptor or indorser, any or all, in the same action." 8 Cyc. 92.

If the purchaser of the paper is a bona fide holder for value when he acquires it, he may enforce the payment of the paper, unless the defendant pleads and shows that he is not the real party in interest. If the defendant here had pleaded and shown that the bank had no actual interest in the collection of the note, or that it was simply bringing the action in its own name for the benefit of Dunn, who had already paid back to it the money it had paid him, the principle relied on by counsel would apply; but there was an entire failure to establish anything of this sort, and, on the conclusion of the evidence, the court should have instructed the jury peremptorily to find for the plaintiff.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.

Action by R. M. Jolly, Jr., against the United States Health & Accident Insurance Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

See, also, 101 S. W. 1179.

Barnes & Kincheloe and Murray & Murray, for appellant. John P. Haswell, Jr., for appellee.

HOBSON, J. The United States Health & Accident Insurance Company issued to R. M. Jolly, Jr., a policy by which it agreed to pay him an indemnity of $40 a month after the first week that he was necessarily and continuously confined in the house and regularly visited by a legally qualified physician by reason of illness contracted and beginning after the policy had been maintained in continuous force for 30 consecutive days. The latter part of January, 1905, he was taken sick, and claimed the indemnity. The company denied liability, and this suit followed. On the first trial of the case, there was a verdict and judgment in his favor for $251. On appeal to this court it was held that the verdict was palpably against the weight of the evidence. It was also held that Jolly was not a competent witness as to what took place between him and the agent of the company when the application was made, as the agent was dead. See United States Health & Accident Insurance Company v. Jolly, 101 S. W. 1179. On a return of the case to the circuit court, it was tried again; Jolly recovering a judgment and verdict for $240. The company appeals.

The evidence on the second trial no more supports the verdict than the evidence on the first trial. The verdict is palpably against the evidence. On the trial the court allowed Jolly, as a witness for himself, to state that he had made none of the statements in the application after No. 8. This was error. As the agent was dead, Jolly could not testify as to anything that occurred between him and the agent when the application was taken, and to allow him to say that he did not make certain statements contained in the application is in effect to allow him to state that certain things did not occur between him and the agent, or to testify to what did occur between him and the agent. The court should have sustained the defendant's objection to this evidence and should not have allowed Jolly to state anything as to what he stated or did not state to the agent when the application was taken.

The court also allowed Dr. L. B. Moreman to state, over the defendant's objection, that he had sent some pus from the plaintiff's thigh to a chemist in Louisville, that the latter had examined it under a microscope, and had reported to him what the examination showed. He was allowed to tell what the report was. The chemist may tell that he made the examination, and what his examination showed, if he is shown to be competent to speak as an expert; but his report to Dr. Moreman is not competent as evidence of what his examination showed. This would be to allow hearsay. All the evidence as to this examination should have been excluded. The witness several times spoke of examinations made by other insurance companies. The court excluded the evidence, but when it was repeated he should have cautioned the witness as to his previous ruling, and should have admonished the jury not to consider the statement.

On the last trial of the case the court gave the same instructions to the jury as he had given on the first trial. This seems to have been done because this court in the former opinion said nothing of the instructions. The reason that nothing was said as to the instructions was that the court could not anticipate what the evidence would be on another trial. What the instructions should be must necessarily depend on the evidence before the jury. When we exclude the evidence of the plaintiff as to what took place between him and the agent, there is nothing in the record to base instructions 2 and 3 upon; for Dr. Moreman, the only other witness introduced, shows distinctly he does not know what took place between Jolly and the agent. Instructions 2 and 3 therefore should not have been given. In lieu of them, the court should have told the jury: (1) That, if the plaintiff's illness was not contracted or did not begin after the policy had been maintained in continuous force for 30 consecutive days, they should find for the defendant. (2) In another instruction he should have set out the answers in the application relied on by the defendant and should have told the jury that, if these answers were untrue, and if true answers had been given the insurer, acting naturally and reasonably in accordance with the usual practice among health and accident insurance companies, would not have taken the risk, they should find for the defendant. Providence Savings Life Assurance Co. v. Wayne, 93 S. W. 1049.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Larue County.
"Not to be officially reported."

William Cox was convicted of voluntary manslaughter on a charge of murder, and appeals. Affirmed.

Jno. C. Friend, for appellant. Jas. Breathitt, Atty. Gen., and Tom B. McGregor, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the Commonwealth.

SETTLE, C. J. The appellant, Wm. Cox, killed Harlan Goode by striking him upon the head with a stick, or piece of timber. The indictment under which he was tried charged him with the crime of murder. The trial resulted in a verdict finding him guilty of voluntary manslaughter and fixing his punishment at confinement in the penitentiary seven years. Judgment was entered in accordance with the verdict. Having been refused a new trial, appellant now asks of this court a reversal of the judgment.

The homicide occurred in a house situated at a lumber camp in Larue county. The house seems to have been owned at one time by the deceased, Harlan Goode; but at the time of his death was under the control of appellant, though much if not all of the furniture therein was owned by Goode. However, the latter, his two sons, one Jasper Hogue, and other hands at work in the lumber camps were boarding in the house with appellant. On the afternoon of the homicide, the boarders of appellant having obtained some whisky, many of them, including appellant and Harlan Goode, drank of it freely, and several of them became intoxicated. This was true of Goode, and perhaps of appellant. In the evening several of the boarders, including the two sons of Harlan Goode and Hogue, went to some sort of an entertainment in the neighborhood. Harlan Goode, being unwell, retired at an early hour; his bed being in the same room occupied by appellant, his wife, and little daughter. Late in the night the boarders who had attended the party returned; Willie Goode going up to the room occupied by his father, appellant, and his wife and daughter. The returning boarders, including Willie Goode, were still drinking and hilarious. After Willie reached his father's room, the two had some conversation about Hogue, in which his father accused Hogue of having stolen certain articles about the house, and perhaps advised his son to tell Hogue of it. Following this conversation Hogue entered, or was called by Willie Goode into the room where his father was in bed. Soon after entering the room, Hogue and Willie Goode got into an altercation, and later a fight. After a vain effort to stop the difficulty by calling to the belligerents from the bed, Harlan Goode got up and went to them, pulled his son away from Hogue, ordered the latter from the room, and slapped him in the face. This seemed to increase the disorder, and just then appellant jumped from his bed and with pistol in hand approached the disorderly persons, ordered them to be quiet, and threatened them with the pistol. Failing to restore order, appellant, with the pistol still in his hand, left the room with the avowed purpose of getting Norman Tucker, the proprietor of the camp, to go to the house and stop the fighting and disorder. Tucker slept in an office building some yards from the house occupied by appellant and his boarders. Appellant soon returned to the house with Tucker, and when they got to the door they found there Harlan Goode, his son Willie, and Jasper Hogue. Harlan Goode came out of the door, and, according to the several witnesses of the commonwealth, appellant stepped from behind Tucker and, picking up from the ground a large stick of timber, struck Harlan Goode on the head with it, knocking him down. Goode got up, walked a few steps, and again fell. When others went to him, they found him unconscious, and, taking him into the house, laid him on a bed. In a few hours he died. According to the three witnesses of the commonwealth, the deceased neither made, nor attempted to make, an attack upon appellant when the latter struck him, and was not expecting the blow. On the other hand, appellant testified that, before he left the house to get Tucker, deceased threatened to take his life, and when he and Tucker met deceased at the door Willie Goode was holding and trying to keep him from leaving the house, but that deceased broke loose from him, and as he came out of the door had a chair in his hands, which appellant believed he was going to strike him with, as he was coming towards him. That acting upon this belief, and having reasonable grounds to apprehend that his life was in danger at the hands of deceased, he struck and killed him. Tucker was not present when appellant was tried, but the latter obtained the benefit of his testimony by setting it forth in his own affidavit, which was admitted by the court and read as a deposition. The testimony thus attributed to Tucker was in the main corroborative of appellant's account of the killing.

Counsel for appellant insists that the verdict of the jury is contrary to law and unsupported by the evidence. We see no force in this claim. No complaint is made of the instructions, which fairly and correctly gave the law of the case, and the record presents no reason for saying that the verdict is contrary to or unsupported by the evidence. There were three witnesses for the commonwealth, John Goode, Willie Goode, and Joseph Hogue, whose testimony tended to establish appellant's guilt. They were contradicted only by appellant and the deposition of Tucker. In view of this situation, we can well understand how the jury reached the conclusion expressed by the verdict. This court will not disturb the verdict of the jury upon the facts of a criminal case, except in the absence of proof to support it.

We can see nothing prejudicial in the statements of the commonwealth's attorney that Tucker, upon returning with appellant to the place where deceased was killed, had the pistol appellant carried to him. The latter said he gave it to Tucker at the office to keep the disorderly persons at the house from getting it, but it was not clear from his testimony or the deposition of Tucker what the latter did with the pistol, after he received it. Therefore it cannot be said that the statement of the commonwealth's attorney that Tucker had it in his hand when he went with appellant to the house was an inference unauthorized by the evidence. As said by this court in Housman v. Commonwealth, 110 S. W. 236: "Much latitude is, of necessity, allowed an attorney in the presentation of his case; the only limitations being such as require him to confine himself to the facts introduced in evidence, and the fair and reasonable deductions and conclusions to be drawn therefrom and the application of the law, as given by the court, to the facts proven. Controlled, regulated, and bounded alone by these limitations, an advocate may with perfect propriety appeal to the jury with all the power, force, and persuasiveness which his learning, skill, and experience enable him to command, and of this character of argument the accused may not complain, even though he feels that his conviction may be traceable more directly to the argument of counsel than to the facts proven."

We find no error in the refusal of the court to grant a new trial on account of the alleged newly discovered evidence of Mrs. Underwood. At most, it is merely cumulative, and, besides, this ground was unsupported by the affidavit of the alleged new witness. Moreover, the affidavit of appellant and his counsel failed to manifest such diligence as should have been used to earlier discover the new witness and the facts in her possession.

Being of opinion that appellant received a fair trial, the judgment is affirmed.

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 822*) — DEFECTIVE STREETS — INJURIES — NEGLIGENCE — INSTRUCTIONS.

Where the officers of a city for several months prior to the accident had knowledge of the general defective condition of the street at the point where plaintiff was injured which knowledge was contradicted, the court would have been warranted in treating it as admitted, and hence the city was not prejudiced because the court omitted to charge that the city was entitled to reasonable time to make needed repairs after knowledge of the defect, though it was not shown that defendant had knowledge of the existence of the particular hole that caused the accident in question.

Board of Councilmen of the City of Frankfort. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. Cromwell, for appellant. B. G. Williams, for appellee.

LASSING, J. Appellee sued to recover damages for an injury sustained by being thrown from her buggy while driving over one of the streets in the eastern part of the city, the petition alleging that, by reason of one of the wheels of her buggy running into a rut or hole in the street, the axle of the buggy was broken, and she was thrown violently upon and over the dashboard and severely and seriously injured; that the defective condition of the street was known, or could have been known by the city officials by the exercise of ordinary care; and that but for its said defective condition the accident and consequent injury would not have occurred. The city answered, joining issue on each material allegation of the petition, and upon the issue so formed the case was tried by a jury, which returned a verdict in favor of appellee for $1,125.

To reverse this judgment the city appeals. Several grounds are set up in the motion for a new trial, but only two of which are seriously considered by counsel in his brief. These are, first, that the verdict is flagrantly against the evidence; and, second, that the jury was not properly instructed, in that the court failed to state in the instruction that, after notice of the defective condition of the street had been brought home to the city, it should have a reasonable time within which to repair same before liability would attach for an injury resulting to one because of such defective condition.

The evidence shows that the street in question for a considerable distance on each side of where the accident occurred was in a very bad condition. The mayor stated that his attention had been called to this bad and defective condition of the street at that point as much as two or three months before the date of the accident. The city engineer and others of the city officials likewise had knowledge of this defective condition brought home to them, and, while there is no testimony showing that any of said officials knew of the existence of the particular hole which caused the breaking of the axle, still they all knew that the entire street at that point was in a dangerous, unsafe, and defective condition. It appears that its condition was so bad at that time and place that three other vehicles were either stalled or broken down at almost the same point where the accident to appellee's buggy occurred. There is no proof in the case to the contrary. This evidence as to the existence of these defects in the street at that point for such a length of time being uncontradicted, the court was warranted in treating it as a fact admitted, and appellant was certainly not prejudiced because the instruction failed to state that appellant was entitled to be given a reasonable time in which to make the needed repairs after knowledge of the defective condition of the street had been brought home to the city. This principle was recognized in the case of L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Morris' Adm'x, 20 S. W. 539, in which this court said: "An instruction is not objectionable because it assumed an uncontroverted fact, or one which is admitted or conclusively shown by the evidence." And again in the case of L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Earl's Adm'x, 94 Ky. 368, 22 S. W. 607: "An uncontroverted fact may properly be assumed in an instruction." The city authorities having admitted that the defective condition of the street had been known to them for the length of time shown by the evidence, and there being no testimony to the effect that any effort had been made to repair same within that time, the court was warranted in declaring as a matter of law that if the jury believed from the evidence that the street was in the condition which the witnesses had described it to be, and this fact was known to the city officials, as they admitted it was, and appellee's injury was caused by such defective condition, then the city was liable. Under the evidence in this case the instructions, as given by the court, were as favorable to the appellant as it was entitled to have them.

We come next to a consideration of the other ground relied upon for reversal, to wit, that the verdict is not sustained by the evidence. Appellee is past 60 years of age, has borne 12 children and raised 11 of them. Prior to the date of the accident she had enjoyed good health, and been able to attend to her household and other duties. She states that since the accident she has suffered continuously with pains in the back, is nervous, and her ankle, which was wrenched at the time of the injury, has given her much trouble. Her physician testifies that this nervous condition, accompanied by pains in the back, is due to an injury to the bladder and womb. Other physicians who were appointed by the court to examine her testify that they found the womb in an unnatural condition. Of course, whether this condition was produced by the fall at the time of the accident or by other cause they were unable to say, and, in fact, the family physician who examined appellee the day following the accident was unable to state positively whether the condition in which he found appellee's womb was due to the accident or to other cause; but there is no testimony tending in the slightest to contradict the statement of the appellee and other of her witnesses to the effect that prior to that day she was a strong, healthy, robust woman, and that since that time her health has been impaired to a considerable extent. She has been constantly under the care of a physician, and undoubtedly, if the troubles with which she is now suffering were the result of the accident, a verdict for a much larger sum would not be unreasonable. As to whether or not the accident brought about and produced this condition it was the province of the jury to determine. They saw and heard the witnesses, and accepted the contention of appellee that she was seriously if not permanently injured when she was thrown from her buggy, as alleged in her petition.

We have carefully considered the record, and fail to find any error prejudicial to appellant's substantial rights in the conduct of the trial; and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

BURTON'S ADM'R v. SELPH.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. April 22, 1909.)

GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 148*)—ACCOUNTING—PAYMENTS BY GUARDIAN'S SURETY.

Where defendant's intestate, on his resignation as plaintiff's guardian, and the appointment of one of plaintiff's brothers as guardian, with another brother as surety, failed to make a valid transfer of plaintiff's estate to his successor, defendant, on being called to account, was not entitled to credit for payments, made for plaintiff's benefit by the succeeding guardian's surety from mere brotherly kindness, but was only entitled to credit for such sums as had been expended for plaintiff's benefit, either by the succeeding guardian, or his surety, by the direction or authority or with the consent of such guardian.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County, Chancery Branch, Second Division.

"Not to be officially reported."

Action by Ile N. Selpb against George W. Burton's Administrator. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. L. Burton and Barrett & Barrett, for appellant. O. A. Wehle, D. H. French, Henry L. Stone, and Albert S. Brandeis, for appellee.

CARROLL, J. In this action the appellee, Selpb, sought to recover from his former guardian several hundred dollars alleged to be due upon settlements. A judgment was rendered in his favor for the sum of $882.20, with interest from February 9, 1893. The administrator of the guardian, who died several years ago, prosecutes this appeal, asking a reversal of the judgment because the amount awarded is more than appellee was entitled to recover.

To understand the grounds upon which a reversal is asked it will be necessary to state the substantial facts shown by the record. Burton, now deceased, was appointed guardian of the appellee, Selpb, about 1874. At that time Selpb was only two years old. He continued to act as guardian until 1888, at which time he resigned, and Frank Selpb, a brother of appellee, was appointed guardian in his stead, and qualified with John Selpb, another brother, as surety. When Burton resigned, there was in his hands as guardian $857.50. The appellee became of age in 1893, and soon thereafter instituted this suit against his former guardian Burton to recover the amount shown to be in his hands at the time he resigned the trust. This action proceeded to a judgment that resulted in a dismissal of his petition by the lower court. On appeal to this court, it was held in an opinion that may be found in 68 S. W. 407, that the transfer of the estate by Burton to Frank Selpb was void, and that Burton was liable to the appellee for the amount in his custody at the time he resigned his trust. In the course of the opinion the court said that, although appellee was entitled to recover from Burton the amount stated, yet Burton was entitled to credit by any sums appellee received from Frank Selpb after he qualified as his guardian.

The lower court found that appellee had received from Frank, between September, 1888, and July 1, 1889, $111, and allowed Burton credit by this amount, and also for $40.81 commission. The Burtons contend that there was expended by Frank Selpb and his surety, John Selpb, in educating and maintaining appellee, after the appointment of Frank as guardian, the sum of $480.50, in place of $111, and it is insisted that Burton should have credit by this sum in place of $111, and also that he should be allowed $95 commission in addition to the $46.81 allowed. There is really no serious dispute about the fact that John Selpb, the surety of Frank, and a brother of appellee, did expend, in educating and maintaining appellee after Frank's appointment as guardian, as much, if not more than, $480.50; and, whether he expended this sum, at the instance or request of the guardian, or with the expectation of being reimbursed by Frank, or expended it as an act of brotherly kindness, without any direction from Frank, or expectation or prospect that it would be repaid, is really the principal issue in the case.

It is argued by counsel for the Burtons that Burton should have credit by any sums expended by John in educating and maintaining appellee, although John may not have had any direction from Frank to expend the money, or have expected that he would repay it; and this, upon the ground that, as John was the surety of Frank, and an action had been brought by appellee against Frank and John on the guardian's bond, the surety would be subrogated to any claim that the guardian might have and entitled to credit by any sums he as surety paid out for the use and benefit of the ward. We do not, however, regard this position as tenable. If John, merely as an act of brotherly kindness, educated and maintained appellee without promise of reward from Frank, or any agreement or understanding upon the part of Frank that he would pay the sum expended, neither Frank nor John could assert the amount so paid out as a credit, if suit had been brought against them on their bond by appellee. Neither the surety of a guardian, nor any other person, will be permitted, in the absence of a request or direction by the guardian, or some showing that it was necessary in order to protect the life or health of the infant, or protect him from want if he is helpless, to charge the infant's estate with money expended in his behalf. At the time Frank was appointed guardian for appellee, he was 16 years of age, presumably, and, so far as this record discloses able to earn his own living; and clearly under these circumstances no person, in the absence of authority from the guardian, had the right to furnish him education or maintenance. If the rule insisted on by counsel for appellant was adopted, then any person, without asking the consent or advice, or having authority from the guardian, could maintain and educate the ward, and present a claim for the amount expended against his estate. The result of this would be that the estates of wards would often be wasted, and the guardian, although responsible, helpless to protect either his own or his ward's interests. We are therefore clearly of the opinion that Burton is only entitled to credit for such sums as were expended by the direction or authority, or with the consent, of Frank while he was acting as guardian. We have carefully examined this record, and do not find any evidence that Frank, after July, 1889, furnished anything for the education or maintenance of appellee; but, on the contrary, the evidence is virtually uncontradicted that all that was expended after that time was expended by John without any expectation of being reimbursed by Frank, and solely out of a desire to assist his brother. Under these circumstances, however great the hardship may be on the former guardian Burton, there is no escape from the conclusion that he is not entitled to credit for any sums paid out by John in assisting the appellee.

It does not appear that Burton charged, or intended to charge, any commission for his services as guardian, and we are not disposed to disturb the allowance made by the lower court, although there is some force in the suggestion of counsel that the commission allowed should have been credited as of the date when the settlement was made, in place of 1893. But, in view of the fact that it is doubtful if a guardian is entitled to commission when his delinquency makes it necessary that his ward should sue him, we are not disposed to interfere with the adjustment of commissions as made by the lower court.

Wherefore the judgment is affirmed.

BURTON v. CUMBERLAND TELEPHONE & TELEGRAPH CO.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. April 20, 1909.)

1. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 15*) — MAINTENANCE OF TELEPHONE SYSTEM—LIABILITY FOR INJURIES.

One maintaining along the edge of a highway telephone poles must see that they are sound and serviceable, and must prevent them from becoming dangerous to travelers by defects, either originally inherent or subsequently occurring through decay, and is liable for injuries to a traveler by the falling of a defective pole.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. § 9; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

2. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 15*) — MAINTENANCE OF TELEPHONE SYSTEM—LIABILITY.

One maintained without permission from the fiscal court reasonably safe telephone poles in the outer edge of a highway. A severe windstorm blew down a tree, and it fell on a pole, breaking it off and causing it to fall into the highway. He did not know of the fall, and could not by the exercise of reasonable diligence discover it before an injury to a traveler on the highway in running over the pole. Held, that he was not liable for the injuries to the traveler, as the fact that the poles were maintained without authority was not the proximate cause, and as the windstorm and the falling of the tree was the proximate cause.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Telegraphs and Telephones, Cent. Dig. § 9; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

3. NEGLIGENCE (§ 60*) — LIABILITY—REMOTE CAUSE.

A prior and remote cause doing nothing more than furnishing the condition or the occasion by which an injury is made possible cannot be made the basis of an action.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Muhlenberg County.

"Not to be officially reported."

Action by Lonnie Burton against the Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Company. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Rob't Hardison, Jr., for appellant. Belcher & Sparks and Newton Belcher, for appellee.

BARKER, J. The appellant, Lonnie Burton, while driving along the Greenville and Central City road, near Brownsville, Muhlenberg county, Ky., was thrown from his buggy by the vehicle's being overturned in running over one of the appellee's poles and the wires strung thereon, which had fallen or been blown into the public highway. The accident inflicted on appellant severe bodily injuries, to recover damages for which he instituted this action, claiming that they were caused by the negligence of the appellee. The appellee by its answer denied all of the material allegations of the petition, and a trial subsequently by a jury resulted in a verdict in favor of appellee (defendant). From the judgment dismissing his petition predicated upon the verdict, this appeal has been prosecuted.

The facts out of which the accident grew are briefly, as follows: Some time prior to its occurrence the appellee had obtained the verbal permission of the county judge of Muhlenberg county to erect its poles along the outer edge of the public highway in question. The poles were not erected in the roadway, but were placed beyond the drainage ditch running parallel with the roadway and at points on the right of way where they in no wise obstructed the public travel. The pole in question was erected in the edge of the woods through which the highway ran, and was, as we understand it, placed among the trees, or quite close to them. Just before the accident a very severe windstorm arose, which blew down one of the trees, and this, falling upon the telephone pole of the appellee, broke it off near the ground, and the tree and pole together fell into the highway. This happened but a short time before the accident and after it had become quite dark. It is not contended that the appellee knew of the falling of its pole, or could by the exercise of reasonable diligence have discovered it before the injury which accrued to appellant.

The only ground seriously urged for a reversal of the judgment is the refusal of the court to give instructions 1 and 2a, tendered by him, and the giving of instructions 1 and 2. The latter instructions are as follows:

"(1) The court instructs the jury that if they shall believe from the evidence that the defendant company negligently maintained its telephone line along the Greenville and Central City public road in such a dangerous condition that said public road, by reason of said line being so maintained along said road, was not reasonably safe for public travel, and if the jury shall further believe from the evidence that the said telephone line fell in the public road on the occasion in controversy by reason of the negligent manner in which the same was maintained by the defendant company and as the direct and natural result thereof, and if the jury shall further believe from the evidence that the buggy in which the plaintiff was driving on the occasion in controversy collided with the defendant company's said line, and that plaintiff was thrown from said vehicle by the force of said collision and injured, then and in that event the jury should find for the plaintiff such compensatory damages, if any, as they may believe from the evidence was thereby caused to him, not exceeding $5,000, the amount claimed.

"(2) Unless the jury shall believe from the evidence that the defendant company's telephone line fell in the public highway at the place in controversy as the direct and natural result of the negligence of defendant company in maintaining the same in such a dangerous condition that said public highway was not reasonably safe for public travel, then and in that event the jury should find for the defendant."

It is insisted by appellant that, inasmuch as the county judge had no authority to grant appellee the privilege of erecting its poles along the outer edge of the right of way as was done in this instance, the action of appellee in so erecting its poles was wrongful and resulted in the creation of a public nuisance, and that, this being true, the appellee must be held to that high degree of diligence and care which would practically result in its being insurers of the public against injury from its poles. We cannot give our assent to this statement of the law. It may be (and for the purposes of this case we shall assume) that the appellee was technically a trespasser upon the outer edge of the highway; but while the public authorities of Muhlenberg county could at any time have required it to remove its poles, it does not follow that their maintenance in the edge of the highway made it an insurer of the safety of the traveling public. It is perfectly apparent that the fact that the telephone pole in question stood a foot or two inside of the right of way, instead of a foot or two on the outside thereof, in no wise increased the danger to the traveling public from its falling. The pole fell, not because it was on the edge of the highway, but because a tree entirely outside of the highway was blown down by a storm, and in falling broke the pole. Precisely the same thing would have happened if the pole had stood on the outside, instead of the inside, of the imaginary line which marks the boundary of the highway. The original theory of the appellant was that his injuries were caused by the appellee's maintaining along the edge of the highway a telephone pole which was so decayed and defective as to make it unfit for the uses to which it was put, and dangerous to the traveling public because of its liability to fall, and nearly all of his evidence was directed to this point. Undoubtedly it was the duty of the appellee to maintain sound and serviceable poles, and to abstain from allowing them to become decayed or unsafe; and, if the pole in question was in a dangerous condition by reason of defects, either originally inherent or subsequently occurring, and fell because of such defects, then the appellee was liable to appellant for any injury which was inflicted upon him by reason of its negligence. It is conceded that this phase of appellant's case was fully submitted to the jury in the instructions given by the court; and upon this issue the jury found adversely to the appellant.

The only question remaining, then, is whether the mere fact that appellee's pole was without the authority of the fiscal court placed in the outer edge of the right of way of the public road imposed upon it a higher standard of diligence and care, or a greater liability than would have accrued to it had it obtained the permission of the authorities to so place its poles. It is manifest that the want of the permission of the authorities in no wise increased appellant's danger from the falling pole. If the fiscal court had granted permission to appellee to place its pole where it did, that would in no wise have affected the safety of appellant. What happened to him would have happened precisely in the same way, with or without the permission in question. The absence of the permission of the fiscal court was not, then, the proximate cause of appellant's injuries. If the pole fell because of defects of which appellee knew, or could have discovered by ordinary care, then it would have been liable to appellant for the injuries received, but, as said before, this issue he failed to maintain before the jury. If, however, the pole fell, not because it was unsound, but because it was broken down by the falling of a tree, or blown down by an unusual storm—neither of which was in the control of appellee—then the responsibility for appellant's injuries was not upon appellee. The mere fact that the pole was at the place where it was situated, and a falling tree broke it off and caused it to fall in the highway, does not render the appellee liable for appellant's injuries. The windstorm and the falling tree were the proximate causes of the injuries accruing to the appellant.

The rule we have announced above is well stated in 29 Cyc. 496, as follows: "A prior and remote cause cannot be made the basis of an action if such remote cause did nothing more than furnish the condition or give rise to the occasion by which the injury was made possible if there intervened between such prior or remote cause and the injury a distinct, successive, unrelated, and efficient cause of the injury. If no danger existed in the condition except because of the independent cause, such condition was not the proximate cause." The foregoing text is supported by a citation of many authorities in a note by the editors. Assuming the pole in question to have been such as is ordinarily used by telephone companies, and that it was reasonably safe as it stood, we are unable to perceive why appellee should be held liable because the windstorm blew down a forest tree near it, which, in falling, broke the pole and threw it into the highway. The proximate cause was the vis major, and not the negligence of appellee.

As we are of opinion that the instructions given by the court fully covered the law of the case, it is not necessary to discuss those offered by appellant and refused by the court.

For the reasons given, the judgment is affirmed:

EILERMAN et al. v. FARMER.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. April 22, 1909.)

1. NEGLIGENCE (§ 138*)—ELEVATORS—INJURIES TO STORE PATRON—INSTRUCTIONS.

Plaintiff fell down an elevator shaft in defendants' store as he was about to descend with a clerk to the cellar, and testified that, as he entered the store some distance from the elevator, he was directed to take the elevator, and that the clerk on opening the elevator gate turned to plaintiff, and beckoned him to step in. The court charged that it was defendants' duty to exercise the highest care usually exercised by prudent persons in the operation of such elevators, and that if plaintiff entered defendants' store, and in the exercise of ordinary care attempted to enter the elevator to go to the cellar by invitation of defendants' servant, or when the acts of the servant were such that a person of ordinary prudence would reasonably infer an invitation, and the plaintiff failed to discover that the elevator was not in place, and by defendants' negligence plaintiff fell and injured himself, he was entitled to recover. Held, that such instruction was not misleading as authorizing a recovery, even if the only invitation was that given when plaintiff first entered the store.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. § 354; Dec. Dig. § 138.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1064*)—INSTRUCTIONS—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—PREJUDICE.

Where plaintiff was injured by falling down an elevator shaft in defendants' store, and his eyes were his only means of knowledge as to the position of the elevator, unless defendants' employes told him that the elevator was not in position, of which there was no evidence, an instruction on contributory negligence containing the words "that plaintiff saw or might by the exercise of ordinary care, have seen," instead of the words "that plaintiff knew or might by the exercise of ordinary care have known," was not prejudicial to defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4219; Dec. Dig. § 1064.*]

3. NEGLIGENCE (§ 138*)—INSTRUCTIONS—APPLICABILITY TO EVIDENCE.

Where plaintiff testified that he did not see certain signs on the elevator into the shaft of which he fell, and stated that he could "see pretty well," plaintiff claims that his failure to see was due to the fact that there was not much light about the elevator, and there was no proof that his eyesight was defective, the court did not err in refusing to charge with reference to plaintiff's defective eyesight.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. § 361; Dec. Dig. § 138.*]

4. NEGLIGENCE (§ 139*)—ELEVATORS—INJURIES—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where plaintiff was injured by falling down the shaft of an elevator used both for freight and passengers, and the court only required defendant to use the highest care usually exercised by prudent persons in the management of such elevators, the court did not err in refusing an instruction distinguishing between the care required for the operation of freight and passenger elevators.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. § 372; Dec. Dig. § 139.*]

5. EVIDENCE (§ 271*)—SELF-SERVING DECLARATIONS.

Evidence of a conversation between plaintiff and one of the defendants after the accident, in which plaintiff stated that it was not his fault, to which the defendant addressed stated that he supposed plaintiff did not think, was inadmissible as merely self-serving.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 1068; Dec. Dig. § 271.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1050*)—EVIDENCE—HARMLESS ERROR.

In an action for injuries in an elevator shaft, the erroneous admission of self-serving declarations in which plaintiff stated that he was not at fault, and one of the defendants that he supposed that the elevator operator "didn't think," was not prejudicial to defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4153; Dec. Dig. § 1050.*]

7. DAMAGES (§ 132*)—EXCESSIVENESS—INJURIES.

Plaintiff at the time of his injury, though 68 years old, was a strong, vigorous ship carpenter, and caulker of fairly good skill. Some time prior to the accident he had been an expressman earning from $18 to $20 per week. He fell down defendants' elevator, sustaining an oblique fracture of the upper thigh bone, and injured his spinal column. The injured limb was three inches shorter than the other and two inches less in circumference. Plaintiff suffered severe pains to the time of the trial, nine months after the accident, and still walked on crutches. His injuries were permanent and his physician's bill at the time of the trial was $322. Held, a verdict for $5,000 was not excessive.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. § 378; Dec. Dig. § 132.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Campbell County.

"Not to be officially reported."

Action by Richard Farmer against Herman Ellerman and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Aubrey Barbour, for appellants. Arthur C. Hall, for appellee.

CLAY, C. The defendants, Herman Ellerman and others, own a clothing store in the city of Newport, Ky. The plaintiff, Richard Farmer, walked into their elevator shaft when the elevator was not in position to receive passengers, and fell to the floor below. He instituted this action to recover damages for the injuries which he received. The jury awarded him a verdict in the sum of $5,000. From the judgment based thereon, this appeal is prosecuted.

The record discloses the following facts: The appellants conduct a wholesale and retail clothing business, occupying several floors of a building. The business is conducted mainly on the first floor. In the basement of the store there were some dry goods boxes which appellants usually disposed of by wholesale, but which they sometimes sold by retail as a matter of accommodation. Appellee, desiring to purchase some of these boxes, went to appellants' store on the occasion of his injury. Appellee was a man 68 years of age, and was accompanied by his grandson, a boy 13 years of age. He asked an employé of appellants, who was standing on the sidewalk near the entrance, if they had any boxes for sale, and was told to go inside. On entering the store, he inquired of one of the clerks about the boxes, and was referred to Michael Winstel, another clerk. According to the testimony of appellee, the latter told Winstel that he wanted to get some boxes, and Winstel said, "All right, kept them in the cellar," at the same time directing them to take the elevator. According to the testimony of Winstel, he, upon being informed of appellee's wishes, simply said to him, "Step back." Winstel then proceeded to the door of the elevator, followed at a distance of from 8 to 15 feet (variously estimated by different witnesses) by appellee and his grandson. The elevator in use in the store was for the accommodation of both freight and passengers. No particular man was in charge of the elevator. It was operated by such clerks as had occasion to use it. In order to operate the elevator, it was necessary for one to open the gate of the shaft, reach in, and take hold of the ropes controlling the elevator. It was the custom of the clerks, when the elevator was not at the floor where were located the parties who intended to use it, to open the door of the shaft and first shake the control ropes in order to warn any one that might be on the elevator at another floor, and then, by a pull of the control ropes, bring it to the desired position. When Winstel reached the elevator, he opened the door of the shaft. At this point the evidence is very conflicting. According to the testimony of appellee and his grandson, Winstel, upon opening the gate, turned to appellee and beckoned him to step into the elevator. When this was done, appellee passed through the gate, stepped into the opening, and fell to the cellar below. On the other hand, however, the testimony for appellants is to the effect that, when Winstel reached the shaft, he grasped the control ropes of the elevator, shook them to give warning to those above, and, having received the words "All right" from the clerk above, pulled the ropes for the purpose of causing the elevator to descend; that while standing there, with his back toward appellee, watching the descent of the elevator and retaining his grasp upon the two ropes with both hands in order to check the elevator when it should arrive at the first floor, appellee stepped past him and fell into the elevator shaft.

The court instructed the jury as follows:

"(1) The court instructs the jury that it was the duty of the defendants in the operation and management of its elevator to exercise the highest degree of care and skill usually exercised by prudent persons in the same business in the management and operation of elevators of the kind and character as shown by the proof, and if the jury believe from the evidence that the plaintiff entered the storehouse of defendant, and in the exercise of ordinary care attempted to enter the elevator cage in the storehouse to go to the cellar by invitation of defendants' servant, or when the acts of the servant were such that a person of, ordinary prudence would reasonably infer such an invitation, and the plaintiff, in the exercise of ordinary care, when he attempted to enter the elevator, failed to discover that the elevator cage was not in the proper position, and by reason of the negligence of the defendants the plaintiff fell down into the elevator well, injuring himself by the fall, the law is for the plaintiff, and the jury should so find.

"(2) If the jury find for the plaintiff, they will award him such a sum in damages as will reasonably and fairly compensate him for his mental and physical suffering, if any of either, the reasonable expense, if any, in the matter of medicines and physicians' bills incurred by him, and for the permanent impairment, if any, of his ability to earn money that may have directly resulted to plaintiff from his injuries, if they were caused by the negligence of defendants' servants, but the damages altogether should not exceed the sum of $15,150.

"(3) The court further instructs the jury that it was the duty of the plaintiff to use ordinary care for his own safety when attempting to enter the elevator cage or shaft, and if the jury believe from the evidence that the plaintiff saw, or might by the exercise of ordinary care have seen, that the elevator cage was not in the proper position in the elevator shaft, and thereby have prevented the injury, and he failed to do so, and so contributed to his own injury, and but for his own negligence and carelessness the accident and injury complained of in the petition would not have happened, then the law is for the defendants, and the jury should so find.

"(4) Ordinary care as used in these instructions is such care as an ordinarily prudent person would ordinarily use under the same or similar circumstances; and negligence is the failure to use such care."

It is insisted by counsel for appellants that, while instruction No. 1 is almost a verbatim copy of an instruction approved by this court in the case of Phillips & Co. v. Pruitt, 83 S. W. 114, it is incorrect as applied to the particular facts of this case. The argument is made that there were, according to the testimony for appellee, two invitations to take the elevator—one when appellee first entered the store, and the other at the elevator; that, according to appellee's petition, his cause of action was based upon the invitation extended to him at or near the elevator; that the instruction in question, however, authorized a recovery even if the invitation were given at the front door. In our opinion, however, the instruction is not susceptible of the interpretation placed upon it by counsel for appellant. The jury must have understood that the invitation referred to or the facts from which an invitation could have been inferred were those connected with the entrance of appellee into the elevator cage. The first invitation took place at the front door, when appellee was many feet distant from the elevator. He certainly did not attempt to enter the elevator when he was 50 or 75 feet away. The fact that the language employed could be distorted so as to refer to the invitation given near the door is not sufficient to make the instruction misleading. Nearly every instruction can be so interpreted as to mean something different from that intended by the court. It is only when it will be so understood by men of ordinary common sense and prudence that the instruction should be regarded as misleading. Applying this rule to the instruction in question, we cannot say that the jury were misled thereby. The language of the instruction, read and interpreted in its natural and everyday significance, refers only to the invitation given at the elevator itself. That being the case, we are of the opinion that the instruction properly presented the issues to the jury.

Appellants also complain that the instruction on contributory negligence contains the words, "that the plaintiff saw or might, by the exercise of ordinary care, have seen," instead of using the words, "that the plaintiff knew or might, by the exercise of ordinary care, have known." While ordinarily negligence or contributory negligence is predicated in terms of knowledge or the duty to know, the use of the words, "saw or might, by the exercise of ordinary care, have seen," is not objectionable in this instance. Seeing was the only means of knowledge that he had, unless appellants' employees gave him information of the conditions existing. There is no contention that this was done. The instruction, therefore, was not prejudicial.

The court did not err in refusing to give an instruction in regard to the defective eyesight of appellee. There was no proof upon which to base such an instruction. It is true appellee claims not to have seen certain signs on the elevator, and that he used the expression that he could "see pretty well"; but he claims that his failure to see was due to the fact that there was not much light about the elevator. There was no proof whatever of defective eyesight. The instruction was properly refused.

Appellants also offered an instruction making a distinction between the degree of care required in the case of a freight elevator and that required in the case of a passenger elevator. If, under the facts of this case, any such distinction existed, we think the idea embraced in the instruction offered was sufficiently presented in instruction No. 1 by the use of the language, "to exercise the highest degree of care and skill usually exercised by prudent persons in the same business in the management and operation of elevators of the kind and character as shown by the proof."

It is next insisted that the court erred in permitting appellee to detail a conversation which he claims to have had with one of the appellants. After stating that the appellant had called to see him, he claims this conversation took place: "Mr. Ellerman, I said, 'I wouldn't think so much about this. I wouldn't care so much about it, if it was the least bit my fault in the world.' I says, 'It wasn't my fault.' Mr. Ellerman immediately replied: 'Well, I suppose he didn't think, that gentleman didn't think.'" This conversation, of course, should not have been permitted to go to the jury. The first part of it consisted of self-serving declarations. None of the conversation, however, was very material. We are of opinion that the admission was not prejudicial to the substantial rights of appellant.

But it is insisted that the verdict is excessive. While appellee was 68 years old at the time he was injured, it appears that he was a strong and vigorous man, and was a ship carpenter and caulker of fairly good skill. At the time of the accident, and for some time prior thereto, he was engaged as an expressman, and earned from $18 to $20 per week. Since the accident he has not been able to do work of any kind. Appellee suffered very severe pains up until the time of the trial, which took place about nine months after the accident. At the time of the trial he was still walking on crutches. He sustained an oblique fracture of the upper thigh bone, and his spinal column was bruised and injured. The injured limb is three inches shorter than the other, and two inches less in circumference. There can be no doubt that appellee's injuries are permanent. His physician's bill up to the time of the trial amounted to $322. We cannot say that a verdict for $5,000, for an injury which manifestly resulted in great physical and mental suffering, and which involves the permanent reduction of the strength of a broken leg, is so excessive as to make it appear that the jury were influenced in their action by passion or prejudice. Maysville & Lexington R. R. Co. v. Herrick, 13 Bush, 122.

Perceiving no error in the record prejudicial to the substantial rights of appellant, the judgment is affirmed.

HILLER v. NELSON et al.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. April 20, 1909.)

1. DOWER (§ 46*) — RIGHT — MORTGAGE BY WIFE.

Under Ky. St. § 2135 (Russell's St. § 4645), providing that a wife shall not be endowed in land sold in good faith after marriage to satisfy a lien or incumbrances created by a deed in which she joined or to satisfy a lien for the purchase money, but, if there is a surplus after the lien is satisfied, she may have dower out of such surplus, unless it was received or disposed of by the husband in his lifetime, where the wife joined in a mortgage of the homestead and it was sold under foreclosure after the husband's death, she was entitled to dower in the surplus.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dower, Dec. Dig. § 46.*]

2. MORTGAGES (§ 594*) — REDEMPTION — PERSONS ENTITLED — MORTGAGOR'S WIDOW — "REPRESENTATIVES."

Under Ky. St. § 2364 (Russell's St. § 80), providing that, if property sold on mortgage foreclosure does not bring two-thirds of its appraised value, defendant and his representatives may redeem within a year by paying the purchaser the original purchase money, and 10 per cent. interest, the mortgagor's widow, who joined in the mortgage and was entitled to dower in the surplus proceeds on foreclosure sale, could redeem; she coming within the term "representatives."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Dec. Dig. § 594.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 7, pp. 6110-6115; vol. 8, p. 7785.]

3. DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION (§ 152*) — REDEMPTION OF MORTGAGED PROPERTY — CONTRIBUTION.

Since the redemption of mortgaged property by the mortgagor's widow to satisfy her dower right would inure to the benefit of the mortgagor's infant children and heirs, she was entitled to contribution from them if they desired to enjoy the benefits of the redemption; and that the purchaser claimed to have purchased on foreclosure for the benefit of the children did not affect the widow's right to contribution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Descent and Distribution, Cent. Dig. §§ 521, 522; Dec. Dig. § 152.*]

4. MORTGAGES (§ 605*) — REDEMPTION — COMPELLING ACCEPTANCE OF MONEY.

Where one entitled to redeem mortgaged property has paid over to the county clerk the full amount of the redemption money, it is the purchaser's duty to accept it, and the court should require her to do so if she refuses.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Laurel County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Proceedings to redeem mortgaged property by Belle Nelson Hiller against Earl Nelson and others by their guardian, etc. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded for further proceedings.

E. H. Johnson, for appellant. W. L. Brown and Geo. G. Brock, for appellees.

BARKER, J. John W. Nelson died intestate at his home in Laurel county, Ky., leaving a wife, the appellant, Belle Nelson Hiller, and two infant children by a former wife. Prior to his death he borrowed $540 from the East Bernstadt Banking Company, for which he and his wife executed their joint note, and to secure the payment of which they executed and delivered to the bank a mortgage upon the homestead in East Bernstadt which belonged to the husband. Before he died, he made a payment of $40 upon the note. After his death the bank, by proper proceeding in the Laurel circuit court, obtained a judgment on the note and enforced its mortgage lien. Under this judgment the homestead was sold by the commissioner and purchased by Mattie Nelson, the guardian of the two infant children of the decedent, for the amount of the debt, interest, and costs. Before the sale, as by law required, the property had been appraised; the appraisers fixing its value at $1,000. The price at which the purchaser obtained the property at judicial sale was less than two-thirds of the appraised value. Since the death of her former husband the widow has again married, and is now the appellant Belle Nelson Hiller. The two children of the decedent are with his relatives, and seem to be completely estranged from their stepmother. Within a year after the judicial sale the appellant tendered to the purchaser the full amount of the purchase price, with interest as by law required, and sought to redeem it. The tender was refused, and thereupon the appellant paid over the sum tendered to the county clerk as provided by statute. Over the protest of the appellant, who, by affidavit, set up the facts above set forth, the chancellor awarded a deed to the purchaser, refusing to require her to accept the tender of appellant, from which judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

The question arising upon this record is whether or not the widow of the decedent has a right to redeem the property under the circumstances above stated in order to claim dower in the land. This is resisted on the part of the purchaser on the theory that the right to redeem the property sold at judicial sale is a personal privilege to the debtor or his representatives, and the wife has no right to redeem. It is also said that, where the wife joins with her husband in a deed or mortgage, she loses her dower, and therefore has no interest in the land sold. This last position is based upon section 2135, Ky. St. (Russell's St. § 4045), which is as follows: "The wife shall not be endowed of land sold, but not conveyed by the husband before marriage, nor of land sold, in good faith, after marriage, to satisfy a lien or incumbrance created before marriage or created by deed in which she joined or to satisfy a lien for the purchase money; but, if there is a surplus of the land or proceeds of sale after satisfying the lien, she may have dower out of such surplus of the land or compensation out of such surplus of the proceeds unless they were received or disposed of by the husband in his lifetime." And the argument is supported by a citation of Schweitzer v. Wagner, 94 Ky. 458, 22 S. W. 883, and several other cases which construe the above statute, and hold that, as against the mortgage creditor, the wife loses her right of dower where she joins in the instrument. There is no doubt of the soundness of the appellee's view of this statute and of the authorities cited, to the extent that the wife has no right of dower as against the creditor. But we are not dealing with the creditor here. It has its money, and the question is whether the purchaser can hold the property which has been sold at judicial sale for less than two-thirds of its appraised value. It will be observed that the foregoing statute, while it takes from the wife dower as against the creditor, where she joins in a mortgage securing his debt, especially invests her with dower in the surplus proceeds of the sale, if one be made to satisfy the lien created. So that by the very terms of the law upon which appellee rests her right to deny the widow dower in the land purchased by her, as above set forth, she is given dower in the surplus proceeds of the sale, and has a direct interest in the property bringing more than the debt, interest, and costs of the creditor.

So much of section 2364, Ky. St. (Russell's St. § 80), as we deem necessary to set forth, is as follows: "If the real estate which may be sold in pursuance of such judgment or order does not bring two-thirds of such valuation, the defendant and his representatives shall have the right to redeem the same within a year from the day of sale, by paying the purchaser or his representatives the original purchase money, and ten per centum per annum interest thereon." Now, the appellant's rights seem to fail directly within the language of this statute; certainly within its equity. The widow is embraced in the word "representatives" used in the statute above. The word "representatives" was intended to embrace all those who by law have an interest in the land of the decedent, and the statute itself was enacted to prevent the sacrifice of property at judicial sales. No good reason exists for narrowing the word "representatives" so as to exclude from the benefits of the statute the widow. This would be an invidious distinction between a man's wife and his (perhaps) distant heirs (if he had no children), which we believe to be wholly foreign to the intention of the Legislature. If the decedent in this case had left no children, this property, except the dower interest of the appellant, might have been cast by the law of descent upon some distant cousins. What good reason would there be for giving them the right to redeem in such a case, and refusing it to the widow? We think the widow, as well as the heirs, are embraced within the meaning of the word "representatives," as used in the statute, and that she has a right to redeem the property when the conditions were such as to bring the transaction within the pale of the statute. It is a wise and beneficent statute, having due regard to the rights both of the purchaser and of the debtor and his representatives. The debtor can only redeem where the property fails to bring two-thirds of the appraised value; but, where he does redeem, he is required to pay the full original purchase money, with 10 per centum interest thereon. The object of the statute was to provide, in part, at least, for just such a condition of affairs as we have here. The purchaser has obtained the property in which appellant has a dower interest in whatever remained after the payment of the mortgage debt for less than two-thirds of its value, assuming the appraisal to be correct. It seems to us that there can be no doubt that the latter has a right under the statute to pay the purchase money, with 10 per centum interest, in order to obtain for herself the benefit of dower in the surplus over and above the mortgage debt. As the purchase of the widow will redound to the benefit of the two infant children, they should be required to contribute their pro rata of the money paid in order to participate in the benefit of the redemption. The fact that the purchaser now claims that she made the purchase for the benefit of the infant children does not alter the principle as to the appellant's right. We think the duty of contribution on the part of the infants, if they desire to enjoy the benefit of the redemption, is authorized, if not by the statute of contribution, by the general equitable doctrine of contribution. Suppose for the sake of illustration that a stranger had purchased the land for his own use and the widow had redeemed it, as she is seeking to do in this case; with what show of equity could her stepchildren claim to enjoy the land she had redeemed with her own money, without contributing their pro rata to the sum paid out in the redemption? The widow in this case has paid over to the county clerk the full amount of the redemption money required by the statute. This it is the duty of the purchaser to take, and of the court to require her to take if she refuses; and, after this is done, the widow will, in effect, have paid off the full amount of the original mortgage debt.

On the subject in hand, Pomeroy, in his Equity Jurisprudence, § 1222, says: "It is a general doctrine of equity that where a common charge rests upon a fund which belongs to several owners, who stand upon a footing of equality with respect to their individual titles and relations with the holder of the charge, the burden should rest ratably upon each separate portion of the fund; and if the owner of one portion, for the purpose of protecting his own interest, pays off the common charge, he is entitled to call upon the other owners to contribute their proportionate shares of the amount thus paid. This doctrine is a simple application of the maxim, 'Equality is equity.' Whenever, therefore, a mortgage rests upon land which is owned by several persons in such a manner that their equities as between themselves are equal, and one of them redeems from the mortgage, he is entitled to a pro rata contribution from the other owners, and may keep the lien of the mortgage alive by equitable assignment as security for such contributions."

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is reversed, with directions for further procedure consistent with this opinion.

COMMONWEALTH v. HARRIS.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. April 14, 1909.)

1. TAXATION (§ 122*)—PROPERTY ASSESSABLE—CORPORATE STOCK.

Under St. 1909, § 4088 (Russell's St. § 6061), providing that individual shareholders of corporations required to pay taxes on their corporate franchises shall not be required to list their shares in such corporations so long as the corporation pays taxes on the corporate property and franchises, where a public service corporation owning property both within and out of the state pays a tax on its property and franchises within the state, its stock in the hands of stockholders is not assessable for taxation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Dec. Dig. § 122.*]

2. TAXATION (§ 108*)—TRANSFER OF PROPERTY TO AVOID TAXATION.

A bona fide sale and transfer of taxable property nearly two months before the assessment day and the investment of the proceeds in nontaxable government bonds cannot be held to be a trick or device on the part of the owner to escape taxation within the provisions of St. 1909, § 4051 (Russell's St. § 5942).

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 141; Dec. Dig. § 108.*]

3. TAXATION (§ 47*)—PERSONAL PROPERTY.

Where it is shown that defendant has paid taxes on $3,500 worth of personalty and household furniture, and it is stipulated by counsel that such property was worth less than that amount, he should not be assessed separately on a library worth $300.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Dec. Dig. § 47.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County, Common Pleas Branch, Second Division. "Not to be officially reported."

Action in the name of the Commonwealth against Theodore Harris. From the judgment, both parties appeal. Affirmed on appeal by the Commonwealth and reversed on cross-appeal.

M. J. Holt, for the Commonwealth. Wm. H. Holt, for defendant.

BARKER, J. This is a proceeding instituted by the auditor's agent of the state in the Jefferson county court, under section 4241 of the Kentucky Statutes (Russell's St. § 6170), for the purpose of assessing, as omitted, certain property belonging to Theodore Harris. The trial developed that the property sought to be taxed may be classed as follows: The library of the defendant, valued at $300; 80 shares of Louisville Traction stock, worth $118 per share; 275 shares of Louisville Home Telephone stock, worth about $68 per share; certain bonds of the Home Telephone Company and the Straight Creek Coal & Coke Company. In a trial before the county court, it was held that the Traction and Home Telephone stock was not assessable as against the defendant under the fiscal laws of the state, and that the bonds of the Straight Creek Coal & Coke Company and of the Home Telephone Company had been sold by the defendant, Harris, prior to the 15th day of the month in which the fiscal year began, and, as he did not own them, he could not be required to pay taxes upon them. As to the household furniture of the defendant, it was held that he owned property, on assessment day, valued at $3,500; but it further appeared that since the assessment day (September 15, 1906) the defendant had paid to the sheriff taxes on $3,000 worth of household furniture for the year in question. It was therefore adjudged that he was assessable, then, with only $500 worth of personalty. An appeal by the commonwealth to the Jefferson circuit court resulted in the judgment of the county court being affirmed, except that it was there held that the defendant owned a private library worth $300, which was not by law included as household furniture, and therefore the defendant was required to pay on $300 worth of books. The commonwealth appealed from the judgment, and the defendant has prayed a cross-appeal from so much of the judgment as requires him to pay on his library.

It is conceded in the brief for the commonwealth that the right to assess as omitted property the Louisville Traction stock is concluded adversely to the commonwealth by the opinion in the case of Commonwealth v. Ledman (Ky.) 106 S. W. 247. Since the submission of this case, we have decided, in the case of Commonwealth v. Clara Belle Walsh's Trustee (opinion delivered March 25, 1909) 117 S. W. 398, that where a public service corporation, owning property both in this state and out of it, pays a tax on its property and franchise to the state of Kentucky, its stock in the hands of the holders is not assessable for taxation under the provisions of section 4088 of the Kentucky Statutes (Russell's St. § 6061). The opinion in this case concludes the right of the commonwealth to tax the Home Telephone stock owned by the defendant, for the record shows that for the fiscal year in question the Home Telephone Company paid taxes on all of its property in the state and a franchise tax. Therefore, under the opinion mentioned, its stock is not subject to assessment in the hands of the shareholder.

The evidence shows beyond question that the defendant sold all of his bonds of the Straight Creek Coal & Coke Company and of the Home Telephone Company in July, 1906, that this sale was absolute, and made in good faith, and the proceeds were invested in United States bonds, which were not assessable for taxation by the commonwealth. Counsel for the commonwealth now insists that this was only a trick or device on the part of defendant to escape taxation, and cites section 4051 of the Kentucky Statutes (Russell's St. § 5942) in support of his position. That section is as follows: "If any person shall willfully make a false statement, or, for the purpose of avoiding taxation, make a temporary investment in securities exempt by law from taxation, or convert any intangible property into nontaxable property outside of this state, or resort to any device whatever for the purpose of avoiding taxation, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, fined any sum not exceeding five hundred dollars, and be subject to three times the amount of tax upon his estate, to be recovered by the sheriff by action in the name of the Commonwealth in the county in which the estate is liable for taxation, or by the auditor, when the taxes are payable to him, in the Franklin circuit or quarterly court." There is nothing in the evidence in this case to show any bad faith upon the part of the defendant. Nor does it appear that the bonds he sold escaped taxation. Presumably, as they were transferred in July of 1906, they were assessed by the person or persons owning them on the 15th day of September. The statute has reference only to pretended sales, and not to bona fide transfers of property. It is not the object of the statute to paralyze traffic in personal property, merely because assessment day is approaching. The commonwealth loses nothing by a bona fide transfer of property, although the transfer may be made just before assessment day, and, when properly analyzed, it does not appear that the commonwealth has actually lost anything in the transaction under consideration. Whoever bought the bonds from the defendant, if he resided in this state and owned them on assessment day, should have listed them for taxation, and it is immaterial to the commonwealth whether the taxes on the bonds were paid by Harris or by his vendee. The United States bonds which he purchased with the money were not assessable in the hands of the person from whom he bought them, and therefore it could make no difference to the state whether they were held by Harris or his vendor. The defendant had a right to sell his bonds in good faith, and he had the equal right to invest the proceeds in government bonds. Of course, if the evidence had shown that the defendant only made a pretended sale of his bonds for the purpose of hiding them and escaping taxation, undoubtedly they could be assessed in his hands as omitted property; but the evidence does not show this state of facts, and therefore we are of opinion that the judge of the county court and the judge of the cir-cult court ruled correctly in holding that they were not assessable as omitted property.

As to the library of the defendant, we think the circuit judge erred in holding that it should have been assessed as omitted property. The record shows that the defendant paid on $3,500 of personalty and household furniture, and it is stipulated by counsel for the appellant and appellee that the personal property owned by defendant on assessment day of the year involved here was worth less than $3,500. The state therefore has really received from the defendant all and more than he owed for the year in question.

For these reasons the judgment on the direct appeal is affirmed, and the judgment on the cross-appeal is reversed, with directions to dismiss the petition against the defendant.

RAMSEY v. MORROW.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. April 23, 1900.)

1. BOUNDARIES (§ 7*)—LOST CORNERS—DETERMINATION—RULES.

The rule for establishing a lost stake corner to run the course called for from the known corners to the intersection of the lines cannot be applied for the determination of the eighteenth corner in a description, where the lines from the seventeenth and nineteenth corners extended would never intersect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 58-65; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

2. BOUNDARIES (§ 3*)—LOST CORNERS—COURSES AND DISTANCES.

The ordinary rule that distances yield to courses, and both to natural objects or marked monuments, does not apply, where it is manifest from the patent as run out that proximate certainty may be accomplished by changing a course, instead of the distance, which may be done.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 3-41; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

3. BOUNDARIES (§ 7*)—MARKED LINES—ESTABLISHMENT.

Where a line was marked as such at the time of survey according to the surveyor's duty, such line established itself in a suit to determine a lost corner, though the corner was not marked.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 58-65; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

4. BOUNDARIES (§ 40*)—MARKED LINE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Where, in an action to determine a lost corner, there was some evidence that marks alleged to designate an ancient line had been made many years after the survey by another and for a different purpose, whether the line was anciently marked by the surveyor was for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Dec. Dig. § 40.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1063*) — INSTRUCTIONS—PREJUDICE.

Where appellant did not show adverse possession for a longer period than six or seven years consecutively, and for much of the time the tenant in possession paid rent to the owners of each of the alleged conflicting patents, appellant was not prejudiced by erroneous instructions submitting the question of adverse possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4225; Dec. Dig. § 1068.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Wayne County.

"To be officially reported."

Action between James Ramsey and Sherman Morrow. Judgment for the latter, and the former appeals. Affirmed.

Griffin, Kennedy & Bertram, and Joe Bertram, for appellant. Harrison & Harrison and F. R. Harrison, for appellee.

O'REAR, J. Appellant claims title to a tract of land in Wayne county covered by a patent for 200 acres issued to T. C. Dick on a survey dated January 20, 1846. Appellee claims title to a part of a 1,100-acre patent issued to Morrow and Dodson on a survey dated January 19, 1846. The patent boundaries call for the same objects and upon the same courses and for the same distances for nine of the calls. A dispute has arisen between these two litigants as to where a certain corner and two of these lines are properly located. There cannot be a conflict between them. Hence there is no question of superiority of one grant over the other. If the corner is established as claimed by appellant it should be, then the strip of land in dispute would be included in the Dick patent and would belong to appellant. If, however, the lost corner and the two lines from it should be established as contended for by appellee the disputed strip would be within the Morrow-Dodson patent. Thus it will be seen that the location of the lost corner is the principal thing to be done to settle the controversy. There was also a question made by appellant that, although the lines of the Dick patent do not embrace the disputed strip, yet the former owners marked a "conditional line" between their lands so that it would fall to appellant's boundary. He also claims it by adverse possession. The Dick patent is located correctly and without dispute as to its beginning corner, and all lines correspond substantially and satisfactorily with the actual running on the ground till the seventeenth corner (a chestnut oak) is reached. The nineteenth corner (a red bud and black oak in a gap of the ridge) is also located without dispute. The seventeenth and nineteenth corners of the Dick survey are identical with corners called for in the Morrow-Dodson patent. From the seventeenth corner of the Dick patent the call is (and so it is in the Morrow-Dodson patent) N. 60° E., 108 poles, to a stake; thence N. 75° E., 230 poles, to the red bud and black oak. But if the eighteenth call is run N. 60° E., 108 poles, then to reach the red bud and black oak corner would require a radical change of both the course and distance of the next line to reach the natural objects, the red bud and black oak, viz., a course N.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes 84½° E., the length of the line being not given, but it would be longer than the line called for in the patents.

One rule laid down for establishing a lost stake corner is to run the courses called for from the known corners to the intersection of the lines. Haggan v. Wood's Heirs, Ky. Dec. 274. But there is no hard and fast rule on the subject. The object is always to carry into effect what was done and attempted to be done when the entry and survey were made. The rule laid down in Haggan v. Wood, supra, cannot be applied in this case, because if the lines from the seventeenth and nineteenth corners should be extended, they would never intersect. It is clear that an error was made by the original surveyor in copying his field notes, or in entering them. The same surveyor surveyed each entry, surveying the Morrow-Dodson entry first. He had the same person as a chainman in each instance. It is quite likely that, when the Dick entry was run out until its line reached the Morrow-Dodson entry, from that point the calls of the latter were copied as the calls for the Dick survey. That was a customary and a natural way of doing such work. Consequently any error made in entering or transcribing the calls of the former survey along that line would occur also in the Dick patent. In running the line from the eighteenth corner, the stake, to the red bud and the black oak, if the course named, N. 75° E., is pursued, the natural object called for would never be reached. As the corners before the eighteenth were natural objects, and satisfactorily established, the error must be corrected somewhere between the seventeenth and nineteenth corners. By beginning at the red bud and black oak, and reversing its call to the stake, then reversing the next call, it is found that by changing the course from N. 60° E. to N. 80° E. the distance 108 poles runs out at the seventeenth corner. Ordinarily the rule is that distances yield to courses, and both to natural objects, or marked monuments. Bryan v. Beckley, Litt. Sel. Cas. 93, 12 Am. Dec. 276. But this is not always so, for if it be manifest from the patent as run out, that approximate certainty may be accomplished by changing the course instead of the distance, then that is to be done. Blight v. Atwell, 4 J. J. Marsh. 278.

This case was tried before a jury. There was submitted to the jury the question of the location of this lost corner and its lines. The court told the jury that the preceding and following known marked corners must be accepted, and that if the line reversed from the red bud and the black oak corner, so as to run S. 75° W., 230 poles, was a marked line, with ancient marks apparently made contemporaneously with the making of the original survey, the jury should find that to be the line, if then by extending the next line back 108 poles it would exactly reach the chestnut oak established as the seventeenth corner. This instruction was really more favorable to the appellant than it was entitled to, for if the line was marked as a line at the time the survey was executed, and presumably it was, as it was the duty of the surveyor to have marked it (Bryan v. Beckley, supra; Johnson v. Marshall, 4 Bibb, 133), that marked line controlled and established itself, even though the corner was not marked (Thornberry v. Churchill, 4 T. B. Mon. 32, 16 Am. Dec. 125). However, there was evidence that the line N. 75° E. was marked for 100 poles, with ancient line marks made in the execution of that survey. There was also some evidence that these marks had been made many years later by another person and for a different purpose; but that was a question for the jury, and the evidence on the whole seems to sustain their verdict. Thus the line N. 75° E., 230 poles, was established, which established the state corner, which is the lost corner, at its extremity. As, then, the seventeenth corner was already established, and the eighteenth was established by the verdict of the jury, the remaining line between the two should have been run without regard to course or distance, although as a matter of fact it coincides in distance with the call in the patent. Aside from the convincing reason found in the old marked line on the N. 75° E. call, for establishing that line at that place, it is manifest to us from other facts that such is the correct location. Appellant's theory, if executed, would have cut the Morrow-Dodson patent into two parts, excepting a very narrow elongated strip. It is not probable the prior entrants, with the power of first selection, would have voluntarily mutilated their entry and tract in such manner. Again, as we find there was a mistake made by the surveyor in transcribing the result of his work, it is more likely he would have made the error of substituting an 8 for a 6, than of substituting 75 for 84½, and making a material discrepancy also in the length of the line.

It is contended that the remote vendor of appellant and the former owner of the Morrow-Dodson patent established an agreed dividing line north of the line herein established between the lands which was marked and recognized by them and their vendees for many years as the true dividing line between their lands; but we do not find any evidence in the record that any of the owners of these two tracts at any time marked the line claimed by appellant. There was some evidence that a marked line existed at the point claimed; but part of it was the extreme northern line of the Morrow-Dodson patent, and part of it made for other purposes. None of it was shown to have been made under any sort of an agreement between any owners of the two patents here in question, that it was to constitute a division line between them. Nor was there evidence that they recognized such line as their division line.

The question of adverse possession the trial court undertook to submit to the jury, but in instructions that were erroneous. However, they were not prejudicial to appellant for the reason that there was a failure of proof on his part to sustain him in that issue. He did not show adverse possession of any of the disputed land for a longer period than six or seven years consecutively. Then for much of the time the tenant in possession rented from and paid rent to the owners of each of the patents, so each owner had equal benefit from that fact. There should have been no instruction submitted on that issue.

Upon the whole case we are satisfied no error prejudicial to appellant's substantial rights has been committed.

Judgment affirmed.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Breckenridge County.

"Not to be officially reported."

Action by the Fiscal Court of Breckenridge County against the Board of Trustees of the Town of Hardinsburg. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Claude Mercer, Gus. Brown, Co. Atty., and N. McC. Mercer, for appellant. Murray & Murray, for appellee.

NUNN, J. This action was instituted by the members of the fiscal court of Breckenridge county, in their official capacity, against the chairman and the members of the board of trustees of the town of Hardinsburg, Ky., a municipality of the sixth class.

Omitting the formal parts of the petition, it contains the following allegations: "That plaintiff Henry De Haven Moorman is now the duly qualified and acting judge of the Breckenridge county court. That John O'Reilly, C. H. Drury, H. G. Vessels, T. H. Bates, Frank Ruppert, and J. T. McCamish are the duly elected and qualified and acting justices of the peace in and for the said county of Breckenridge. That as such by law they compose the fiscal court of said county of Breckenridge, state of Kentucky. That the defendants, Frank De Haven, Lewis Jarbee, P. M. Beard, Denny Sheeran, and Andrew Elder are the duly qualified, elected, and acting trustees of the town of Hardinsburg, Ky., which is a duly incorporated town of the sixth class of this state. Plaintiffs state: That during the year 1907 it and the defendant the town of Hardinsburg, Ky., acting by and through its then duly elected, qualified, and acting trustees, entered into an agreement, whereby it was agreed that if said plaintiff, for and on behalf of Breckenridge county, would construct a public privy, within said town and near the livery stable therein, and would permit the citizens and taxpayers of said defendant town to have free access and use thereof, and in consideration of a public benefit to be derived therefrom by persons in said town, that said town of Hardinsburg would pay thereon the cost of such the sum of $175, and in addition thereto, and as a part of the consideration inducing the said plaintiff to enter into and make such agreement, that said defendant would open, for public use and travel, an alley from Court place to Fourth street, which said alley afforded means of ingress and egress to and from said public privy to Fourth street. That in consequence of and in pursuance of the said agreement, the plaintiff did erect said public privy at the designated place and had the same opened to the public. That said defendant, in pursuance of said agreement, did pay the aforesaid sum of $175 on the cost thereof, and further did take steps towards opening the said alley in pursuance of said agreement. That said defendant did, on the 23d day of April, 1907, by an ordinance duly passed by said board, in regular session, and as prescribed by law, declare said lands necessary for said alley to be needed for municipal purposes, and did publish said ordinance as required by law. That a committee was appointed by said board to report to it the cost of said alley. That said committee did investigate and report the cost thereof, and the consideration asked by the landowners over whose land said alley would run was satisfactory to said board, except the amount asked by the Farmers' Bank, in said town. That thereupon said board duly authorized and directed the city attorney, then John P. Haswell, Jr., to institute such legal proceedings as required by law to condemn said lands owned by the said bank, for the purpose of opening said alley in conformity with said agreement. That thereupon said city attorney, on the 27th day of May, 1907, instituted said condemnation proceeding against the Farmers' Bank for the purpose of acquiring the right to open said alley as agreed by defendant would be opened. That said suit was filed in the Breckenridge county court, a court of competent jurisdiction in the premises. That before said litigation was completed, and before said alley had been acquired by law, plaintiff alleges that the defendant, said board of trustees, composed of the defendants, Frank De Haven, P. M. Beard, Lewis Jarbee, Andrew Elder, and Denny Sheeran, have ordered the dismissal of aforesaid action and refuse to comply with the agreement as aforesaid, and refuse to take and prosecute such legal steps as to cause the opening of said alley, and they still refuse to do so, although plaintiff avers that it has demanded of them the fulfillment of said agreement. Plaintiff avers that it has complied with its part of aforesaid agreement in full, but the defendant has violated said agreement and refuses to carry same into effect as herein alleged. Plaintiff avers that said defendants, in their capacity of trustees aforesaid, have the legal right, and the law governing such provides means whereby the said alley can be opened as was agreed, but they have refused and still refuse to comply with said agreement as aforesaid."

A demurrer was sustained to this petition, and appellants filed an amended petition, with which they filed the ordinances enacted by the town council in legal form and manner, which declared the opening of the alleyway a public necessity, and directed the city attorney to take legal steps to have it opened, and an action was pending in the county court for that purpose when the present officials were elected to succeed those who were in office when the agreement referred to in the original petition was made, and when the ordinances for the opening of the alley were enacted, and alleged that the new board wrongfully directed the dismissal of the action by which it was sought to open the alley. A demurrer was sustained to this amended petition and the original petition as amended, and the action was dismissed. Nothing appears in the ordinances, which were duly passed, with reference to the opening of the alley, which in any way refers to the agreement, or contract, alleged in the original petition.

In Newman on Pleading & Practice, p. 390, it is said: "If the petition does not aver that the contract is in writing, it will be considered as made by parol. If the law requires the contract sued on to be in writing, and the petition does not allege it to have been so made, the statute need not be pleaded or relied on, but the defense may be presented by demurrer." See the cases of Byassee v. Reese, 4 Metc. 372, 83 Am. Dec. 481; Hocker v. Gentry, 3 Metc. 474; Smith v. Fah, 15 B. Mon. 445, and other cases cited therein. The foregoing rule being established, we must consider this case as if the fiscal court and town council had made nothing more than an oral agreement with respect to the matter set forth in the petition. It appears from the authorities that neither party could thus bind, or obligate, itself. That the fiscal court could not bind itself in such manner, see the case of McDonald's Adm'x v. Franklin County, 125 Ky. 205, 100 S. W. 861; but it appears that the fiscal court has fully performed its part of the agreement and endeavored by this action to compel the performance of the agreement on the part of the town. In our opinion, section 3699, Ky. St. (Russell's St. § 1698), is in the way of granting appellants the relief they ask. That section, in part, provides as follows: "No ordinance incurring a liability, or requiring an appropriation of exceeding fifty dollars for any one object or purpose, shall be valid, unless the same be voted for (and the yeas and nays be so entered upon the journal) by four members of the board."

It appears from the petition that the liability attempted to be incurred was for more than $50, and, as this statute was not complied with by the council, the attempted agreement was invalid. As appellees were not bound by the oral agreement and were not obligated to open the alley, it was a matter of discretion with the council to open or not open it, and the court has no power to compel it to so act, although in good morals the council ought to comply with the contract.

For these reasons the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

GAY v. HAGGARD, Supervisor of Roads.
(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. April 21, 1909.)

1. MANDAMUS (§ 154*)—PROCEEDINGS—PETITION.

A petition for a writ of mandamus need not expressly ask for the issuance of the writ; prayer for process being unnecessary under the Code.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

2. MANDAMUS (§ 1*)—NATURE.

Under the Code the writ of mandamus is a statutory writ, and is granted as a matter of right in a proper case to the party aggrieved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. § 1; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

3. MANDAMUS (§ 157*)—PROCEEDINGS—MOTION FOR WRIT—NOTICE.

Where a petition for a writ of mandamus is filed, the ordinary summons is supplied by the notice of motion for the writ, as provided by Civ. Code Prac. § 474, but the notice is unnecessary when the defendant voluntarily appears and demurs to the petition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 317-319; Dec. Dig. § 157.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 78*)—DECISIONS REVIEWABLE—ORDER SUSTAINING DEMURRER TO PETITION FOR MANDAMUS.

A ruling sustaining a demurrer to a petition for a writ of mandamus, and dismissing the action before the making of a motion for the writ, is a final order from which an appeal lies, though no notice of motion for the writ was given as provided by Civ. Code Prac. § 474; the notice being unnecessary when defendant appears.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 465; Dec. Dig. § 78.*]

5. MANDAMUS (§ 23*)—GROUNDS—PERSONS ENTITLED TO RELIEF.

An action for mandamus must be prosecuted by the proper public officer when the right or duty in question affects the state in its sovereign capacity as distinguished from the people at large, but, if the general public as distinguished from the state in its sovereign capacity is affected, any citizen may sue out the writ.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. § 55; Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

6. MANDAMUS (§ 23*)—GROUNDS—PERSONS ENTITLED TO RELIEF.

A citizen and taxpayer suing on his own behalf and on behalf of others may sue out a writ of mandamus to compel a road supervisor to discharge his statutory duty to let work on public roads at competitive bidding, the duty being one affecting the general public, and it is not necessary that the plaintiff should show a special interest, or that the public will sustain damage if the act is not done.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 55, 56; Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

7. MANDAMUS (§ 154*)—PROCEEDINGS—PETITION.

A petition for a writ of mandamus to compel a road supervisor to let work on public roads at competitive bidding which alleges that defendant is the supervisor of the county, appointed, qualified, and acting, and has let the work on all the roads by private contract, instead of advertising for bids, sufficiently charges that the county works its roads by taxation, as those acts can occur only when that method is employed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 300, 301; Dec. Dig. § 154.*]

8. HIGHWAYS (§ 113*)—IMPROVEMENT AND REPAIR—CONTRACTS—COMPETITIVE BIDDING ON WORK.

Ky. St. 1894, § 4315, as amended by Acts 1906, p. 431, c. 118, and Acts 1908, p. 107, c. 42, requiring the letting of work on public roads at competitive bidding, and providing that the supervisor, with the consent of the county judge, may designate certain roads or parts of roads for private contracting, does not authorize the supervisor, with the consent of the county judge, to exempt all the roads of the county from the competitive system.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Clark County.

"To be officially reported."

Action by David S. Gay against D. S. Haggard, Supervisor of Roads of Clark County. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Beckner & Beckner and Jouett & Jouett, for appellant. Pendleton, Bush & Bush and J. Smith Hays, for appellee.

O'REAR, J. Appellant, a citizen and taxpayer of Clark county, brought this suit on his own behalf, and the behalf of all other taxpayers of Clark county, against appellee Haggard, as supervisor of roads of Clark county, for mandamus, requiring the appellee to comply with the statute concerning the letting of work on the public roads of the county at competitive bidding, instead of private contract. It is charged that the latter course was being pursued as to all the roads of Clark county. A general demurrer was sustained to the petition, and the action was dismissed. We are advised in briefs of counsel that the learned circuit judge based his judgment upon a construction of the statute, which will presently be adverted to; but appellee here contends that there are certain technical defects in the petition which alone are sufficient to sustain the lower court's ruling. He also contends that the construction of the statute, which seems to have been the real purpose of the suit, as applied by the court, is correct. The petition does not expressly ask for the issuance of the writ of mandamus, although after stating the alleged dereliction of the defendant, a public officer, it asks that he be compelled to comply with the law, and be required to advertise the work on the roads to be let, and to let it, at public competitive bidding.

While at the common law prayer for process was the approved practice, under our Code that is not necessary. Upon the allegation of sufficient facts, process which is suitable to the relief demanded may be issued by the clerk where the law allows him to issue it, or may be awarded by the court. There was not a notice by the plaintiff of the motion for mandamus in this case. Appellee insists that, until there was such notice, the action of the trial court in ruling upon the demurrer to the petition was not a final order, although the petition was dismissed by the judgment; that the Code contemplates in this proceeding that the granting or refusing the writ of mandamus is the final order of the case; and that neither can be done until there is a motion for the mandamus. Under our Code of Practice the writ of mandamus is a statutory writ, and is granted as a matter of right in a proper case to a party aggrieved. Maddox v. Graham & Knox, 2 Metc. 56. The trial is summary. Section 475, Civ. Code Prac. By section 474, Civ. Code Prac., it is provided that, except in writs used by the court in enforcing its judgments, the writ of mandamus shall be obtained by motion as provided in title 10, c. 5, Code (applying to the trial of motions upon notice), and that "the applicant shall file a petition wherein he shall state the cause and ground of his application before giving notice of his motion; to which the party against whom the mandamus is sought shall file a demurrer or answer, at or before the time fixed for making the motion." Ordinarily a suit is begun by filing the petition in the clerk's office, and causing a summons to be issued upon it, returnable to the next term or within so many days after service. But in this proceeding the summons is supplied by the notice, the petition can be filed at any time before the notice, and the court may after the 10 days provided in the notice, or after the appearance of the defendant, summarily try the motion. When the defendant appeared and filed his demurrer, the office of the notice was dispensed with. It was no longer necessary to notify him to do what he had already done, or to apprise him of a purpose which he was then combating in court. Before the motion for the writ was made, the court held the petition to be insufficient to support such motion, and dismissed the plaintiff from court. That was an effectual denial of the writ, and is a final order in the case from which an appeal lies.

The petition does not allege that appellant will sustain special damage, or that anybody will sustain damage by reason of the alleged conduct or failure of the defendant to comply with the statute as to letting the work on the roads. There is no express provision of the statute in this state making it the duty of any public officer to prosecute actions for mandamus against derelict road supervisors. The duties of the latter officer appertain to a subject that directly concerns the public at large—the maintenance of the public roads of the counties. It affects them not only in their convenience, but as taxpayers. The rule of practice concerning who may prosecute the suit is well stated in 28 Cyc. 401, thus: "The true distinction seems to be that, where the right or duty in question affects the state in its sovereign capacity as distinguished from the people at large, the proceedings must be instituted by the proper public officer, but, if the general public as distinguished from the state in its sovereign capacity is affected, any member of the state may sue out the writ." Such was the practice applied and approved in the case of Leslie County v. Wooten, 115 Ky. 850, 75 S. W. 208. The principle in another aspect is more frequently encountered in cases where one citizen and taxpayer on behalf of others of the class brings an action to restrain the levy of a tax, or other excessive ministerial act. The cases are numerous and familiar. The right of a single taxpayer to maintain such an action is no longer in doubt. It would seem to follow that where a ministerial act was required by law to be done, which if done would inure to the benefit of the public, the tardy official might be set in motion and compelled to act by a suit by one of the public affected, suing on his own and on the behalf of the others. Nor is it necessary that the plaintiff should show a special interest to be affected by the act. The reason it is public is because all the public are equally affected by it at least theoretically; and, if no one of the public could maintain the suit, none less than all could, which would be practically a denial of the right to sue, for it is scarcely possible that all the citizens of a county or other territory could be got to act together in any matter. Nor do we think it necessary to allege or to show that the public will sustain damage if the act is not done. By the enactment of a statute on behalf of the public creating an office, and providing an incumbent to discharge certain public functions, the Legislature has declared that the act is one beneficial to the public. The phase of the question is not issuable. The public pay the officer for his services. They pay for the work done upon the roads. It will not lie in the official's mouth to say that his performance of a statutory duty is not a matter of concern to the public, or that his neglect of it will not entail any damage upon the public. Nor can he ask that the public be relegated to criminal prosecutions for redress. The public needs roads, not fines. The fines are only one method of enforcing the discharge of official duty to the public; but the availability of that means will not prevent the employment of another that will get what the public are entitled to, and what was the purpose of the legislation in their behalf in that matter.

The petition in this case does not allege that Clark county works its road by taxation. It is argued by appellee that, unless the roads are worked by taxation, there is no authority for the supervisor's letting the work at competitive bidding. Our statutes contemplate several different ways of maintaining our highways. One is the tollgate system, either by a private corporation or by the counties. Another is by the hands allotted to do the work, when overseers are appointed to superintend the work. Another is by taxation or allotment of hands or both. In the last instances a supervisor may be appointed who, under the fiscal court, has charge of the work. There is no provision for the appointment of a supervisor of roads unless the county has elected to keep up its roads in whole or in part by taxation. Section 4313, Ky. St. So, when the petition alleges that the defendant is the supervisor of roads of the county, appointed, qualified, and acting, and has let the work on all the roads of the county by private contract, instead of advertising for bids, we think it is sufficiently charged that the county was working its roads by taxation, as those acts could occur only if that method were being employed.

This brings us to the consideration of the statute, the construction of which is involved in this action. It is section 4315, Ky. St., as amended by the act of 1906 (Acts 1906, p. 431, c. 118), and as amended also by the act of March 24, 1908, p. 107, c. 42. This suit was begun four days after the amendment of March, 1908, and, as there was an emergency clause to the act, it took immediate effect. Appellant was doubtless unaware of that amendment. However, the statute before the amendment and now is not changed so far as the principal feature of this case is concerned. Before the last amendment, it was provided: "In counties wherein roads are worked by taxation it shall be the duty of the supervisor at the courthouse door in his county, on the first Monday in March in each year after twenty days written or printed notice posted at each voting place in the county, to let out to the lowest and best bidder, who shall give bonds with surety, approved by the supervisor, the working and keeping in repair of all the roads of said county," etc. Under the statute as it now stands, it is provided that the supervisor "shall advertise for fifteen days in succession in some newspaper having general circulation in his county or by written or printed notices posted up in three or more conspicuous places in each voting place in said county just preceding the regular monthly meeting of the fiscal court in April in each year, that the fiscal court will receive the bids to let out to the lowest and best bidder the work of keeping up and repairing the public roads of the county for a specified term of not less than one nor more than four years." In the statute now, and as it was before the amendment, there is this proviso: "Provided, that for the purposes enumerated the fund raised under this act, and which may be otherwise raised by the levy court, shall be sufficient; and if not sufficient, then it is to be used at such places and for such purposes as the supervisor under the general directions of said court may deem proper; and the court in giving such directions, shall have due regard for the public good, and to the wants of the different parts of the county. * * *

The supervisor, with the consent of the county judge, may designate certain roads or parts of roads that are not to be let out as hereinbefore required, but which are to be worked and kept in repair either by special contract privately made, or by hands and teams hired by him, or by delinquent taxpayers, or by persons sentenced to labor, or who, by law, may be liable to work out fines imposed by juries or courts. But it shall be the duty of the supervisors to return to the county court, at its September term in each year, a descriptive list of such roads, which shall be recorded in its order book, and also to report in writing all hands and teams hired, and amounts paid for same, and the length of time and where employed; and also a similar report of the names of the delinquents who work, the places where, and the length of time and names of persons working out fines or sentences on roads. And it shall be the further duty of the supervisor to supervise said work, and to employ competent persons to oversee; and he may, if necessary, put balls and chains on convicts to prevent their escape." The contention is, and it is said such was the view taken of the statute by the circuit court, that it was competent under this statute for the supervisor, with the concurrence of the county judge, to exempt all the roads of the county from the competitive system, and place the whole matter within the power of the supervisor to let the work by private contracts, and inasmuch as the petition in this case did not allege that some part or all of the roads of Clark county had not been designated by the supervisor with the consent of the county judge, to be let out by private contract, that the petition was defective. It is charged in the petition that the defendant as road supervisor "has continually refused, for both the year 1907 and the year of 1908, and for all other times, to let out said roads to the lowest and best bidder, or to advertise for bids at all, though he has often been requested so to do by this plaintiff and other citizens during all the said time and has persisted in doing all of said work upon all the turnpikes and roads of the county by contracts privately made," etc. There is no room left for an exception. "All" excludes exceptions. Appellee construes the act in question as authorizing the supervisor, with the consent of the county judge, to abrogate the entire provision as to competitive bidding. It must be assumed in the present state of the record that the supervisor of the roads has designated all the roads of the county to be let out by private contract; and that the county judge has consented to it. Is that permissible under the statute?

The scheme evolved by the Legislature for maintaining the public roads of the state contemplates putting the matter primarily in the hands of the various fiscal courts of the counties. In addition to this manifest purpose evidenced by nearly every provision of the statutes on the subject, section 4306, Ky. St., reads: "The fiscal court of each county shall have general charge and supervision of the public roads and bridges therein, and shall prescribe necessary rules and regulations for repairing and keeping same in order and for the proper management of roads and bridges in said county under and subject to the provisions of this act. The public roads shall be maintained either by taxation or by hands allotted to work thereon, or both, in the discretion of the fiscal court of the respective counties as herein provided." We must take notice that, before the establishment of the fiscal courts, the county courts had a larger authority than they now have in road matters; that then and until within recent years many of the counties of the state had their most important roads in the hands of turnpike companies; that the old system has given way to that of public ownership, the turnpikes have been bought up by the counties, and the tollgates abolished. Maintaining roads by taxation prior to the abolition of the tollgate system was the exception in this state. Under the existing conditions, there have been a number of changes in the statutes concerning the manner of keeping up the public roads—all in a few years. This indicates that the system is yet in an experimental stage. Inexperience in doing such work by the public authority and the opportunity for preying upon the public by contractors and others have combined to make the experiments expensive ones in some localities. The representatives in the Legislature have met here with these experiences and problems fresh in mind. Nearly every session sees some needed change in the road laws to conserve the public welfare. In nearly all of them there is the tendency to place the final responsibility with the elective magistracy, the fiscal courts of the counties. This is particularly manifest in the last amendment, which we are here called upon to consider. There the letting of the work by competitive bidding is adhered to; but it is deemed best to take that feature of responsibility and opportunity for favoritism and its well-known evils from the hands of the supervisors, and to lodge the power of making the contracts with the fiscal courts. The county judge sits as a member of the fiscal court. The statutes are careful to place his authority in the particular of contracting concerning county roads subordinate and subject to the fiscal courts. The supervisor has diminished authority. In view of this trend of legislation, of the causes leading up to it, of the well-known opportunity for abuse where competitive bidding for public work is not resorted to, of the fact that in nearly all public works of any magnitude, national, state, and municipal, the competitive system has been found by actual experience to be the best for the public and the taxpayers, is it permissible to read this statute so as to render it possible for the very officials designed to have a limited and special power, to enlarge their authority, to oust that of the superior magistracy, and to return to a system discarded by every progressive commonwealth and municipality? In construing a statute so as to arrive at the legislative meaning, not only the abuses intended to be corrected by it may be considered, but no part ought to be so construed as to annul another part, if it can be avoided. Particularly is this true as to allow a proviso to overturn the entire enactment to which it constitutes an exception. If the proviso means that the supervisor and county judge may designate all the roads of the county for private contracting, then all the careful enactments pertaining to public and competitive letting for the work are or may be set at naught. Always the aim and end of statutory construction is to effectuate the legislative purpose. The difficulty of expressing exact meaning in language so general as to be applicable to so many phases of a question as that which was the subject of this statute is recognized. The language here clearly imports the legislative will that the public roads when worked by money raised by general taxation shall be maintained in the highest state of utility that the money will buy, and the adoption as the most practicable plan of doing it, that of letting the work to the lowest and best bidder, to be ascertained in the manner which has been found most certainly to get the lowest and best bid. That last feature of the statute is its most prominent one next to that of affording good roads. It was recognized that instances would arise in each county where it would be impracticable to let a particular piece of the work in this manner. It might be too remote from the main work or too insignificant of itself, or be such that the labor of the particular neighborhood could best do it, and do it cheapest. That class of work, it was seen, ought not to be included in the general work required upon the more important systems of the road, because to do so might involve greater expense and more delays than if done by local labor or special contract. Then, too, it was seen that the delinquent taxes due for roads might in certain work be used advantageously by the county, as well as the labor of prisoners required by judgments of courts to work out their sentences. These matters were therefore made exceptions to the general and more comprehensive plan outlined by the statute—not with any purpose of doing away with the general plan, but to execute it as intended, letting the excepted parts form the least important portion of the scheme. The words of the exception, "certain roads or parts of roads," are inconsistent with the idea of so working all the roads. It is more difficult to define than it is to perceive the limitation of the proviso. It is believed by the court, as it doubtless was by the Legislature, that an attempt to define it more strictly than is done in the section would be to hamper a fair execution of the statute. If there should be a purpose to evade the aim of the statute, or to stretch it unduly, the good sense of any one concerned in the matter would doubtless serve to set the limitation so as to maintain the integrity of the general plan provided by the statute, and not defeat the fair object of the proviso. It is enough to say here that the proviso does not mean that "certain roads or parts of roads" includes all roads, and does not allow a radical departure from the scheme of public competitive bidding provided by the statute.

Although the writ cannot go to the extent prayed for, in so far as the defendant ought to act, it can go and he will be required to advertise the letting of the work for bids to be submitted to the fiscal court of the county in accordance with the directions of the statute as amended by the act of March, 1908. It is not suggested, nor do we apprehend that it is a fact, that appellee was actuated by other than an honest purpose in his course, nor that the county judge in consenting to it had other thought than to conserve the public welfare in applying the road funds of the county. Their error was doubtless one of legal construction. And it may be possible that their plan in the particular instance was working better than the one the Legislature provided. But the question is not one of expediency. It is one of law. The question has not yet arisen whether appellee and the county judge have abused their official discretion, but is one of their power to do at all what it is charged they are doing, and of the right of the taxpayers to have the law executed as the Legislature has enacted it.

The judgment is reversed and cause remanded for proceedings consistent herewith.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Logan County. "To be officially reported."

Action by L. B. Simmonds' administrator against John P. Simmonds. From the judgment rendered, defendant appeals, and plaintiff prosecutes a cross-appeal. Reversed on defendant's appeal, and affirmed on the cross-appeal.

Browder & Browder, for appellant. S. R. Crewdson, for appellee.

HOBSON, J. Mrs. L. B. Simmonds was the widow of C. N. B. Simmonds, who died a resident of Logan county, Ky., about the year 1890. At the death of her husband, 70 acres of land were set apart to her as her dower, and, in addition to this, she received the personal property exempt from distribution. She continued to reside on the dower land until her death, on October 2, 1907. Her son, John P. Simmonds, lived with her, and at her death claimed as his own all the personal property on the farm. C. R. Reed qualified as the administrator of her estate and brought three suits against John P. Simmonds. In the first he sought to recover the personal property referred to. In the second he sought to recover on a note executed by John P. Simmonds to J. W. Hutchins on May 20, 1898, for $1,783.89, subject to certain credits which reduced it to about $600 or $800; the note having passed by assignment to Mrs. Simmonds. In the third he sought to recover on a note for $103.40, executed by John P. Simmonds to his mother on October 17, 1899. John P. Simmonds defended all three of the actions on the ground that his mother had given him the property and the notes in her lifetime. The three cases were consolidated, and on final hearing the circuit court adjudged to John P. Simmonds the personal property, but entered a judgment against him on the notes on the ground that there had been no delivery of the notes to him. From this judgment John P. Simmonds appeals, and the administrator prosecutes a cross-appeal.

The reason which the circuit court had for adjudging to John P. Simmonds the personal property, and not adjudging to him the notes, was that he had possession of the personal property, but did not have possession of the notes; they being in the possession of his sister, Mrs. Ollie McReynolds, at the time of his mother's death. After her mother's death, Mrs. McReynolds delivered the notes to the administrator, and he brought suit upon them. The $103.40 note was executed for money which Mrs. Simmonds paid out for her son about the time the note was given. Several years later she paid off the balance due on the note for $1,783.89 through her son-in-law, Joe McReynolds. He testifies that she then told him to deliver the two notes to his wife, and for his wife to keep them for her. John P. Simmonds testifies that his mother asked Joe McReynolds to give her the notes, and that he refused to do so, and that for this reason she did not deliver the notes to him. For many years before her death, John P. Simmonds and his family, consisting of his wife and three children, had lived in the house with her. She had three other children, but none of the others looked after her wants, and the taking care of the old lady fell upon John and his family. At the time of her death she was blind. She had been confined to her bed about two years, and before that had been sick for a good while. She had lung trouble and had been blind about two years before she died. She had to be bathed and dressed. She required much attention at night, and both John P. Simmonds and his wife were up with her a great deal. One witness says that there were not two nights in two years that they were not up with her.

S. S. McReynolds, who was a magistrate in the district, testifies: "I was there twice. She sent for me twice, two different times. Said she wanted to settle up her business. Said she was going to give all her property to John. Said she owed it all to John for favors he had done for her, and she was going to give it to him, I believe was the language, but she never did tell me that she had given it to him."

Mrs. Sarah C. Metcalf, a neighbor, when asked whether she ever heard her say anything about John and his wife, makes this statement: "Yes, sir; said she didn't have half enough to pay them. Said she didn't have half enough to pay John for his trouble. Told me that out of her own mouth, said she wanted John to have everything she had, and said she didn't have half enough to pay him, and said there never was a son more faithful to his mother, and I know that was the case, because I was there enough to know."

Virgil D. Simmonds, being asked the same question, gave this testimony: "She just said she was sick and not able to wait on herself, and that John waited on her more than any of the other children, and that she wanted him to have what she had, and that she was going to give it to him. Q. How many times did you ever hear her say that? A. I don't remember but twice. Q. I will get you to tell the court, as near as you can recollect, her exact words as near as you can quote them. A. I reckon I can. Q. How the subject came up, and what she said, and just how she said it? A. At one time it came up. John was agent for shears, in some kind of business, selling scissors anyway, and she got sick and said she wanted John to come home, and she kept on after him to come home, and John told her he was making a little money, and that he had debts to pay, and she just told him, says: 'John, I can't live without you, and if you will come home I will give you my property.' That is just the way she spoke it."

The deputy sheriff, W. R. Bruce, who went to collect her taxes, testified thus: "She told me on one occasion, talking about the taxes, she said that she had given everything she had to John, and that he would pay the taxes. I had a list of real estate against her, and she said she had given everything she had over to John to take care of her, that she was getting old and feeble, she said."

Miss Florence Turner, who was an intimate friend, testifies as follows: "It was in the months of January and February, 1907, while I was staying with her, that she told me what disposition she had made of her property, both personal and real estate. I remember distinctly, at three different times when I was staying with her, that she said she had given all of her property, both personal and real estate, to her son John P. Simmonds on account of the care which he had given to her during her sickness. I never at any time asked her what disposition she expected to make of her property, but she told me of her own free will. She said that in case her daughter Ollie made any trouble for her son John about the property which she had given him that she wanted me to swear in court that she had given all of her property, both personal and real estate, to her son John P. Simmonds. Mrs. Simmonds was sick in bed at her home when she told me this, Ollie McReynolds knew what Mrs. Simmonds had done with her property, and said she was going to have her part of it, and this is why Mrs. Simmonds told me so many times what she had done with her property."

These witnesses are wholly disinterested. They are not contradicted or impeached in any way. The only testimony offered by the administrator was his own deposition and that of Joe McReynolds, and they do not contradict the testimony quoted. Under this evidence we think the circuit court properly held that the personal property on the place had been given to John P. Simmonds by his mother, and that the gift had become complete by delivery, for he had possession of the property, and she declared that she had given it to him.

Some point is made in the brief that Miss Turner says that Mrs. Simmonds stated that she had given John all her real and personal property, when in fact she had no real property; but she did have the dower interest in the land, and what she meant was that she had given him all she had and had given him the use of the land while she lived. The judgment on the cross-appeal is affirmed.

As to the notes a different question is presented. Ordinarily, to support a gift there must be a delivery; but if the notes were not in her possession, and McReynolds refused to deliver them to her so that she could deliver them to John P. Simmonds, he will not be allowed to say there was no delivery. His wife had the notes. The proof shows that she had declared that she was going to have her part of the estate. She and her husband had the administrator appointed, and they alone seem to be behind this suit. At least, the other two children have taken no part in it. A person will not be allowed to take advantage of his own wrong. McReynolds and wife will not be allowed to hold the notes against the will of Mrs. Simmonds, and thus prevent her from delivering them, and then claim that the gift to the son was not complete because there was no delivery. Mrs. Simmonds had nothing which she could deliver to the son as a symbolical delivery of the notes. She did all that she could do. McReynold's wife undoubtedly had the notes, and Mrs. Simmonds was for this reason unable to deliver them to John P. Simmonds. Miss Turner shows that Mrs. Reynolds knew of the gift to her brother, and was determined it should not be carried into effect. The testimony of Joe McReynolds on cross-examination goes far to show that he coincided in his wife's plans. To allow them thus to prevent the gift from taking effect, when the mother regarded the gift as complete, would be to exalt form above substance and to prostitute a rule of law to defeat the purpose for which it was intended.

Aside from this the proof shows that the personal property was of value about $300. The old lady was in a deplorable condition, and had been for years before she died, requiring attention almost similar to that required by an infant. The notes and personal property are no more than would reasonably compensate John P. Simmonds for his care of her. The proof shows that she told him that, if he would stay there and take care of her, he should have this property. He did stay there and take care of her. He paid her doctor's bills and burial expenses and the other expenses of her sickness. If we should say that the gift was not complete, it is manifest under the proof that the property is of no more value than the services which he rendered upon the express promise of his mother that, if he would stay there and take care of her, he should have the property. There is no equity in the plaintiff's case. The chancellor will not shut his eyes to the truth in matters of this sort, but, as in other questions involving the settlement of the estate of a decedent, will do justice between the parties. Whether we put the case upon the ground of gift or contract, the plaintiff should recover nothing of John P. Simmonds.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded, with directions to dismiss the petition.

MEADOWS v. BRYANT.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. April 27, 1909.)

HOMESTEAD (§ 170*)—CONTRACTS IN RELATION TO—JOINDER OF HUSBAND AND WIFE.

A contract in adjustment of a claim set up to land settled on as a homestead, whereby the party in possession agreed to hold as the tenant of the other until a time fixed, and then to surrender possession, is not void because the wife of the party in possession did not join therein under St. 1909, § 1706 (Russell's St. § 4665), providing that no release or waiver of the homestead exemption shall be valid unless in writing and subscribed by the husband and his wife, as that section merely exempts the homestead from the debts of the owner and imposes no restraint on the husband's general right voluntarily to sell the land or otherwise contract as to it.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Pulaski County. "Not to be officially reported."

Action by L. D. Meadows against R. S. Bryant to quiet title. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

L. G. Campbell, for appellant. O. H. Waddle & Son, for appellee.

HOBSON, J. L. D. Meadows obtained from J. J. Jones and wife a quitclaim deed to a tract of 30 acres of land in Pulaski county, and settled on it with his family. He proceeded to cut the timber from it, when R. S. Bryant set up claim to the land and the timber. Thereupon the following written contract was entered into: "Whereas, I have cut 84 logs and 5 logs and now have them piled on the Cumberland river, which turns out to have come from the land of R. S. Bryant; and whereas, I am living on a tract of land in Pulaski county, Kentucky, on waters of Cumberland river known as the Schuyler Clark survey which belongs to said R. S. Bryant: Now in consideration of W. J. Hamilton taking said logs and paying me therefore less $2.00 per thousand feet for the payment of the delivery of said logs and to pay for the timber, and in further consideration of said R. S. Bryant agreeing to pay me $25.00 on my surrendering to her the full possession of said land, I now agree to hold said land as the tenant of said Bryant until October 15, 1904, on which day I agree to vacate and surrender the full possession to her without demand or notice. This July 19, 1904. L. D. Meadows." She paid him the $25, and he received the money for the timber. In October, 1904, he represented to her he had vacated the land, but, instead, he placed a tenant on it, and on June 7, 1905, brought this suit to quiet his title, alleging that he was the owner and in possession of it. The circuit court dismissed his petition and he appeals.

It is insisted that he was a bona fide housekeeper with a family, residing on the land, and the contract above quoted is void because his wife did not join in it under section 1706, Ky. St. (Russell's St. § 4665): "No mortgage, release or waiver of such exemption shall be valid unless the same be in writing, subscribed by the defendant and his wife, and acknowledged and recorded in the same manner as conveyances of real estate." It has been steadily held that the statute only creates an exemption of the homestead from the debts of the owner, and that this section imposes no restraint upon the husband's general right voluntarily to sell the land for value or otherwise contract

CRANOR SMITH LUMBER CO. v. FRITH.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. April 21, 1909.)

1. SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM (§ 29*)—SUBJECTS OF COUNTERCLAIM.

Under Civ. Code Prac. § 96, defining a "counterclaim" as a cause of action in favor of defendant against plaintiff arising out of the contract or transaction stated in the petition or which is connected with the subject of the action, defendant when sued for preventing plaintiff from removing $1,500 worth of timber under a timber contract, was entitled to counterclaim damages for plaintiff's cutting not included in the contract and for the destruction of plaintiff's fences and crops.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Set-Off and Counterclaim, Cent. Dig. § 49; Dec. Dig. § 29.*]

2. SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM (§ 28*)—SUBJECTS OF SET-OFF.

Plaintiff sued defendant for tortiously preventing plaintiff by force from cutting and removing prior to September 1, 1906, certain timber from defendant's land under a contract made September 9, 1904, by which the timber was sold to plaintiff. Defendant claimed that on August 4, 1904, he also sold to plaintiff all the standing timber on another tract of land measuring 12 inches and over at the stump where cut, and that, in violation of that contract, plaintiff had cut and converted certain trees not within the contract of the value of $675, for which defendant prayed judgment. Held that, since defendant's claim did not arise out of the contract sued on, it was available only as a set-off and not as a counterclaim.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Set-Off and Counterclaim, Cent. Dig. §§ 47, 48; Dec. Dig. § 28.*]

3. COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT (§ 23*)—RECEIPT—EVIDENCE.

Where, in an action for breach of certain timber contracts, defendant pleaded as a set-off a claim for the wrongful cutting of timber under a former contract and for damages for injuries to defendant's fences, etc., while plaintiff claimed that all such differences had been settled, a receipt from defendant to plaintiff for money paid, reciting that plaintiff agreed to make good defendant's fence, to erect a temporary fence, and in lieu thereof defendant agreed to take as much fencing lumber as was necessary to fence the tract and "settle the entire matter," was admissible to show the agreement of the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Compromise and Settlement, Cent. Dig. § 93; Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

4. COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT (§ 25*)—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for breach of a logging contract, defendant pleaded as a set-off and counterclaim damages from plaintiff's cutting trees not sold, and also for injuries to his fences. Defendant offered in evidence a receipt executed April 30, 1906, which purported to be a settlement in which plaintiff agreed to reconstruct the fences, put up a temporary fence at once, or in lieu thereof permit defendant to take as much fencing timber as was necessary to fence the tract. The court charged that the jury should find for defendant on plaintiff's claim, unless defendant before the expiration of the timber contract objected to the removal of the timber remaining on the land which could have been removed by plaintiff before September 1, 1906, otherwise the jury should find for plaintiff, unless plaintiff and defendant agreed that, if defendant would not sue plaintiff for damages, plaintiff would repair the fence and surrender the timber remaining, in which case the finding should be for defendant. The court also charged that, if the jury found for plaintiff on its claim and found any sum for defendant on the set-off or counterclaim, they should find the difference and return their verdict in favor of the party entitled to such difference, etc. Held that, since the contract of April 30th was a complete settlement, the court should have added to both instructions that, if the jury so found, they should find nothing for defendant on his counterclaim except the reasonable value of any work on the fence which plaintiff by the contract agreed but failed to do, and the market value of any timber plaintiff afterwards cut which was not included in the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Compromise and Settlement, Cent. Dig. § 96; Dec. Dig. § 25.*]

5. LOGS AND LOGGING (§ 3*)—SALE OF TIMBER—SIZE.

Where plaintiff purchased all the timber on certain land 12 inches or over in diameter at the stump where cut, plaintiff was not responsible for the cutting of trees at a point where they measured less than 12 inches in diameter, if their diameter at the point where trees are usually cut was sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Logs and Logging, Cent. Dig. § 9; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

6. DAMAGES (§ 62*)—DUTY TO REDUCE DAMAGE.

Where plaintiff in lumbering operations, pursuant to a contract, negligently knocked down defendant's fences, defendant was not required to anticipate that they would be negligently left down by plaintiff, nor, on ascertaining that the fences were down, to do more than exercise reasonable care to protect his crops and grass.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Rockcastle County.

"Not to be officially reported."

Action by the Cranor Smith Lumber Company against T. S. Frith. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

C. C. Williams, for appellant. Bethurum & Bethurum, for appellee.

HOBSON, J. On September 9, 1904, Thomas S. Frith, by written contract, sold to the Cranor Smith Lumber Company, 2,826 trees standing on a tract of 800 or 1,000 acres of land owned by him in Rockcastle county, Ky., in consideration of $4,500 cash in hand paid. The grantee was given by the contract until September 1, 1906, to get the timber off the land in the most convenient way for it to haul it, and it was provided in the contract that, should it be necessary for the grantee to go through fields in getting out the timber, it was to put up and maintain gates at such points as it went through the fields. On March 11, 1907, the lumber company brought this suit against Frith, alleging in its petition that he had prevented it from getting out $1,500 worth of the timber by September 1, 1906, by threats, force, or violence, and praying judgment against him for that sum. He filed an answer, in which, in the first paragraph, he denied that he had prevented the lumber company from getting out the timber by September 1, 1906. In the second paragraph he alleged that the trees which it bought were marked, and that it had cut and taken away 200 trees which were not marked or included in the contract, of the reasonable value of $750. This he pleaded as a counterclaim. In the third paragraph he alleged that on August 4, 1904, he sold the plaintiff certain standing timber on another tract of land, which was 12 inches and over in diameter at the stump where cut, and that in violation of this contract it had cut and converted to its own use 230 trees, of the value of $675, for which he prayed judgment in assumpsit, waiving the tort. By the fourth paragraph he alleged that the plaintiff, in cutting the timber and removing it, had pulled down and destroyed his fences upon the land by cutting trees upon them and failed to repair them, thus destroying his rails and fencing and causing his grass and crops to be destroyed, damaging him in the sum of $500. In the fifth paragraph he pleaded that in April, 1906, the plaintiff and he entered into a contract to the effect that the plaintiff was to wind up its business and give him full possession of his property on June 1, 1906, and repair the fencing which had been damaged, in consideration that he would not institute a suit against it for damages, and by the terms of this contract he was to have the refuse timber, including the butts, tops, and laps of the marked trees. The plaintiff demurred to the second, third, and fourth paragraphs of the answer. The demurrer was overruled, a reply was filed, which made up the issues, and on the trial of the case before a jury there was a verdict and judgment for the defendant against the plaintiff for $300. The plaintiff appeals.

The demurrer to the second, third, and fourth paragraphs of the answer was properly overruled. By section 96 of the Civil Code of Practice a "counterclaim" is a cause of action in favor of the defendant against the plaintiff which arises out of the contract or transaction stated in the petition, or which is connected with the subject of the action. A counterclaim may be pleaded to recover unliquidated damages. If the plaintiff had cut other trees than those included in the contract, or by cutting the trees negligently it had injured the defendant's fencing, as alleged in the second and fourth paragraph of the answer, these were matters arising out of the contract or transaction sued on and connected with the subject of the action.

Garvey v. Crouch, 10 Ky. Law Rep. 937; Tebbs v. Lewis, 15 Ky. Law Rep. 537; Stillwell v. Duncan, 103 Ky. 63, 44 S. W. 357; Newman on Pleading & Practice, 477. The matters set up in the third paragraph were not properly pleadable as a counterclaim, because the contract of August 4, 1904, was not sued on by the plaintiff; but the rule is that the plaintiff may waive the tort, and may plead as a set-off a claim of this sort where he claims only the value of the timber. Eversole v. Moore, 3 Bush, 50; Roberts v. Moss (Ky.) 106 S. W. 297, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 280; Dennis v. Strunk (Ky.) 108 S. W. 957.

The defendant on the trial introduced himself and two other witnesses proving that he made a contract with the plaintiff in April, 1906, by which it was agreed that the plaintiff should get out the timber by June 1, 1906, and then turn the property back to the defendant in consideration of a settlement of all differences between them, except that the plaintiff was to repair the fences. According to this testimony, this contract was in consideration of the settlement of all matters including the timber cut under the contract of August 4th, which it was claimed the plaintiff was not entitled to. The defendant introduced two witnesses who testified that no such contract was made. The parties did meet at that time and had a negotiation in which $12.50 was paid the defendant by the plaintiff and a receipt was executed, which is as follows: "Broadhead, Ky., 4, 30, 1906. Received of Cranor Smith Lumber Co. $12.50 in full of the rent where the Tate mill site up to October 1, 1906. It is also agreed that the said Cranor Smith Lumber Company are to make the outside fence as good as it was on October 1, 1904, just as soon as the lumber can be moved which is now on the ground. In the regular course of business, said Cranor Smith Lumber Company are to put up temporary fence until site is removed. That in lieu of this being done, said Frith agrees to take as much fencing timber as necessary to fence said tract and settle the entire matter." The defendant offered to read this writing to the jury; the court refused to allow it to be read. In this there was error. All that took place between the parties in that transaction was competent to show what their agreement was. It would not be doubted that anything that was said orally might be proved, and the writing that was then executed is equally competent. The court at the conclusion of the evidence gave the jury instruction No. 1, as follows: "You will find for the defendant, Frith, on the claim of the plaintiff, unless you believe from the evidence that the defendant, T. S. Frith, before the expiration of the contract between the parties, objected to the removal of the timber remaining on defendant's land, if any there was remaining after such objection was made by defendant, that could have been removed by plaintiff before the 1st day of September, 1906, and if you so believe you will find for the plaintiff, Cranor Smith Lumber Company, unless you shall further believe from the evidence that before the expiration of said contract, September 1, 1906, the plaintiff and defendant entered into a contract with each other, whereby it was agreed between them, that, in consideration of defendant Frith's agreement not to sue plaintiff for damages, the plaintiff would repair defendant's fence and would on the 1st day of June, 1906, surrender to the defendant the timber remaining on the land covered by the contract, and, if you believe the latter state of case, you will find for the defendant, Frith." By instruction 2, the court told the jury that, if they found for the plaintiff, they should find for it such a sum as would reasonably compensate it for the market value of the timber standing on the defendant's land belonging to the plaintiff on the 1st day of September, 1906. The court should have added to this instruction these words: "Which the plaintiff could have removed before the 1st day of September, 1906, if the defendant had not objected to its removal." By instruction 3 he told the jury that, if the plaintiff negligently cut the timber upon the defendant's fences, they should find for him upon his counterclaim such loss as he thereby sustained. By the fourth instruction he told them that, if the plaintiff cut and took away trees not included in the contract sued on, they should find for the defendant the value of such trees. By the fifth instruction he told them that, if the plaintiff cut and took away under the contract of August 4th any trees less than 12 inches in diameter, they should find for him the market value of these trees. The sixth instruction is as follows: "If you find any sum for the plaintiff on its claim, and find any sum for the defendant, Frith, on his set-off or counterclaim, you will find the difference, if any, between the sums found, and return your verdict in favor of the party entitled to such difference, giving the amount of such difference. If the sums found by you should be equal, then your verdict on the whole case will be for the defendant, Frith. If you find any sum for the plaintiff on his claim and nothing for the defendant on his claim, your finding on the whole case will be for the plaintiff, giving the amount."

It is manifest from the proof that the contract of April 30, 1906, was a complete settlement of all matters up to that date if it was made, and the court should have added to instruction 1 these words: "And in this event the jury will find nothing for the defendant on his counterclaim except the reasonable value of any work on the fences which the plaintiff by the contract agreed to do and failed to perform, and the reasonable market value of any timber which it afterwards cut and took away which was not included in the contract." A similar qualification should be added to instruction 6, so that the jury will understand that it only applies in case the parties did not make a contract on April 30, 1906, settling their differences up to that time.

There is some intimation in the record that the hands in cutting some of the trees under the contract of August 4, 1904, cut them higher from the ground than necessary, and that some of the stumps for this reason measured less than 12 inches in diameter, when they would have measured 12 inches if cut lower. The court on another trial will allow the plaintiff to show the facts, if he desires to do so, and will tell the jury that the plaintiff is not responsible for any tree which was cut if it was 12 inches in diameter at the point where trees are usually cut.

The plaintiff complains that the court refused to instruct the jury that the defendant could not recover on his counterclaim for any damages to his crops or grass which he could have prevented by ordinary care. We do not find in the record any evidence that would warrant the giving of the instruction. The defendant was not required to anticipate that injury would be done to his fences negligently, or that, if his fences were knocked down they would be negligently left down. If he in fact knew that the fences were down, it was incumbent on him to exercise such care as might be reasonably expected of an ordinarily prudent person under like circumstances for the protection of his crops and grass; and, if on another trial the proof should warrant it, an instruction as indicated may be given. Raleigh v. Clark, 114 Ky. 732, 71 S. W. 857; Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. v. Moore (Ky.) 101 S. W. 934, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 579. On another trial, also, the court will conform the verbiage of the first part of instruction 1, above quoted, to the verbiage of instruction 1 asked by the plaintiff.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

1. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT (§ 182*)—LIEN OF ATTORNEY — COMPENSATION — SUBJECT OF LIEN.

An attorney successfully prosecuting an action by a taxpayer, suing on behalf of all the taxpayers of a county to recover county money illegally appropriated cannot assert a lien on the money recovered, under St. 1909, § 489 (Russell's St. § 1806), providing that in actions for money held in joint tenancy, etc., the court shall allow reasonable compensation for one prosecuting an action for the benefit of the others interested with himself, which applies only to money held in joint tenancy, coparcen-

2. COUNTIES (§ 208*)—CAPACITY TO BE SUED—CONTRACTS—LIABILITY.

A "county" is a local subdivision of the state, created by the state of its own will, and is not a municipal corporation proper, which is called into existence either at the direct solicitation or by the consent of the persons composing it, for the promotion of their private advantage, and a county cannot be sued except on an express contract.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Marion County.
"To be officially reported."

Action by Rives & McChord against Marion County. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

W. W. Spalding, for appellant. H. W. Rives, for appellees.

CLAY, C. The sole question involved on this appeal is whether or not an attorney of a taxpayer, who institutes a suit on behalf of all the taxpayers of the county and recovers money illegally appropriated, can assert a lien thereon for his services and recover a judgment against the county. The question arises in the following manner: The fiscal court of Marion county entered orders appropriating certain money belonging to the county to the county attorney and the several magistrates. R. D. Thornbury, as a citizen and taxpayer of the county, instituted an action to have the orders declared void and to recover the money so paid. This action was brought for the use of himself and the other taxpayers of the county. In his effort he was successful in the circuit court, and also in this court. In the prosecution of the suit, Thornbury employed appellees, who are regular practicing attorneys of Lebanon, Ky. Upon the payment of the money recovered into the county treasury, appellees asked an allowance by the fiscal court for their services. The fiscal court declined to make them an allowance. This action was instituted to recover a fee of $500. After setting forth the above facts, the petition concludes as follows: "Plaintiffs say that their services in prosecuting the claim committed to them, and recovering the money so recovered and paid into the treasury of Marion county for the joint benefit of all the taxpayers of said county, were reasonably worth the sum of $500, for which sum they had and have a lien on the claim, and on the amount recovered, and that, the employment and recovery having been at the instance of one of said taxpayers, and for the joint benefit of all, the taxpayers of the county cannot, in equity, be permitted to accept and retain the whole sum recovered, free from all expense of recovery, and without contributing ratably to the payment of the plaintiffs' fee as attorneys." The defendant, Marion county, demurred to the petition, and the demurrer was overruled. It then filed an answer in two paragraphs, which it will be unnecessary to set forth. The question of what was a reasonable fee was submitted to the jury, and a verdict in plaintiffs' favor for $250 was returned. Judgment was entered thereon, and Marion county appeals.

The position of appellees is: That Thornbury, as a party in interest, had the right to employ attorneys to prosecute the action referred to for the benefit of himself and the other taxpayers of the county; that their efforts were successful; that their services were rendered, not for Thornbury in the establishment of a personal claim, but to recover a sum in which every taxpayer in the county had a proportionate interest. It is therefore insisted that the other taxpayers should not be permitted to take to themselves and enjoy the fruits of appellees' labor without sharing in the reasonable expense incident to the recovery, and that under the doctrine of contribution the county is liable. It is furthermore insisted that the recovery in this case is authorized by section 489 of the Kentucky Statutes (Russell's St. § 1806), which is as follows: "In actions for the settlement of estates, or for the recovery of money or property held in joint tenancy, coparcenary, or as tenants in common, if it shall be made to appear that one or more of the legatees, devisees, distributees or parties in interest have prosecuted for the benefit of others interested with themselves, and have been at trouble and expense in conducting the same, it shall be the duty of the court to allow such person or persons reasonable compensation for such trouble, and for necessary expenses, in addition to the fees and costs; said allowance to be paid out of the funds recovered before distribution, the persons interested having notice of the application for such allowance."

We are unable to see how the doctrine of contribution can apply in this case. There is no direct recovery by any of the taxpayers. None of the proceeds are distributed to them. The money recovered went into the county treasury. The recovery only incidentally benefits all the taxpayers. It may, perhaps, serve to decrease the amount of taxes thereafter to be paid by them, but they have no control over the sum recovered. None of it belongs to them in their individual capacity. Not even the county could distribute it among them except for public purposes. Any one of them might institute an action to prevent the sum from being illegally expended, but that is as far as the power of the individual taxpayer goes. It is manifest that section 480 of the Kentucky Statutes has no application to a case of this kind. It applies only to money or property held in joint tenancy, coparcenary, or as tenants in common. It further contemplates that there shall be distributees among whom the property or fund shall be divided. Certainly the taxpayers of the county are not joint tenants, coparceners, or tenants in common of funds paid into the county treasury and belonging to the county. The statute further contemplates that the fund or property shall be distributed among those who are to contribute to the fees and costs. As said above, public funds can never be distributed among the taxpayers except for lawful, public purposes.

While the appellees are asserting a lien on the sum recovered, they are seeking to do so in an action against the county. The question, then, arises: Can such an action be maintained? With respect to the right of a party to sue them, there is a wide difference between "municipal corporations" and "counties." The distinction is well pointed out by Dillon, in his work on Municipal Corporations (volume 1, § 23), as follows: "The distinction between municipal corporations proper, such as chartered towns and cities, or towns and cities voluntarily organized under general incorporating acts, such as exist in a number of the states, and involuntary quasi corporations, such as counties, has been very clearly drawn by the Supreme Court of Ohio: 'Municipal corporations proper are called into existence either at the direct solicitation or by the free consent of the persons composing them, for the promotion of their own local and private advantage and convenience.' On the other hand: 'Counties are at most but local organizations, which, for the purposes of civil administration, are invested with a few functions characteristic of a corporate existence. They are local subdivisions of the state, created by the sovereign power of the state, of its own sovereign will, without the particular solicitation, consent, or concurrent action of the people who inhabit them. The former (municipal) organization is asked for, or at least assented to, by the people it embraces; the latter organization (counties) is superimposed by a sovereign and paramount authority.' 'A municipal corporation proper is created mainly for the interest, advantage, and convenience of the locality and its people; a county organization is created almost exclusively with a view to the policy of the state at large, for purposes of political organization and civil administration, in matters of finance, of education, of provisions for the poor, of military organization, of the means of travel and transport, and especially for the general administration of justice. With scarcely an exception, all the powers and functions of the county organization have a direct and exclusive reference to the general policy of the state, and are, in fact, but a branch of the general administration of that policy.'"

In discussing the same question, this court, in the case of Commonwealth v. Baske, 124 Ky. 468, 90 S. W. 316, used the following language: "It is a well-established doctrine in this state, and in harmony with the rule generally prevailing, that counties are not liable to suit, unless authority for it can be found in the statute, or it follows by necessary implication from some express power given. The reason upon which this rule rests is that counties are subordinate political subdivisions of the state. They are created for public purposes, and are a part of the necessary machinery of government, and can no more be sued by the citizen than can the state. Downing v. Mason County, 87 Ky. 208, 8 S. W. 284, 12 Am. St. Rep. 473; Wheatly v. Mercer County, 9 Bush, 704; Hite v. Whitley County, 91 Ky. 168, 15 S. W. 57, 11 L. R. A. 122; Simons v. Gregory, 120 Ky. 116, 85 S. W. 752; Sinkhorn v. Lexington T. P. Co., 112 Ky. 206, 65 S. W. 356. It is true that in these cases damages were sought to be recovered for injury to person or property, but the principle announced, and the ground upon which the opinions rest, is that, in the absence of statutory authority or necessary implication flowing from the exercise of a power granted, an action against a county will not lie. We have not been able to find any authority in the statute for an action such as this. In fact there are very few actions that can be maintained against counties. The right of these political subdivisions of the state to sue is much larger than their right to be sued, and this follows from the fact that, having control of the bridges, highways, and public buildings of the county, it is necessary that they should be invested with all needful power to protect and preserve them, and so it has been held that a county may maintain an action for injury to its courthouse or public roads. Christian County v. Rankin & Sharp, 2 Duv. 503, 87 Am. Dec. 505; Lawrence County v. Chattahoochee R. Co., 81 Ky. 225; L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Whitley County, 95 Ky. 215, 24 S. W. 604, 44 Am. St. Rep. 220. And where a county has authority to make a contract, it would follow as an incident that it might sue or be sued concerning it. There is a marked distinction between counties and municipal corporations, such as cities and towns, in respect to the power to sue and be sued. The latter, by the act creating them, are expressly authorized to sue and be sued, and hence may be parties plaintiff or defendant in any case in the absence of a statute or judicial determination to the contrary, and it has been frequently announced that an action against them will lie in behalf of a taxpayer. City of Covington v. Powell, 2 Metc. 226; City of Louisville v. Anderson, 79 Ky. 334, 42 Am. Rep. 220. When taxes have been wrongfully collected by county officials, and are in the hands of the collecting or distributing officers, a direct action may be brought by the taxpayer against the person holding the tax. Whaley v. Commonwealth, 110 Ky. 154, 61 S. W. 35; Blair v. Carlisle, etc., Turnpike Co., 4 Bush, 157; Commonwealth v. Stone, 114 Ky. 511, 71 S. W. 428. But after the taxes collected have been paid out, the taxpayer is without remedy as against the county. We conclude therefore that the action of the lower court in sustaining the demurrer in behalf of Kenton county was proper, and the judgment is affirmed."

In the recent case of First National Bank v. Christian County, 106 S. W. 831, this court, in explanation of the statement, "And where a county has authority to make a contract, it would follow as an incident that it might sue or be sued concerning it," contained in the opinion in Commonwealth v. Boske, supra, used the following language: "Counsel for appellant earnestly contends that the statement in the above opinion, to the effect that, where a county has authority to make a contract, it would follow as an incident that it might sue or be sued concerning it, authorizes this action, claiming that where taxes have been illegally collected there arises upon the part of the county an implied contract to pay them back. This, however, is not the meaning of the language used. That language refers only to an express contract. It was not intended to convey the idea, nor would it be proper to do so, that the right to sue could be implied from an implied contract."

It is manifest from the foregoing that a county cannot be sued except upon an express contract. Thornbury had no power to make a contract with appellees that would be binding upon Marion county. As to Marion county, he was a mere volunteer. He sustained the same relation to the other taxpayers of the county. Where a party undertakes, on behalf of himself and other taxpayers of the county, to prevent the illegal expenditure of money, or to recover money illegally expended, he cannot, without direct authority contained in the statutes, expect his attorneys to be paid by the county. The sum expended by him is simply a contribution made towards good government, and he must find his recompense in the conviction that he has performed his duty as a citizen. An attorney who undertakes such employment must look alone to the taxpayer who employed him, until the Legislature provides to the contrary.

For the reasons given, the judgment is reversed, and cause remanded, with directions to dismiss the petition.

PATTON v. WALKER'S TRUSTEES.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. April 21, 1909.)

1. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES (§ 61*)—PARENT AND CHILD—INTENT.

Under Ky. St. 1909, § 1907 (Russell's St. § 2100), providing that every gift, conveyance, etc., by a debtor of or on any of his estate without valuable consideration therefor shall be void as to all his then existing liabilities, etc., it was a fraud on creditors for an insolvent to set aside the greater portion of his estate and income to his daughters, though there was no actual intention to defraud.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Cent. Dig. § 153; Dec. Dig. § 61.*]

2. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES (§ 46*)—STATUTORY PROVISIONS—"ESTATE."

Ky. St. 1909, § 1907 (Russell's St. § 2100), providing that every gift, conveyance, assignment, etc., by a debtor of any of his estate, without valuable consideration therefor, shall be void as to existing liabilities, etc., does not apply to real estate alone, since the word "estate" includes personal as well as real property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Cent. Dig. §§ 108, 110; Dec. Dig. § 46.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2475-2488; vol. 8, pp. 7653-7654.]

3. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES (§ 263*)—PARENT AND CHILD—"FREE OF CHARGE AS ADVANCEMENTS."

The allegation that certain rents and other property were given by an insolvent father to his children "free of charge as advancements" sufficiently charged that the gifts were voluntary and without consideration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Dec. Dig. § 263.*]

4. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES (§ 273*)—PRESUMPTIONS.

The presumption was that advancements made by an insolvent to his child to whom he was indebted were made with the intention of liquidating the indebtedness, whether such was his actual intention or not.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Madison County.

"Not to be officially reported."

Action between J. Stone Walker's trustees and Carlisle W. Patton. From the judgment, said Patton appeals. Affirmed.

J. J. Greenleaf, for appellant. J. A. Sullivan and A. R. Burnam, for appellees.

NUNN, J. In the year 1905 J. Stone Walker, then a resident of Madison county, Ky., made an assignment of all his property for the benefit of his creditors. For many years preceding that date he was regarded as one of the wealthiest men in the county, and expended what was regarded as a great deal of money for the support and comfort of himself and family. He had three children by his first wife, who were at the time of the trial living, namely, Carlisle W. Walker, a daughter who, in the year 1904, married one Patton, another daughter, Laura, married one Chenault, and a minor son named for his father. These three children were devised a sum of money each of about $2,500 or $3,000 by an annuity, their mother's sister. Their father, J. Stone Walker, was appointed their statutory guardian, but never made any settlement with the court as such. It appears that on the 14th day of March, 1895, he prepared and executed a note to appellant in the sum of $2,100, bearing 6 per cent. interest from date. It seems that he regarded this sum as a balance then due his ward and child, appellant. He placed this note among his papers for safe-keeping for appellant. She arrived at the age of 21 years in June, 1903, and married in the year 1904. Walker's trustees, S. H. Stone and R. E. Turley, instituted an action in the Madison circuit court on the 19th day of April, 1905, for the purpose of ascertaining all the property assigned to them and the creditors of Walker for a distribution and settlement of his estate. The case was referred to a commissioner to take proof and report upon the matters stated. Appellant filed her note with the commissioner as a preferred claim, and asked that the whole of it be paid out of her father's estate. The commissioner so allowed and reported her claim. The trustees filed exceptions to the report, and denied the validity of the claim, alleging that it had been settled, and, in effect, that he had given her, without any consideration other than love and affection, $1,500 in cash in each of the years 1900, 1901, 1902, 1903, and 1904, and in the year 1905 the sum of $1,000; that such gifts were frauds upon his creditors, and asked that appellant be made to account for such gifts to the extent of the amount of her note, with interest. The testimony shows that during the dates mentioned J. Stone Walker was insolvent; that his indebtedness amounted to $200,000 or over and the value of his property was $100,000 or less; and that nearly all who were his creditors at the date of his assignment were creditors during the dates mentioned. It is evident that appellant did not know that her father was insolvent, and that her father was not fully conscious of it. On the trial of the case in the lower court appellant's claim was dismissed, and she has appealed.

The testimony shows that these payments to appellant were made under the following circumstances: J. Stone Walker had placed his daughter and her husband, Chenault, in possession of a valuable farm near Richmond, containing about 540 acres. They lived upon it for a few years rent free, and possibly under the impression that a gift to them of the farm would be made. In 1900 Walker made an arrangement with Chenault and wife by which they were to remain on the farm and pay one-half of the value of the rent to appellant, which they agreed to be $1,500 a year. The year before the assignment they paid to appellant only $1,000; the rent having been lessened by reason of valuable improvements put upon the farm by Chenault. These sums were given to the daughter in addition to the support given her at her home prior to her marriage to Patton. Appellant introduced two witnesses who stated that in their opinion the gift made to her in the way of rent and support furnished her by her father while she was in his home was not unreasonable, nor more than was necessary to maintain her in the station of life she had been reared and educated in. Appellees expressed a different opinion in their testimony, and the lower court agreed with them, at least, to the extent of the note and its interest which she was claiming.

Section 1907, Ky. St. (Russell's St. § 2100), is as follows: "Every gift, conveyance, assignment, transfer or charge made by a debtor, of or upon any of his estate, without valuable consideration therefor, shall be void as to all his then existing liabilities, but shall not, on that account alone, be void as to creditors whose debts or demands are thereafter contracted, nor as to purchasers with notice of the voluntary alienation or charge; and though it be adjudged to be void as to prior creditors, it shall not therefore be deemed to be void as to such subsequent creditors or purchasers." From the testimony it is probable that Walker did not make the advancements to his daughters with the actual intention to defraud his creditors, and they were doubtless innocent of any such intention. However, under the facts as they appear in this case, the law implies such an intention. It was a fraud upon his creditors for Walker, considering the financial condition he was in, to set aside the greater portion of his estate and his income to his daughters, and thereby diminish his own income and his ability to meet his just obligations. Appellant also contends that the section of the statute quoted applies to real estate alone. We cannot agree to this, as the word "estate" includes personal as well as real property. The rule has been well stated by this court in the case of Duhme & Co. v. Young, etc., 66 Ky. 343, where it is said: "The doctrine upon the subject, as settled by this court, and we see no reason for a departure from it, is: If the grantor, at the time of making the settlement, is insolvent or in doubtful circumstances, the conveyance would be within the statute of frauds and void; 'but, if he be not indebted to such an extent as that the conveyance will deprive the creditors of an ample fund for the payment of their debts, a good consideration will be sufficient to support the deed, although voluntary, for it is free from the imputation of fraud.'" See, also, the case of Trimble v. Ratliff, 48 Ky. 515. In that case the court said: "If, on the other hand, the conveyance had been made wholly in consideration of love and affection, then, whether the grantor was to derive, or should actually derive, any benefit from it or not, and although the grantee should receive the issues for his own use, still, if the grantor were indebted, or even under pending contingent liabilities at the time, the conveyance, whatever might be the actual intention of the parties as dependent upon proof, would be deemed fraudulent in law, and void as to his creditors, actual or contingent, unless it left ample means for their satisfaction, without presenting any material obstruction or inconvenience which would not otherwise have existed. * * *

The indebted father has, however, no right to give away his property to the detriment of his creditors, though it be done for the apparent purpose of equalizing one or more of his children with the others who have been fairly advanced. If he do so, the gift is deemed fraudulent and void as to creditors, without any inquiry as to the actual intent, either of donor or donee. The claim even of a child upon his father, except for suitable present education and support while dependent on him, cannot come in competition with that of the father's creditors. To prefer his children to the injury of his creditors is therefore a fraud upon the creditors; and the donees, being mere volunteers, cannot rely upon their own ignorance or innocence in the reception of the gift, but are absolutely implicated in the fraud of the donor, whether it be intentional or implied by law, from the nature and consequences of his act." See, also, the cases of Rucker v. Abell, 8 B. Mon. 566, 48 Am. Dec. 406, Enders v. Williams, 1 Metc. 351, and Lowry v. Fisher, etc., 2 Bush, 70, 92 Am. Dec. 475.

Appellant contends that the demurrer to the assignees' pleadings setting up the rents received by her as an offset to her claim should have been sustained, for the reason that appellees' pleading did not charge that the advancements and gifts made by Walker to his daughter were voluntary and without consideration. It was alleged that the rents and other property were given by J. Stone Walker to his children "free of charge as advancements." The meaning of the phrase "free of charge" and of the word "advancements" is clear and free from doubt. They mean that the property was given to the daughter, that there was no charge therefor, and no valuable consideration other than love and affection.

Appellees also contend that Walker made these advancements with the intention of liquidating any indebtedness that existed between him and appellant. Whether this was his actual intention or not, the law, under the facts of this case, would make it so.

Even if appellees' pleadings had been defective, they were cured by the subsequent pleadings of appellant, which made certain that which it is contended was uncertain.

For these reasons, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

WALKLATE v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. April 22, 1909.)

1. LARCENY (§ 70*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS.

Though an indictment charged that accused "with force and arms" stole a horse, those words should have been omitted from the instructions, for, neither force nor arms being made an element of the offense, their use in the indictment was unnecessary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Cent. Dig. § 182; Dec. Dig. § 70.*]

2. LARCENY (§ 3*)—FACTS CONSTITUTING LARCENY—"HORSE STEALING."

Obtaining possession of a horse under the fraudulent pretense of hiring it, without intending to return it, and with the felonious intent to convert the horse and deprive the owner permanently of it, is "horse stealing," without a subsequent sale or other wrongful disposition of the horse by accused; but if he hired the horse in good faith, with the intention of returning it, and was prevented from doing so by the owner's act in having him arrested, he is not guilty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Larceny, Cent. Dig. §§ 8-10; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1173*)—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR—FAILURE TO INSTRUCT.

On a trial for horse stealing, a failure to instruct on the phase of the case that if accused hired the horse, in good faith, with the intention of returning it, and was prevented from doing so by the owner's act in having him arrested, was prejudicially erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3165; Dec. Dig. § 1173.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County, Criminal Branch.

"Not to be officially reported."

Thomas Walklate, alias Stewart, was convicted of horse stealing, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Herman Morris, for appellant. Jas. Breathitt, Atty. Gen., and Tom. B. McGregor, for the Commonwealth.

SETTLE, C. J. This appeal presents for review the judgment and certain rulings of the Jefferson circuit court, criminal division, in a prosecution instituted by indictment against appellant for horse stealing, which resulted in a verdict from the jury finding him guilty and fixing his punishment at confinement in the penitentiary for two years.

According to the evidence appellant hired of Fowler, a liveryman, in the city of Louisville, a horse and buggy, under the pretense that it was his purpose to drive to the village of Worthington, in Jefferson county, to visit relatives, and that he would return the horse and buggy to the owner that evening or the following morning. After getting possession of the horse and buggy, he did not go to Worthington, but drove to New Albany, Ind., and there attempted to sell both horse and buggy, claiming that they belonged to him; but before he could effect a sale he was arrested under the charge of horse stealing, and the stolen property returned to the owner. The foregoing facts were established by the testimony of several witnesses and only contradicted in part by the testimony of appellant alone. Nevertheless, the latter insists that he was improperly convicted, and it is our duty to determine whether there is any legal ground for this complaint.

Of the several errors assigned, only one appears to us to be worthy of consideration, and that is as to the alleged failure of the trial court to properly instruct the jury. The instructions given were proper, except that the words "with force and arms" contained in instruction No. 1 should have been omitted. The instruction is in other respects properly predicated upon the facts furnished by the evidence and which the jury found sufficient to authorize appellant's conviction. It is true the indictment under which appellant was convicted charged that he "with force and arms unlawfully and feloniously did take, steal, and lead away one horse, the personal property of Wm. Fowler, with the felonious and fraudulent intent then and there to convert same to his own use, * * *"; but neither force nor arms is made an ingredient of the crime of horse stealing by the statute. Therefore their use in the indictment was unnecessary, and the words themselves only surplusage.

It is, however, patent that the court in instructing the jury did not give them all the law of the case. The larceny of the horse and buggy was not committed in the usual way, but by a method somewhat peculiar, viz., under the pretense of a hiring of them. So, as held in Smith v. Commonwealth, 112 S. W. 615, if appellant got possession of the horse under the false and fraudulent pretense of hiring him, without intending to return the animal to the owner, and with the felonious intent to convert him to his own use and deprive the owner permanently of him, this would constitute horse stealing in the meaning of the statute; and if the possession of the horse was obtained by appellant as we have indicated, the mere removal of the animal by him from the owner's custody amounted to a conversion of the horse to his (appellant's) own use, without proof of a subsequent sale or other wrongful disposition of him by appellant. On the other hand, if appellant hired the horse in good faith and with the intention of returning him, but was prevented from doing so by the act of the owner or others in having him arrested, he was not guilty of the crime charged. Smith v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 112 S. W. 615; Roberson's Crim. Law, §§ 417, 418; Alexander v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 20 S. W. 254; Martin v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 106 S. W. 863. The failure of the trial court to give an instruction embodying the law on the aspect of the case last above indicated was necessarily very prejudicial to appellant, and will compel a reversal of the judgment appealed from. The court upon a retrial should, in addition to the instructions used on the former trial, give the following: "If the jury believe from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant obtained possession of Fowler's horse under the false and fraudulent pretense, if any or either, of hiring him to drive to Worthington, but without intending to return him, and with the felonious intent to convert him to his own use and permanently deprive the owner thereof, they should find him guilty as charged in the indictment and fix his punishment as directed by instruction No. 1; but, on the other hand, if the jury believe from the evidence that the defendant hired the horse in good faith and with the intention of returning him to the owner, but was prevented from doing so by his (appellant's) arrest, they should find him not guilty."

For the reasons indicated the judgment is reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial consistent with the opinion.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. April 21, 1909.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 306*)—INJURY TO PASSENGERS—COMPANY'S LIABILITY—LESSORS.

Where defendant leased the right to operate log trains over a portion of its railroad to a lumber company, defendant was liable for injuries to a passenger resulting from a collision between its passenger train and a log train, owing to the negligence of the servants of the lumber company in operating the log train.

Where a passenger, seeing a collision was imminent, jumped from the moving train and was injured, she could recover, though she might not have been hurt had she remained in the coach, being entitled to act on a natural impulse which an ordinarily prudent person situated and conditioned as she was would reasonably have been expected to do.

point in West Virginia through a section of Pike county, Ky., and into the state of Virginia. A lumber company operates a branch road connecting with appellant's road in Pike county, and uses in that connection a part of appellant's main track. Appellee was a passenger on one of appellant's trains. A log train of the lumber company came upon the appellant's track at a time when appellant's train was due to pass, and had the right of way over the track. A collision resulted. In the shock and excitement, appellee, believing she was in peril of being killed or seriously hurt by staying in the coach in which she was riding, jumped off the moving train, and was injured. This suit was brought by her to recover damages for the injury, charging the operatives of appellant's road with negligence in failing to provide and keep a safe track, and in failing to learn of the presence of the other train. The verdict of the jury was for appellee.

Appellant asks that its liability be confined to its care of its own train, and that, as those operating the log train were clearly in fault in causing the collision, appellant ought not to be held liable therefor. The log road was using appellant's road as a lessee or licensee. Appellant, as charter owner and operator of the road, could not dispense with its public duty to maintain a safe, clear track for the passage of its passenger trains. The presence of the other train at the time when the collision occurred was a preventable obstruction on the track, and the allowance of which by appellant was negligence as to the latter's passengers injured because of the fact. Appellant could not abdicate its duty to the public by suffering the management or control of its tracks to pass out of its hands so as to relieve itself from liability if injury resulted to its passengers because of its cession of the use of its tracks to another company. Appellee may not have been hurt had she remained in the coach. But, being placed suddenly in a position of imminent peril, she had the right to act upon a natural impulse, and to seek safety in that course which an ordinarily prudent person situated and conditioned as she was would reasonably have been expected to do. She was not required to exercise a correct judgment in the matter. She had not the time for reflection, nor was her mind enough composed to admit of it. The negligence of her carrier had put her in such apparent jeopardy as to produce a panic in her mind, and the law allows her without being held accountable for the act as negligent to act upon the impulse created by that condition. So. Cov. & Cinc. St. Ry. Co. v. Ware, 84 Ky. 269, 1 S. W. 493. The instruction of the court fairly embodied the foregoing principles. The verdict of the jury is sustained by the evidence.

Judgment affirmed.

1. CARRIERS (§ 306*) — INJURIES TO PASSENGERS—ACCIDENTS TO TRAINS—COLLISIONS—LIABILITY OF LESSOR.

2. DAMAGES (§ 130*)—EXCESSIVENESS—INJURIES.

Where plaintiff suffered a miscarriage as the result of an injury due to defendant's actionable negligence, a verdict awarding her $500 was not excessive, though her further claim that she had also sustained a displacement of the womb was not sustained by the evidence.

The additional questions presented in this case are: Did appellee receive the injuries for which she sues as the result of that collision, and did the trial court correctly submit to the jury elements of her injury for which the law allows a recovery?

Appellee claims that she was enceinte, being about four months advanced with child; that in the collision she was thrown upon her side and bruised and stunned, so that she was made sick and caused to abort. The evidence on her behalf was that in the collision she was thrown violently upon her side, causing her great pain, following the temporary stunning; that within a half hour afterward her menstruation reappeared, and for the first time since she had conceived, and that that evening she had violent pains in her abdomen, which she describes as "bearing down pains"; that these pains continued intermittently for some days, and she consulted a midwife with reference to them. Acting upon her advice, she remained as quiet as she could, hoping that the trouble was merely threatened and would pass; but it continued for a week or so, becoming worse, when she was delivered of a child stillborn. She claims, also, that she continued to suffer from the effects of the injury by reason of a displacement of her womb, and had not finally recovered from the effects at the time of the trial. It may be that the latter claim was not supported by the evidence, and was, in fact, shown not to be true. But what view the jury took of that particular feature of the case we cannot tell, nor does it appear to be material now, as there was clearly enough in the case to sustain the very modest verdict returned in appellee's behalf—$500.

The trial court, in instructing the jury, after defining care and negligence, gave this as the law of the case: "If the jury should believe and find from the evidence that, while the plaintiff was a passenger upon defendant's train, the defendant company, by its agents or servants in control of said train, knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have known, that the log train of the Hurricane Lumber Company was upon its tracks, and ran its passenger train into and collided with said log train, and that by reason of said collision the plaintiff sustained any injury causing plaintiff to miscarry or give premature birth to her child, or caused plaintiff womb trouble, they will find for the plaintiff such sum in damages as they may believe from the evidence she has sustained, so the sum so found, if anything, does not exceed $10,000, and, if the jury should not so believe and find, they will find for the defendant. If the jury should find for the plaintiff, they will only take into consideration in estimating the damages the mental and physical suffering, if any, and the permanent reduction in plaintiff's power to earn money, if any, caused by said injuries." Appellant insists that "there is little doubt that the jury awarded this verdict against appellant, not because of believing her health was to any extent impaired by reason of this miscarriage, but for the loss of the child." Tunncliffe v. Bay Cities Consolidated R. R. Co., 102 Mich. 624, 61 N. W. 11, 32 L. R. A. 142, and Hawkins v. Front Street Cable R. Co., 3 Wash. 592, 28 Pac. 1021, 16 L. R. A. 808, 28 Am. St. Rep. 72, are cited as holding that a recovery by the mother against one negligently causing the death of the child in her womb and its premature birth is not allowed. The question decided in the first-named case was that the loss of the society and prospective earnings of the child is not a proper element of damages in an action by a married woman for injuries which resulted in a miscarriage. The trial court in that case had charged the jury that, "if the plaintiff had lost a child by reason of the liability of the defendant in this case, you may give damages for it. The society, enjoyment, and prospective services of the child is a recognized element in that regard, and you may give what it is reasonably worth." In commenting upon that charge the Supreme Court of Michigan wrote: "This charge was clearly erroneous. There was, of course, no proof in the case as to the prospective earnings of the child, even if the mother would be the proper person to recover for such a loss. Nor would the loss of the child's society be a proper element of damages. While the jury is allowed to consider the case with all its facts, and to take into account, for the purpose of compensation, not only the physical pain, but also mental suffering, in determining the award of damages, and while of necessity this involves to some extent the consideration of the nature of the injury, and cannot exclude from the consideration of the jury the fact that the physical and mental suffering of the mother by reason of such an injury would be more intense than in the case of the ordinary fracture of a limb, yet beyond this it would not be competent for the jury to go, and to attempt to compensate for sorrow and grieving of the mother." That court did allow a recovery for the injury done the plaintiff, and its consequences in causing her to abort her child, including the physical and mental suffering she endured in the travail which was the result of the injury. What was denied was that element of mental distress which is characterized as sentimental, and which followed after, or may have followed after, the physical pain caused by the injury, had subsided. This is shown by the quotation by the court with approval of this excerpt from the opinion in Bovee v. Danville, 53 Vt. 183: "If the violence done her person results in the miscarriage, the miscarriage was the legitimate result of such negligence. Any physical or mental suffering attending the miscarriage is a part of it, and a proper subject for compensation. But the rule goes no further. Any injured feelings following the miscarriage, not part of the pain naturally attending it, are too remote to be considered an element of damage. If the plaintiff lamented the loss of her offspring, such grief involves too much an element of sentiment to be left to the conjecture and caprice of a jury. If, like Rachel, she wept for her children, and would not be comforted, a question of continuing damages is presented, too delicate to be weighed by any scales the law has yet invented." In the case at bar the instruction of the trial court did not allow a recovery for any sentimental suffering not involved in, and attendant upon, the physical pain endured by the plaintiff and accompanying the injury, and the miscarriage caused by it. While it may be true that no scales have yet been invented by the law for weighing purely sentimental grief, it is also true that none are known to the law which separates mental suffering caused by physical injury into its various elements and apportioned some as actionable and others as nonactionable. Distress of mind caused by and accompanying a physical injury is an element of damage which the law compensates. It is no more true that all minds do not suffer alike than that all bodies are not equally susceptible to pain. While physiologically all pain may be said to be mental as the law uses the term, it is recognized that pain is physical when a nerve is impinged. But there is always some mental pain. The latter grows out of the former, is produced by it, and is the former extended as a physiological consequence. It would be as impossible in speculation as in fact to say how much of the mental suffering was the co-operation of the nerves of the brain with those of the body, and how much was psychological. Hence the law attempts no separation, but allows a recovery for all the suffering, both bodily and mental, which is the direct result of and accompanies a physical injury. If the injury inflicted is continuing or develops in stages, as from a fracture to septicæmia, and thence amputation, it is deemed one injury, and all pain caused by and accompanying it throughout its several stages is an element of the damages which may be recovered. So if a bodily injury is inflicted upon a pregnant woman, which directly or in natural consequence results in a miscarriage, the latter event is deemed a part of the original injury.

The other case cited and relied upon by appellant (Hawkins v. Front St. Cable Co.) goes further than we understand the authorities to justify, and further than we are willing to follow. It was there held that proof that an unborn child died and was prematurely delivered because of negligent injuries to its mother is not sufficient to establish her right to recover substantial damages for the injury. The court held that if the plaintiff showed "impairment of health and suffering growing out of the death and premature birth of her child, which would not have attended its birth at the usual time, either alive or dead, and also that the child's death is attributable to a negligent injury which she received," she could recover for her suffering and impaired health. "But," the court added, "she must show the injury by appropriate evidence, and the mere proof that the child died, and was prematurely delivered, as a result of the accident, would not be sufficient to presume substantial damage therefrom." The reasoning of the Washington Supreme Court is that the pregnant woman must in time have delivered the child, and that as the pain of its birth was inevitable that it was prematurely brought about could not alone be actionable; that, in order to allow the woman to recover for the miscarriage caused her, she must have suffered pain, or ill health, which would not have followed at the usual time of the birth of the child dead or alive. Whether the pain of childbirth is greater in the one instance than in the other is not shown. Whether the mother would have suffered more pain at a subsequent time, or whether her health would then have been impaired, we fail to see how it could have been shown. But it is our opinion of the law that the woman has the right to bear her child in nature's way and time. When by negligent violence to her person she is caused to give it premature birth, whether it be dead or alive, or whether the pain attending its birth be greater or less than at the ordinary season, she is damaged. She is made to suffer physically and mentally at a time when she otherwise would not have to suffer. The great function of her sex has been interfered with. We all know that nature penalizes heavily infractions of its laws on this score. Such an event cannot be unimportant to the woman either as it affects her body or her mental equilibrium. If one enters my house tortiously and disturbs my peace, the law gives compensation. If by noises, odors, or unsightly objects he tortiously interferes with my free enjoyment of my premises, he is liable to me. If he negligently causes my cow to abort her calf, he is liable for the injury to the cow and the loss of the calf. 1 Thompson on Negligence, § 156. If, then, he negligently injures the body of a woman, disturbing and deranging nature's functions so that the fetus of her child is destroyed, and she caused to abort it, why may not she have legal complaint against the wrongdoer for her bodily suffering, and her mental suffering accompanying and growing out of it? If in the collision she had had a tooth knocked out, there would be no doubt of her right of action, although had she lived she would have lost the tooth in every probability; and maybe have suffered as much or more pain from it and in having it pulled than she experienced in having it knocked out by the defendant's negligence.

We hold that a negligent act, inflicting bodily injury upon the plaintiff, a woman enceinte, whereby her child dies and is caused to be born prematurely, gives the woman the right of action against the wrongdoer for her injury, including the mental and physical suffering endured as a natural and proximate result of the injury to her person. That is as far as the instructions in this case allowed the jury to go, and is the only feature of that question presented for our review. There was evidence to take the case to the jury and to support its finding.

RISSBERGER v. CITY OF LOUISVILLE.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. April 22, 1909.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 978*)—TAXES—ENFORCEMENT—LIMITATION.

Where a city's right to enforce its lien on land for taxes was barred under Ky. St. § 2515 (Russell's St. § 224) because not brought in five years, a mortgagee of the land could rely on the statutory bar and defeat an action by the city.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 978*) — ENFORCEMENT OF TAXES—STATUTES—"SALE"—"ALIENATION."

A mortgage is not a "sale" or "alienation," within Ky. St. § 4021 (Russell's St. § 5913), providing that the lien on property for taxes shall not be defeated by sale or alienation, unless made more than five years before the suit to enforce the lien; and a mortgagee, acquiring a mortgage more than five years before a suit by a city to enforce a tax lien on the mortgaged property, is not within the statute.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County, Chancery Branch, First Division.

"Not to be officially reported."

Consolidated actions by Phillip Rissberger and by the City of Louisville to enforce liens on real estate of which Eli H. Brown, Sr., had a life estate. From a judgment in favor of the City of Louisville, Phillip Rissberger appeals. Affirmed.

R. T. Colston, for appellant. Jos. S. Lawton, for appellee.

BARKER, J. This is the second appearance of this case in this court. The opinion upon the former appeal is to be found in 120 Ky. 142, 85 S. W. 731. The facts out of which the litigation grew are so fully stated in the first opinion that it is only necessary now to refer to it. The judgment was reversed because the chancellor allowed a lien to the city on the proceeds of the sale of the fee-simple title of the lot involved in the litigation; we holding that the life estate of Eli H. Brown, Sr., was bound for the taxes, and that the city was limited to the value of his life estate for payment of the taxes due it. Upon the return of the case the appellant, Phillip Rissberger, offered to file an amended petition pleading the statute of limitations as against the claim of the city. The motion to file the amendment was overruled by the chancellor, and the merit of this ruling is the only question arising on this appeal.

Rissberger and the city of Louisville both had liens on the same property. The city had brought suit against the owners of the property, without making Rissberger a party defendant, or in any way noticing his claim. Rissberger had brought suit against the owners of the same property without making the city a party, or in any way noticing its lien. Subsequently the chancellor consolidated the cases. The correctness of the ruling of the chancellor in refusing to allow Rissberger to plead the statute of limitations depends upon the question as to whether or not the plea would be valid if made. Section 2515 of the Kentucky Statutes (Russell's St. § 224), bars the city's claim to enforce its lien for taxes for which it had a right of action more than five years next before the institution of its suit, and undoubtedly, under this section, if the city's claim had been due for more than five years before the action was instituted, Rissberger could rely upon the statute in bar of the right of the city to enforce its lien as against him; but the city instituted its action for the taxes against the owners of the property within five years next after its cause of action accrued, and therefore its right to enforce its lien under section 2515 cannot avail Rissberger. This, as we understand it, he practically admits, and relies upon section 4021 of the Kentucky Statutes (Russell's St. § 5913), instead of 2515. The former section is as follows: "The commonwealth, and each county, incorporated city, town or taxing district, shall have a lien on the property assessed for the taxes due them respectively, which shall not be defeated by gift, devise, sale or alienation, or any means whatever, unless the gift, devise, sale or alienation shall have been made for more than five years before the institution of proceedings to enforce the lien, and nothing shall be exempt from levy and sale for taxes and cost incident to the sale. When any lands or improvements shall not be assessed in any one year, it may be assessed retrospectively, in the manner provided by law, for that year, at any time not later than five years thereafter; but the lien thereby accruing shall not prejudice the rights of purchasers acquired in the meantime."

Rissberger insists that under this statute the city is barred from claiming as against him, because, he says, the mortgage to him was an alienation of the property within the meaning of the foregoing statute, and that this alienation took place more than five years next before the institution of the city's action. If the mortgage was a sale or an alienation, undoubtedly he would be correct in his conclusion; but a mortgage is neither a sale nor an alienation of the property, the title remains in the mortgagor, and the mortgagee only has a lien which he can enforce as any other lien. At common law a mortgage was a sale of the property, with the right of redemption within a named time, and if the redemption did not take place within the time fixed in the instrument the mortgagor lost his property absolutely. Equity relieved the hardship of this rule by allowing the mortgagor to redeem after the time named in the instrument; and therefore it was necessary, in order for the mortgagee to enforce his rights under the deed, for him to foreclose in chancery. But, now, as said before, the mortgagee only has a lien for his debt, and a deed of mortgage has long since ceased to be a conveyance of title. Douglass v. Cline, 12 Bush, 608; Woolley v. Holt, 14 Bush, 788; Board of Council v. F. T. & S. V. Co., 111 Ky. 676, 64 S. W. 470; Mercantile Trust Co. v. Southern Park Residence Co., 94 Ky. 276, 22 S. W. 314; Clore v. Lambert, 78 Ky. 228; Parks v. Parks, 9 Ky. Law Rep. 347; Guill's Adm'rs v. Corinth Deposit Bank (Ky.) 68 S. W. 870. It follows that the plea of the statute of limitations, contained in section 4021, would not have availed appellant, even if the chancellor had allowed his pleading to be filed, and therefore his motion to file it was correctly overruled.

Judgment affirmed.

TOWN OF BEAVER DAM v. STEVENS.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. April 20, 1909.)

COURTS (§ 223*) — DECISIONS REVIEWABLE — AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY.

The Court of Appeals is without jurisdiction of an appeal in an action by a town marshal to recover the alleged salary of his office, where the amount involved is but $126, though an affirmance of the decision in the lower court for the marshal would entitle him to such salary for his full term of office, which is more than the jurisdictional amount.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Dec. Dig. § 223.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Ohio County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Action by J. P. Stevens against the Town of Beaver Dam. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Appeal dismissed.

Glenn & Simmerman, for appellant. J. P. Sandefur and Ben D. Ringo, for appellee.

CARROLL, J. The appellee, who in 1908 and for some years prior thereto was the town marshal of Beaver Dam, brought this suit against the town to recover the salary of $42 per month alleged to be due for the months of January, February, and March, 1908, claiming that his salary was fixed by the board of trustees before he was elected to the office. The trustees, insisting that his salary had never been fixed, proceeded in January, 1908, to enact an ordinance allowing him the fees of the office, with no salary.

The issue of fact in the case was whether or not an ordinance had been adopted, previous to the election of Stevens, fixing his salary at $42 per month. If, as asserted by Stevens, this ordinance was enacted, the trustees had no power to change or reduce the salary during his term of office. On the other hand, if the salary was not fixed at the time or before he was elected to office, the board had the right to fix it after his election in any sum they deemed proper. It is not, however, necessary to pursue further the inquiry concerning this issue of fact raised by the pleadings and evidence, because in our opinion we have no jurisdiction of the subject-matter in controversy. The action was brought to recover $126, and the judgment appealed from awarded this sum to Stevens, so that the matter in controversy is only $126.

It is argued, however, by counsel for appellant, that, although there is only involved in this particular suit $126, yet the final determination of it fixes the salary that the appellee will be entitled to during his term of office. In other words, the argument is that, as the circuit court held that the salary of Stevens was fixed at $42 a month before he was elected to office, if this ruling stands he will be entitled to recover from the town this sum for each month during his term that he discharges the duties of his office; and, as he has 21 months to serve after March, 1908, there is really involved in the controversy the amount he shall receive per month for this time. It may be true, as argued by counsel, that if the board of trustees fails to pay Stevens his salary for the months succeeding March, 1908, he will again sue them, and the circuit judge may again decide the case as he did this one, and hold the town liable for the salary of appellee at the rate of $42 per month. But we are unable to perceive how this circumstance can be construed to give this court jurisdiction of the pending appeal. The amount sought to be recovered, and for which the judgment was rendered, is the amount that determines the jurisdiction of this court. What the result of future trials may be, or what effect the decision of the lower court in this case may have on other cases, cannot, in our opinion, invest us with jurisdiction of an appeal in which the amount in controversy is less than the sum necessary to give this court jurisdiction.

Wherefore the motion to dismiss the appeal must be sustained, and it is so ordered.

RILEY v. ROACH et al.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. April 27, 1909.)

ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 51*)—CONTINUITY—LEGAL PROCEEDINGS.

The defense of adverse possession is not made out, where the evidence shows that defendant's possession was temporarily interrupted within the statutory period by the execution of a writ of possession against them and the plaintiffs placed in possession, though defendants later regained and continued to hold possession.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Mercer County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Action to recover land by M. L. Roach and others against William Riley. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

L. W. McKee and E. H. Gaither, for appellant. B. F. Roach and J. T. Wilson, for appellees.

NUNN, J. It appears that W. H. Roach and Phillip Kennedy held a claim against one Peter Jordan for about $90, for the recovery of which they instituted suit against him in the year 1871. They obtained judgment in the same year, and caused an execution to be issued thereon, which was levied by the sheriff upon the tract of land that Jordan resided upon. After allotting Jordan a homestead, there were left 24 acres of land, which were sold under the execution at the price of $75. In 1872 another execution was issued to collect that part of the judgment unpaid, and levied upon the equity of redemption of Jordan, which was sold for $37, the balance of the judgment, and Roach and Kennedy became the purchasers. In 1875 the sheriff made and executed to them a deed for the 24 acres of land. In 1876 they instituted suit against Jordan in ejectment to recover the land from him, in which action judgment was rendered in their favor by default, and a writ of possession was awarded them. Peter Jordan died in 1886, and an action was brought by his administrator to settle his estate. The action of Roach and Kennedy having remained on the docket to that time, they consolidated it with the action of the administrator. In 1889 a motion was made to revive the action of Roach and Kennedy against the real representatives of Jordan; but the court overruled the motion, deciding that it was unnecessary. In 1890 the writ of possession awarded them was placed in the hands of the sheriff, who executed it and made return, in substance, as follows: Executed by taking possession of the land described and placing Phillip Kennedy in possession thereof, as agent for the plaintiffs.

The representatives of Peter Jordan having regained possession, this action was brought by appellees, the heirs of Roach and Kennedy, to recover the land. It was not shown how Peter Jordan became the owner of this 24 acres of land, unless he obtained title by the actual adverse possession of it. The proof shows that Ann Jordan held the legal title to her death, but the date of her death does not appear positively. The proof tends strongly to show that she died more than 15 years before the death of Peter Jordan, and that he held the actual adverse possession of the land from that date to his death. The tract of land to which Peter Jordan had a paper title was sold by an order of court in the suit referred to, and his widow became the purchaser at the sale, but afterwards transferred her bid to one of her sons, and he received the title from the commissioner of the court. In 1892 Jordan conveyed the land, together with the 24 acres, to one D. L. Caldwell, who took possession of it, and owned it until the year 1905, when he sold and conveyed it to appellant. Both parties to the action claim title by actual adverse possession for more than 15 years.

There can be no question, under the proof, that Peter Jordan had the actual adverse possession of the land in dispute to the time of his death for a longer period than 15 years, or for a sufficient length of time for it to ripen into a good title in him. This question was submitted to the jury, and it found for appellees. The testimony showed that appellant and his vendors also held the land and were in the actual adverse possession thereof for over 15 years next before the institution of this action, but for the fact of the break in his title by the execution of the writ of possession by ousting those in the possession and placing it in possession of Kennedy. This occurred within 15 years before the institution of this action. Under the facts stated, and with reference to which there is but little dispute, we are of the opinion that appellees obtained a good title to the 24 acres of land, and their right thereto has not been lost by reason of the statutes of limitations interposed by appellants.

For these reasons, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Harlan County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Action by W. J. Loughridge and others against Leonard Ball and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

J. G. & J. S. Forester, for appellants. W. F. Hall and Greene, Van Winkle & Schoolfield, for appellees.

HOBSON, J. The facts in this controversy were stated in the opinion on the former appeal. See Ball v. Loughridge, 100 S. W. 275. On the return of the case to the circuit court it was tried again. The jury found a verdict for the defendants, and the court entered judgment on the verdict in their favor for the 100 acres of land in controversy. The plaintiffs appeal.

The opinion delivered on the former appeal is the law of the case, and only those matters need be noticed which were not determined on the former appeal. The plaintiffs showed title to one-half of the patent to Hamblin and Ledford for 6,500 acres independently of the power of attorney from Boyd Dickinson to John Dickinson; and the court submitted to the jury the question whether Boyd Dickinson had executed to John Dickinson the power of attorney in question. It is insisted for the appellants that he should have instructed the jury that, under the evidence, Boyd Dickinson had, in fact, executed the power of attorney. The plaintiffs showed that John Dickinson had made a number of deeds under this power of attorney; that Boyd Dickinson had not claimed any of the land so conveyed; that he had himself conveyed away other lands by deeds made in the county. They also introduced a record of a county court in Virginia, showing that Boyd Dickinson in 1858 revoked the power of attorney to John Dickinson. Waiving the question whether the Virginia record of the revocation of the power of attorney was so certified as to be admissible in Kentucky, we are of opinion that the facts shown were sufficient to raise a presumption of fact, after the lapse of 50 years, that Boyd Dickinson had executed the power of attorney; but it was a presumption of fact and not of law, and was properly submitted to the jury. It is true that William Turner, under his deed, had taken possession of the land. The fact that he had remained in possession a long time undisturbed, when taken in connection with the other facts, made out a case from which the jury might well have found that the power of attorney was executed. But, after all, there was no presumption of law in favor of its execution that would warrant the circuit judge in taking the question away from the jury. Aside from this, the jury found for the defendants as to all the land, which shows that their finding was not based upon the idea that the power of attorney had not been delivered; for the nondelivery of the power of attorney would only have defeated the action as to one-half of the land.

It is also insisted for appellants that both parties claim under William Turner, Sr., and that, as they both claim under William Turner, Sr., the court should have instructed the jury that it was unnecessary for the plaintiffs to show title further back than William Turner, Sr. The deeds that were made between William Turner, Sr., and William Turner, Jr., were made to settle a litigation. In making that settlement William Turner, Jr., secured peace. But, by accepting the deed from William Turner, Sr., he did not waive such title as he already had to the land on his side of the agreed line, and, if sued for it, he might still stand on that title. The defendants, as purchasers from him, had all his rights, and were not estopped to say that William Turner, Sr., did not own the land in controversy. William Turner, Jr., made a deed for the land in controversy to Chad B. Turner. Chad B. Turner was a son of William Turner, Sr. The deed was dated in the year 1874, and was acknowledged ed then, but was recorded in 1887. William Turner, Sr., died about the year 1880, and, after his death, the land embraced in the Hamblin and Ledford patent was sold in a suit to settle his estate; Chad B. Turner, as one of his heirs, being a party to the action. The land was bought by the plaintiffs, and was conveyed to them by a commissioner's deed. It is insisted that, as Chad B. Turner was a party to the action, all title which he had to the land passed to the purchasers, whether he derived the title from his father, William Turner, Sr., or from William Turner, Jr. The court so instructed the jury.

It is insisted for appellees that there was no evidence when the deed from William Turner, Jr., to Chad B. Turner was delivered, and that there was no proof of any acts on the part of either from which a delivery might be presumed previous to the time that the deed was recorded in 1887. The deed was made in consideration of love and affection. In the caption Chad B. Turner, and his wife, Mary Jane Turner, are named as the parties of the second part; but in the granting clause only Chad B. Turner is named, and there is no habendum. It would seem that the wife, Mary Jane Turner, was the daughter of William Turner, Jr. She was for this reason perhaps named in the caption. However, as her name occurs only in the caption, this must be held a conveyance to Chad B. Turner alone. 13 Cyc. 623.

It is insisted that it is not uncommon in cases of this sort for the father or father-in-law to keep possession of a deed which he makes long after it is signed and acknowledged by him. In the absence of any evidence on the subject, it is said the deed may be presumed to have been delivered when it was recorded. Deeds are often drawn long before they are delivered; and, while delivery may be presumed from the record of the deed, it is urged that there is no fact in this case except the mere date of the deed to show that it was delivered before. See 13 Cyc. 565, 567. Estoppels are not favored, and some weight must be given the fact that Chad B. Turner after this sold the land for value and that those claiming under him entered on it and held it so long without question. However, it is unnecessary for us to decide the question, for the circuit court adopted appellants' view of it.

He, in substance, instructed the jury as follows:

(1) If the land was embraced within the bounds of the patent to Hamblin and Ledford and Boyd Dickinson executed the power of attorney to John Dickinson, they should find for the plaintiffs all the land in controversy, unless the defendants and those under whom they claim had the land in actual adverse possession for 15 years continuously before the bringing of the action.

(2) If Boyd Dickinson did not execute the power of attorney they should still find for the plaintiffs as to one-half of the land embraced in the patent unless the defendants had had adverse possession as defined in No. 3.

(3) If the defendants or those under whom they claimed entered on the land, claiming, occupying, and holding it as their own in adverse possession to the extent of well-defined boundaries continuously for 15 years before the suit was brought, the jury should find for them.

(4) The commissioner's deed made on November 30, 1886, passed all interest in or title to the land which Chad B. Turner had.

These were the only instructions given. The defendants' paper title was not submitted to the jury. They were only allowed to find for the defendants if the land was not embraced in the patent, or the defendants had had adverse possession for 15 years. The instructions eliminated all other questions from the case. Under the instructions, the jury were, in effect, told that the defendants had no right to the land except such as they acquired by adverse possession. The 100 acres in controversy is just in the corner of the 6,500-acre patent if run out as claimed by the plaintiffs. If located as run out by another surveyor, the patent would include but a small part of the land in controversy. How the patent should be located would depend upon the variation to be given the courses in the patent, the location of the objects called for, and the marks found on the ground. It was not therefore improper for the circuit court to submit to the jury the question whether the plaintiffs' patent included the land in controversy or a part of it.

On the former appeal it was distinctly held that there was sufficient evidence of adverse possession on the part of the defendants to submit that question to the jury. Although there is proof that William Turner, Sr., had tenants on the 6,500-acre survey, there is nothing to show that he had any such possession within the lap of the land claimed by William Turner, Jr., as to give him title thereto. The question of the propriety of submitting to the jury the defendants' title by adverse possession was conclusively settled on the former appeal, and the evidence is now practically the same as it was then. While the deed from William Turner, Jr., to Chad B. Turner is inartificially drawn, we think its manifest purpose was to convey all the land that William Turner, Jr., owned between the agreed line which he and William Turner, Sr., made, the top of Little Black Mountain, and the ridge west of Gabe's Branch. He could have had no motive for excepting out of the deed a strip of land along the side of the mountain; and, taking all the language of the deed, we think it must mean that he intended to convey to his line on top of the mountain. The defendants and those under whom they claim took possession under their purchase by building a house on the land and making a clearing more than fifteen years before the suit was brought, and were thus in possession of the land embraced in their deed. While the jury might have found a different verdict, we cannot say that their finding is palpably against the evidence. On the whole case we see no error in the record prejudicial to the substantial rights of the appellants.

The plaintiffs asked no instruction defining further adverse possession, and, as the instruction which the court gave is correct as far as it goes, the plaintiffs cannot complain that other instructions were not given.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County, Common Pleas Branch, First Division.

"Not to be officially reported."

Action by Matthew Schmidt against the Southern Railway Company in Kentucky. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. On appellant's motion to continue, and strike out a copy of a transcript of the testimony and exhibits filed by appellee. Overruled.

Edward P. Humphrey, for appellant.
Popham & Webster, for appellee.

HOBSON, J. Section 741 of the Civil Code of Practice provides: "The appellee may file an authenticated copy of the record in the clerk's office of the Court of Appeals with the same effect as if filed by the appellant." The appellee has filed a copy of the record duly certified. It shows that the appellant filed in the circuit court on March 19, 1909, its bill of exceptions and transcript of the evidence, and these papers, properly certified, are copied into the transcript before us. The photographs filed as exhibits should have been filed with the transcript of the evidence when it was filed in the circuit court, and should have been certified by the circuit clerk with the transcript; but as they are here, properly certified by the stenographer, and there is no suggestion that they are not the true exhibits, and the contrary in fact appears from the affidavits filed by appellant on this motion, the mode in which they got here is one of those unsubstantial irregularities which it is the duty of the court to disregard, under section 134 of the Civil Code of Practice, for appellee cannot object to the record he has himself filed. The purpose of the appeal is to reverse the judgment of the circuit court, and appellant cannot complain when appellee furnishes for his use the entire record of the case.

Motion overruled.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Franklin County.

"Not to be officially reported."

Action by E. M. Wallace against M. E. Hughes and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

B. G. Williams, for appellants. G. H. Briggs, for appellee.

O'REAR, J. The council of Frankfort ordered a pavement to be constructed at the cost of the owners of the abutting lots on Logan street. The work was done under a contract between the city and the contractor, made in accordance with the statutes and ordinances. The contract was made in December, 1904. The work was completed in 1905. The city engineer's report showed that the work had been done in accordance with the ordinance and contract, and the city received the work, and ordered apportionment warrants to be made out against each of the abutting owners, which was done. Included in the number was the property of N. B. White. The apportionment warrant issued against his lot was $84.16, and was issued in August, 1905. The contractor sold the warrant to appellee. Thereafter White sold the lot for a full, fair consideration in hand to appellants.

After appellants bought the lot, appellee brought this suit upon the apportionment warrant to enforce the lien given by section 3452, Ky. St. (Russell's St. § 1430), following: "When the common council shall have passed an ordinance requiring said improvements to be made, and when a contract in pursuance to such ordinance shall be executed and ratified as aforesaid, and the common council shall have received the report of the engineer estimating and apportioning the cost of the work, and, by order or resolution, shall have received said work as done in accordance with the contract, then the liability of the owners of the property chargeable with the cost of said work shall be fixed, and there shall be a lien on the property for same." Appellants by their answer admitted the regular passage of the ordinance directing the improvement, and admitted the contract, the execution of the work, and that all steps had been duly taken under the ordinance and statutes up to and including the issue of the apportionment warrant. But the answer sought to controvert the plaintiff's right to recover on the ground that appellants had become the owners of the lot without actual or constructive notice of the existence of the lien. It was asserted that the books of the city did not show that the lien was in existence, or that it had not been discharged, and that the report of the city engineer was not indexed in the city clerk's office, nor were the orders accepting the work and directing the apportionment warrants to be issued indexed, and that appellants, before they bought and paid for the lot, made an examination of all the county records, including the city clerk's office, to learn whether there were liens against the property, and had no knowledge or actual notice of the existence of the lien now sought to be enforced against the lot. It was also pleaded that appellee was guilty of laches in failing for so long—nearly four years—to file his suit, by which his right to maintain the suit was lost. The circuit court sustained a demurrer to the answer, and, appellants failing to plead further, a judgment was entered against them, decreeing the property to be sold to satisfy the lien. From that judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

When the work was ordered done by the ordinance, contracts let and approved as required by the statutes, and the work was done and accepted, the lien attached under the statute. The law requires proceedings of the council to be recorded (section 3274, Ky. St. [Russell's St. § 1291]), and that they shall be properly indexed by the city clerk (section 3248, Ky. St. [Russell's St. § 1254]). But it will be observed that the statute creating the lien in case of street improvements does not make the existence of the lien at all depend upon the recordation of the contract or of any of the steps of the common council of the city leading up to the completed work. In this country the prevalence of the system for recording not only conveyances, but instruments creating liens upon real estate, is so general, and so wisely conceived as to fit our conditions, that it is a natural notion that unless a record is made, and so kept as to afford reasonably available notice to inquiring purchasers that the lien has been created, purchasers in ignorance of the lien are protected against it. The common law did not know registration acts of this character. When they exist, they are matters of statutory creation. In the absence of such statute, the rule of caveat emptor would doubtless apply to intending purchasers. In the statute regulating conveyances in this state it is expressly provided that, unless the statute is complied with, an innocent purchaser without notice of the lien shall not be affected by it. Sections 494, 495, Ky. St. [Russell's St. §§ 2060, 2061]. And in one case it was intimated (Elliott v. Harris, 81 Ky. 471) that a deed not properly indexed, as required by statute, was not "entitled to the legal force or validity of public records for the purposes of notice to all who may be affected by their contents." In that statute the recordation of the instrument for the purpose of constructive notice was required, and it might have been regarded that the indexing of such records was of an importance scarcely secondary to that of the record itself in effectuating the object of the statute. But here the recordation of the proceedings of the council or of the contract are not made necessary at all in order to create the lien in behalf of the contractor. The statute enumerates what shall be necessary to create the lien. The enumeration of particular things excludes the idea of something else not mentioned, as an essential to the completeness of the lien. Whether constructive notice is ever necessary in order to charge the property in the hands of a subsequent vendee is a matter of legislative discretion. It may be said that there is not provision in this statute for constructive or any notice to such purchasers; that they must look to their warranty or prosecute inquiries till they are satisfied and secured against the existence of such liens. As between the contractor, who is not required to make or cause made an indexed or other record of his contract, and who has done the work improving the lot, and the purchasers who saw or could have seen the improvement, was charged with knowledge of the law giving a lien therefor to the contractor, and who might have required the production by his vendor of a receipt from the contractor before paying for the property, it is not within the legal discretion of the courts to postpone the former for the latter upon the ground that the equity of the latter is stronger. The older equity prevails in such cases. An instance of the application of this doctrine in a case much stronger for the purchaser than the one we have here is Comley v. American Standard Asphalt Company (Ky.) 113 S. W. 125. In that case the council had adopted an erroneous basis of apportionment, had apportioned the amount due upon one owner's lot, and he had paid it to the contractor and caused the lien to be released of record. The courts having subsequently decided that the apportionment was wrong, ordered a reapportionment, increasing the amount due upon the particular lot. In the suit against one who had purchased for full value after the release of the lien upon the record by the contractor it was held by this court that the lot was in lien for the full amount of the sum finally and rightly apportioned against it. Upon the other ground, appellants thus state the reason why their plea of laches should have prevailed: "Appellee, having in his pocket an interest-bearing warrant without making any record of it or giving any sort of notice, attempts to make an innocent purchaser of property pay his demand without even bringing an action against the person who owes the money." We have seen that the contractor was not (nor was his assignee) required to have a record made of the lien. A record of the ordinance directing the work was made; so was there the contract on file, and the record of the acceptance of the work. Nor does it appear to be material on this question that appellee did not sue the person originally bound.

Laches is negligence by which another has been led into changing his condition with respect to the property or right in question, so that it would be inequitable to allow the negligent party to be preferred upon his legal right to the one whom his negligence had misled. It falls but little short of estoppel, and is applied upon the same principle. It was the creature of the courts of equity to take the place in equitable actions in those instances where in actions at law the statutes of limitation would have applied as a bar. The statutes of limitation are available as bar in suits in equity in this state the same as at law, and in the case in hand is five years from the accrual of the cause of action. Waggoner v. Board of Councilmen (Ky.) 99 S. W. 918. There does not appear such extraordinary circumstances in the record as warrant the application of the rule stated in 5 Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence, § 20, that if a party, knowing his rights, takes no steps to enforce them until the condition of the other party has in good faith become so changed that he cannot be restored to his former state if the right be then enforced, the former will be postponed to the latter. Appellants could have seen and doubtless saw that the sidewalk had been built. They were aware in law and probably in fact of the power of the city to order such improvements to be made at the cost of the lot, and that they constituted liens upon the lot. They forebare inquiry whether, or at least assurance that, it had been paid for. So that appellants' condition is not due solely to the non-action of appellee in bringing his suit so late. Nor was there such great and unreasonable delay. The apportionment warrant was issued in August, 1905. Appellants bought the lot in January, 1907. No delay subsequent to their purchase could be imputed to appellee as negligence. Less than 18 months had passed from the time suit could have been brought till the property had changed hands, whereas the lien was good for 5 years.

We concur with the circuit court that appellants' answer failed to present a defense. Judgment affirmed.

1. MORTGAGES (§ 27*)—EQUITABLE MORTGAGES—AGREEMENT TO SUPPORT THIRD PERSONS.

A covenant in a deed charging the grantee with the support of a person named as a part of the consideration for the deed creates a lien on the land for such support.

2. MORTGAGES (§ 27*)—EQUITABLE MORTGAGE—AGREEMENT TO SUPPORT THIRD PERSON.

Under a covenant in a deed that, as a part of the consideration therefor, the grantee will furnish support for a person named "in the event that from disease or other cause he should become unable to support himself," the obligation to furnish such support does not exist and become a lien on the premises conveyed until the support is asked for.

4. PARTITION (§ 53*)—DECREE—RECEIVER—ENFORCEMENT OF CHARGE FOR SUPPORT.

Where, in an action for partition, an intervening petition was filed to enforce petitioner's right to support out of the land, the court properly by its decree appointed a receiver to rent the land and to pay out of the rent taxes and other preferred claims, and then, after providing for petitioner's support, to pay the remainder to the other parties interested, with the alternative that the land might be sold and the proceeds divided among the parties in interest after making provision for the support of petitioner.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Fayette County.
"To be officially reported."

Action for partition between Joseph S. Webster and others, remaindermen, wherein George Cadwallader intervened. From the judgment rendered, the remaindermen appealed. Reversed.

R. S. Crawford and Geo. Denny, for appellants. Geo. B. Kinkead, for appellees.

NUNN, J. It appears that Geo. Cadwallader and his wife, Mary, were the owners for several years prior to 1883 of five small tracts of land, all adjoining, amounting to about 130 acres, and were situated about four miles from Lexington, Ky. His wife owned most of the land. He possibly owned one of the tracts in fee and a life estate in one or two of the others. His wife, with his consent, executed a will whereby she devised the whole of the land to Sarah J. Campbell. After the death of his wife, to make the title perfect, he executed a conveyance to Sarah J. Campbell. On July 13, 1883, Sarah J. Campbell conveyed all of this land to Charles A. Finnell and Sarah Elizabeth Finnell, his wife. One consideration named was "love and affection," and the additional ones were as follows: "And upon the valuable consideration moving from the said Sarah J. Campbell unto them and hereinafter set out, promise and agree and do hereby promise and agree to and with her to provide for her and to furnish to her a home for and during her life at the residence now occupied by her, and hereinafter described, and further to provide her with a maidservant, during her life, of such character and qualification as may be suitable for her and agreeable to her, and to supply, furnish and provide said Sarah J. Campbell and said maidservant with suitable, proper and convenient diet, lodging, washing, fuel and other necessities of all sorts, and also to keep and take care of the phaeton and such pony or horse as the party of the first part may at any time have, of which said phaeton and pony or horse she is to have the exclusive use and control. And the said parties of the second part have further promised and agreed, and do hereby promise and agree to and with the said party of the first part to provide and furnish with necessities of life George Cadwallader now of the city of Lexington, and State of Kentucky, in the event that from disease or other cause he should become an invalid and unable to provide for himself, and the said Charles A. Finnell has further agreed and promised, and does hereby agree and promise, to and with the said Sarah J. Campbell, to assume and pay off and discharge the mortgage debt, with the interest due or to become due thereon, now held by one Cassandra Inskeep, on the property hereby conveyed." In the habendum clause of the deed there is the following recital, to wit: "That they (meaning the Finnells) their heirs, executors, administrators and assigns shall and will faithfully and truly perform and execute the covenants and agreements aforesaid." So far as appears from the record, the Finnells executed all the covenants and agreements contained in the deed, except the one referring to appellee Cadwallader. On the 3d day of November, 1887, the Finnells sold and conveyed the lands referred to, to one L. G. Webster for the price of $7,500, $7,000 of which was paid by him at the time. L. G. Webster made a gift of this land to Zinamon Webster and several other parties named in the deed. The gift was to Zinamon for life and to the others in fee. The note for $500, that part of the purchase price remaining unpaid, was executed by Zinamon Webster. He having died, this action was instituted in the month of February, 1904, by the remaindermen then alive and the children and descendants of those who had died before Zinamon Webster for the purpose of having the land sold and the purchase money divided among those interested, as the land could not be divided among them without materially impairing its value. A sale was ordered, and one W. R. Stone became the purchaser, paying therefor about $5,000. Stone filed exceptions to the report of sale, because, among other reasons, George Cadwallader was not made a party to the action, which he stated should have been done because the land was charged with the support of Cadwallader for the rest of his life. The court sustained the exceptions and set the sale aside.

On February 13, 1905, George Cadwallader filed an intervening pleading in the action and asked to be made a party defendant. He alleged that, by reason of his incapacity to labor, he was entitled to support from the land described by virtue of the provisions of the deed from Sarah J. Campbell to the Finnells; that he was 65 years old; that he was uneducated and had no capacity to earn a living by mental efforts; that by reason of his age, and the hardships he had theretofore endured, he was utterly incapacitated to do physical labor, and incapable of providing and furnishing himself with the necessaries of life; that he was without means, and had never received anything in the way of support or otherwise from the parties holding the land. There were several answers filed by the parties in interest controverting the allegations of his pleading. The court referred the matter to a master commissioner to take proof and report with reference to the physical and mental condition of George Cadwallader; to ascertain whether he was incapable of making anything for his support; what means he had, if any; and the amount which would be necessary to support him. The commissioner took the proof and reported that he was not capable of supporting himself; that he was without means; that he was entitled to $450 a year for support, beginning with the 1st of January, 1903. The court confirmed this report; no exceptions having been filed. A short time after this appellants appeared and asked that the order of confirmation be set aside, and they be allowed to file exceptions to the report. The court overruled their motion and rendered judgment in behalf of Geo. Cadwallader in conformity with the commissioner's report, and appointed the Lexington Bank & Trust Company receiver to take charge of the lands and rent them out, pay the taxes and other preferred claims, and pay Geo. Cadwallader $450 a year for his support, beginning with the 1st day of January, 1903. From this judgment, this appeal is prosecuted.

Appellants contend that the provisions in the deed charging a support upon the land for the benefit of Geo. Cadwallader was only a personal obligation upon the part of the Finnells to furnish this support; that it did not create a lien upon the land for that purpose. We are of a different opinion. The provision for the support of Cadwallader was a part of the consideration for the conveyance. The deed represented a deferred payment for the purchase of the land. This court in construing a deed in the case of Keltner v. Keltner, 6 B. Mon. 40, said: "The stipulation for support constitutes but a part of the consideration for the deed." In the case of Gallion's Adm'r v. Moberly, etc., 9 Ky. Law Rep. 149, the same principle was recognized. That the consideration for maintenance and support can be maintained as a lien on land, see, also, the case of Bevins v. Keen (Ky.) 64 S. W. 423. Section 2353, Ky. St., provides: "When any real estate shall be conveyed, and the consideration, or any part thereof, remains unpaid, the grantor shall not have a lien for the same against bona fide creditors or purchasers, unless it is stated in the deed what part of the consideration remains unpaid." The converse of this section is necessarily true; that is, when the consideration is shown in the conveyance not to have been paid, a lien exists for its payment.

We are of the opinion, however, that the court erred in rendering judgment for too great a sum for the support of appellee and in beginning this support back in January, 1903. So far as this record shows, he had lived without creating any debts until he filed his petition in February, 1905, and his allowance should have been from that date. The provision in the deed from Campbell to the Finnells was not for the purpose of making a charge upon the land to reimburse appellee for cost incurred in his support. It was intended to help him live when he became an invalid. Therefore the court ought not to have given him aid out of appellants' lands before he asked it. The proof shows that Cadwallader has a second wife, who is about 56 years old; that they keep and have been keeping a boarding house for many years during the summer months in the town of Latonia, Ky.; that they have been able to live from the proceeds of this. He has not been sick, but has had slight trouble with his kidneys. He is able to move about and do the marketing for his wife. His greatest trouble is weakness from age. Our opinion is that the charge as fixed by the lower court is too great; that $250 a year, beginning at the time he filed his pleading, would be amply sufficient to support him in the manner contemplated by the provisions of the deed referred to. Appellees say, however, that we cannot give appellants relief in this respect for the reason that there were no exceptions filed to the report of the commissioner; that it was confirmed, and is therefore binding upon them. In the case of Addisson v. Dent, etc., 88 Ky. 628, 11 S. W. 950, this court, in speaking upon the subject of the confirmation of a commissioner's report, said: "The order of confirmation should be, as it is, merely interlocutory, and subject to the chancellor's revision and correction until the final judgment is rendered in the case." This rule should be followed, especially in this case where the rights and interests of many infants are involved.

The court did not err in appointing a receiver to take charge of the property and rent it out, and in ordering to be paid out of the rent proceeds the taxes, other preferred claims, and the allowance to Cadwallader, and the remainder to the persons owning the land. The court may, however, if the parties desire, sell the land; but, before the proceeds are divided among the parties in interest, provisions for the support of appellee must be made.

For these reasons, the judgment of the lower court is reversed, and remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.

BULLITT et al. v. GOSNELL et al.
(two cases).

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. April 21, 1909.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 450*) — STREET IMPROVEMENTS — ASSESSMENT DISTRICTS.

The property on the north side of the street improved ran back 180 feet to the city limits. On the south side was a block, which ran back to a depth of 880 feet, and which was bounded by principal streets; there being no probability that a short avenue running parallel with the improved street, and which, if extended, would pass through said block, would be extended. Held that, under Ky. St. 1909, § 2833 (Russell's St. § 895), providing that the improvement shall be at the cost of the owners of lots in each fourth of a square, to be equally apportioned, according to the number of square feet owned by them; that each subdivision of the territory bounded on all sides by principal streets shall be deemed a square; and that, when the territory contiguous to the improved street is not defined into squares by principal streets, the improvement ordinance shall state the depth, not exceeding 500 feet, on both sides of the improvement, to be assessed according to the number of square feet owned by the respective parties within the stated depth—the assessment district should be all the property on the north side and one-fourth the depth of the block on the south side.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1073; Dec. Dig. § 450.*]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 511*)—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—ASSESSMENTS—APPEAL—PREJUDICIAL ERROR.

As, under Ky. St. 1909, § 2833 (Russell's St. § 895), a proportional part of the entire cost of a street improvement is to be assessed against each square foot in the assessment district, one assessed, and showing that the assessment district was not as large as it should have been, shows damage from the error in assessment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1184; Dec. Dig. § 511.*]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 506*) — STREET IMPROVEMENT—ASSESSMENTS CORRECTING ERRORS.

Under Ky. St. 1909, § 2834 (Russell's St. § 897), relative to enforcing payment of the cost of street improvements against the property bound therefor, providing that no error in the proceedings of the general council shall exempt from payment after the work has been done, but said council or the courts shall make corrections to do justice to all parties, error of the council in making the assessment district too small will be corrected.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County, Chancery Branch, Second Division. "To be officially reported."

Actions by G. W. Gosnell, for use, etc., against Outhbert Bullitt and others and against Tullia A. Bullitt and others. From adverse judgments, defendants appeal. Reversed, and remanded for further proceedings.

Bingham & Davies, for appellants. William Furlong, for appellees.

NUNN, J. In the year 1900 the city of Louisville, through its council, caused the improvement of Field avenue, and assessed the cost thereof, proportionally, against the property on either side thereof to a depth of 180 feet. There are eight property owners who are appellants in one case and six in the other. Both cases involve the same questions, and we will consider them as one. Appellants do not question the regularity of the proceedings had in making the improvement. The only thing they complain of is the manner in which the cost of the improvement was apportioned.

We will endeavor to explain the situation so that it may be understood. Field avenue, the street improved, runs east and west and is 180 feet south of the northern city limits. The next street south of it, and running nearly parallel therewith, is Frankfort avenue. The distance between the two is about 880 feet. The two streets connecting with Field avenue, at the place it was improved, are Roberta and Bayly avenues. These two streets are parallel and run north and south. To the west of Bayly avenue is an avenue about 360 feet long, called "Victor avenue," which runs parallel with Frankfort and Field avenues. Victor avenue, according to the evidence, cannot be extended through the block surrounded by Field, Bayly, Frankfort, and Roberta avenues without condemning parts of four lots and destroying two houses situated thereon, which were valued at $9,000. The cost of the improvement of Field avenue was assessed, proportionally, against the property abutting that part of the avenue improved to the depth of 180 feet on the south side of it for two reasons: One was because they could not extend the distance on the north side farther than 180 feet, as at that point they reached the city limits. The other was they wanted to leave a territory south of Field avenue and beyond 180 feet in the block referred to, to be assessed for the improvement of Victor avenue when it was extended through the block. It appears that when the city improved Frankfort avenue the cost of the improvement was assessed against the property abutting thereon to a depth of 440 feet, including one-half of the block referred to. It seems that it did not consider then that Victor avenue would ever be extended through the block, and, under the proof in this case, there is no probability that it ever will be so extended, and, if not, this would leave a territory between the point where the avenue would pass through the block and the point 180 feet south of Field avenue untaxed for the improvement of any street running east and west.

Section 2833, Ky. St. (Russell's St. § 895), under which the improvement of Field avenue was made, is in part as follows: "When the improvement is the original construction of any street, road, lane, alley or avenue, improvement shall be made at the exclusive cost of the owners of lots in each fourth of a square, to be equally appointed (apportioned) by the board of public works, according to the number of square feet owned by them, respectively, and in such improvements the cost of the curbing shall constitute a part of the cost of the construction of the street or avenue, and not of the sidewalk. Each subdivision of the territory bounded on all sides by principal streets shall be deemed a square. When the territory contiguous to any public way is not defined into squares by principal streets, the ordinance providing for the improvement of such public ways shall state the depth, not exceeding five hundred feet, on both sides of said improvement to be assessed for the cost of making the same, including the cost of the improvement of the intersection, if any, of said public way, according to the number of square feet owned by the parties respectively within the depth as set out in the ordinance."

Appellees' contention is that the property on neither the north nor south side of Field avenue, where it was improved, was bounded by principal streets on all sides, and for that reason the city was compelled to fix the territory to be taxed on each side of the avenue at the same depth, and, as the city limits were only 180 feet north of the avenue, they could not go farther than that on the south side. We are of the opinion that the property on the south side of Field avenue was bounded on all sides by principal streets, and were squares within the meaning of the statute, and the cost of the improvement should have been assessed against the property on the south side within one-fourth of a square of the avenue. On the north side the cost should be assessed against all the property there is within the city limits north of that part of the street improved. It would be impossible to make squares out of the property on the north side of the avenue and bound them by principal streets as contemplated by the statute.

Appellees contend that appellants have not shown that a different apportionment would be of any benefit to them, and for that reason this court should not reverse the case, even though the apportionment was irregular. This court has repeatedly announced this rule, but appellees' position is wrong. Appellants both allege and prove that it would be of benefit to them to have the apportionment made correctly, and of this there can be no doubt. The statute requires the cost for such improvements to be made according to the number of square feet owned by the parties, respectively, within the territory as set out in the ordinance. If appellants' contention be sustained, there will be considerably more property within the territory to be assessed for the payment of the cost of the improvement, which will, necessarily, decrease the amount to be assessed against their property.

Section 2834, Ky. St. (Russell's St. § 897), provides, among other things, that "no error in the proceedings of the general council shall exempt from payment after the work has been done as required by either the ordinance or contract; but the general council, or the courts in which suits may be pending, shall make all corrections, rules, and orders to do justice to all parties concerned." In the case of American Standard Asphalt Co. v. Schuster, 125 Ky. 497, 102 S. W. 806, this court held that in a case like this the failure to make proper assessment for the cost of an improvement could not defeat or injure the contractor who performed the work.

On the return of this case the lower court should require the pleadings to be amended and the proper parties brought before the court, and a reapportionment made of the whole cost of the improvement according to the principles herein established.

For these reasons, the judgment of the lower court is reversed, and remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.

LOCKARD et al. v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. April 14, 1909.)
TAXATION (§ 848*)—FAILURE TO LIST FOR TAXATION—FORFEITURE.

Ky. St. 1909, §§ 4076b-4076k (Russell's St. §§ 5970-5983), providing for forfeiture of land for continued failure to list for taxation, do not apply where one receiving a patent from the state, purporting on its face to convey a certain number of acres, not knowing how much he could legally call his own, because of prior patents and adverse possession of parts of the land, lists his patent for taxation from year to year as a less number of acres, and the state authorities accept the returns made by him, and assess the land, and receive the taxes thereon from him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 1664; Dec. Dig. § 848.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Leslie County.
"To be officially reported."

Proceedings by the Commonwealth against Cordelia B. Lockard and others. Judgment for the Commonwealth. Defendants appeal. Reversed.

M. J. Holt and Lindsay & Edelen, for appellants. Ira Fields and James H. Jeffries, for the Commonwealth.

BARKER, J. In the year 1873 the commonwealth of Kentucky issued to C. O. Lockard a patent for a boundary of land lying in Harlan and Leslie counties, which on its face purported to convey to him 40,400 acres of land. Much of the land included within this boundary was in the adverse possession of others, and perhaps more covered by prior patents. Be this as it may, however, Lockard seems never to have known exactly the number of acres under the patent which he could legally call his own; but in each year after the issuance of the patent he listed for taxation in Harlan and Leslie counties 15,000 acres of land, about one-half in each county. Prior to the institution of this proceeding he seems to have brought an action in the federal court against a large number of persons and recovered judgment against them, by which it was determined that he was the owner of some 40,400 acres of land. After this judgment, in 1908, this proceeding was instituted in the Leslie circuit court for the purpose of forfeiting so much of the patent as had not been listed for taxation; in other words, all except 15,000 acres, upon which the taxes had been paid. Lockard or his heirs had conveyed to F. M. Sackett and D. B. Cornett certain boundaries of his patent, and they were made parties defendant to this procedure. The defendants pleaded the listing of the land and the payment of the taxes in bar to the right of forfeiture on the part of the commonwealth, and the vendees pleaded their purchase prior to the institution of this action. The trial before a jury resulted in a peremptory instruction for F. M. Sackett, one of the vendees, and a judgment against the heirs of Lockard and against D. B. Cornett, forfeiting all of the patent except that which had been sold to Sackett. To review this judgment, this appeal has been prosecuted.

A great number of questions of law have been raised and ably discussed by counsel on the respective sides of this litigation, but the view we have taken of it renders it unnecessary for us to notice but one. This procedure is under that section of the revenue statute enacted in 1906 which is embraced in Ky. St. §§ 4076b to 4076k, inclusive (Russell's St. §§ 5970-5983). The history of this statute was fully set forth and the validity of the act upheld in the cases of Eastern Kentucky Coal Lands Co. v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 106 S. W. 280, Kentucky Union Co. v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 108 S. W. 981, and Eastern Kentucky Coal Lands Co. v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 108 S. W. 1138; and it is not necessary for us to do more than to refer to these opinions for the purpose of upholding the validity of the act. In those cases it was held that old land grants which had never been listed for taxation at all might be forfeited under the statute by the failure of the owners to comply with its terms. But we have no such case here. The owner of the outstanding patent has year by year listed his patent for taxation, and the state authorities have accepted the returns made by him, and assessed the land, and received the taxes thereon from him. It may be true, and doubtless is, that Lockard owned a great deal more land within the boundaries of his patent than he returned for taxation, and it was entirely competent for the state officials to have refused to receive his returns, and thus forced him either to assess his whole patent or to come within the language of the forfeiting clauses of the statute; but they could not allow him to make the return of 15,000 acres under the belief that that was a satisfactory assessment, and afterwards forfeit the overplus for nonassessment. This would be practically laying a trap to catch him unawares. Evidently Lockard and the fiscal officers of the state believed that 15,000 acres was about as much land as he could legally recover under his patent, and that this was a fair assessment for fiscal purposes. The object of the statute is to force the owners of outstanding patents to list their lands for taxation. It is notoriously true that there were a large number of outstanding patents in the hands of nonresidents, which cast a cloud upon the title of the possessors of a large part of eastern Kentucky; that the names of these nonresidents were unknown; and that they had persistently for a long period of years failed or refused to return their lands for taxation. It was for the purpose of either forcing these owners to pay their taxes or to give up their claim to the land covered by their patents that the statute was enacted.

But it was never the intention of the Legislature, where an owner in good faith had each year after he received his patent listed what he thought or believed was all of the land that he could legally claim under it, and this return had been accepted by the fiscal officers of the state, that in a procedure such as this the remainder, if it developed that there was more than was returned, might be forfeited to the commonwealth. The law does not favor forfeitures, and in order that they may be upheld or enforced there must be a clear and undoubted authority therefor. They cannot be accomplished by indirection or by implication. They must be enforced by an undoubted decree of the lawmaking power. This principle is too elementary to require either elucidation by argument or the citation of authority. The condition that we have in this record is not covered by the language of the statute. At most it would only be by a strained construction of it that the land in question could be brought within its terms. This, as we have said before, is not permissible. The Lockard patent is neither within the language nor the spirit of the statute which the commonwealth has invoked in this case. Of course, we do not mean to say, or intimate, that the commonwealth may not by appropriate procedure collect the taxes for the number of acres covered by the patent upon which the owner has not paid; but this is a very different proposition from forfeiting the land. We are of opinion that the motion of all of the defendants for a peremptory instruction to the jury to find a verdict for them should have been sustained at the conclusion of the evidence.

For these reasons, the judgment is reversed, as to all of the appellants, for procedure consistent herewith.

BENNETT et al. v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. April 21, 1909.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 110*)—DEFACING BRANDS—LANGUAGE OF STATUTE.

An indictment for defacing the brand from railroad ties substantially following the language of St. 1909, § 1409, subsec. 11 (Russell's St. § 5867), which specifically defines the crime and the manner in which it may be committed, and in addition charging that defendants fraudulently and feloniously committed the acts violative of the statute, is sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. § 292; Dec. Dig. § 110.*]

2. LOGS AND LOGGING (§ 37*)—DEFACING BRAND—ADOPTION AND RECORDING—EVIDENCE.

The state, on a prosecution for defacing, in violation of St. 1909, § 1409, subsec. 11 (Russell's St. § 5867), from railroad ties, a brand of a certain company, recorded, as required by the act, in the office of the clerk of the county, is properly allowed to introduce and identify by a deputy county clerk the record containing the writing and accompanying certificates whereby the company adopted the brand.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Logs and Logging, Cent. Dig. § 118; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

3. LOGS AND LOGGING (§ 9*)—BRANDS—ADOPTION.

Under St. 1909, § 1409, subsec. 7 (Russell's St. § 5863), providing that a timber dealer may adopt a brand by executing and recording a certain writing, the paper may be executed by the manager of a timber dealing company; the statute not saying what officer shall execute it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Logs and Logging, Cent. Dig. § 18; Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 369*)—EVIDENCE—OTHER CRIMES.

Defendants having as part of the same transaction saved brands from railroad ties, part of which were the brand of the O. Company and part another brand, the entire transaction may be given in evidence on a prosecution for defacing the brand of the O. Company, though it shows another crime.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 822; Dec. Dig. § 369.*]

5. LOGS AND LOGGING (§ 37*)—OBLITERATING BRAND—"CUT OUT, CANCEL, OBLITERATE, OR DEFACE."

Sawing off the end of a railroad tie containing the owner's brand is within St. 1909, § 1409, subsec. 11 (Russell's St. § 5867), making it a crime to "cut out, cancel, obliterate, or deface" the brand.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Logs and Logging, Cent. Dig. § 118; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 753*)—PREEMPTORY INSTRUCTION.

The court may not give a peremptory instruction to acquit if there is any evidence, however slight, conducing to show defendant guilty of the offense charged.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1727; Dec. Dig. § 753.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Lee County.

"To be officially reported."

William Bennett and another appeal from a conviction. Affirmed.

J. B. White, for appellants. Jas. Breathitt, Atty. Gen., and Tom B. McGregor, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the Commonwealth.

SETTLE, C. J. The appellants, William Bennett and Jeff Angel, were indicted, tried, and convicted in the Lee circuit court and their punishment fixed at confinement in the penitentiary one year each, for the crime of defacing branded railroad ties in violation of subsection 11 of section 1409, Ky. St. Failing to obtain a new trial in the court below, they prosecute this appeal.

Subsection 11 of section 1409, Ky. St. (Russell's St. § 5867), reads as follows: "Any person or persons who shall unlawfully cut out, cancel, obliterate or deface any brand recorded as provided by this act, which shall have been placed upon the standing timber, saw log, or other log tree prepared for the purpose of sale, or any cross or railroad tie, stave, heading or other timber prepared for market, of another of this Commonwealth, shall be deemed guilty of felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be, for each offense, confined in the penitentiary of this state, not less than one nor more than three years." Subsection 7 of section 1409 (Russell's St. § 5963), provides: "Every such dealer desiring to adopt a brand may do so by the execution of a writing in form and effect as follows: Brand—Notice is hereby given that I (or we as the case may be) have adopted the following brand in my (or our, etc.) business as timber dealer or dealers, to wit (here insert the words, letters, figures, etc., constituting the brand, or if it be any device other than the words, letters, or figures, insert the fac simile thereof). Dated this _____ day of _____ A. D. _____. The said writing shall be acknowledged or proved for record in the same manner as deeds are acknowledged or proved and shall be recorded in the office of the clerk of the county in which the principal office or place of business of such timber dealer may be. A copy thereof shall be posted up at the place where the principal business is done, and one at the court house door in the county where the business is carried on and at three public places in the county."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The railroad ties, the brands upon which the indictment charges appellants with defacing, belonged as therein alleged, and as the evidence showed, to the Ohio Valley Tie Company, a corporation doing business in this state. According to the evidence the corporation's brand consisted of the letter W and a yellow spot about an inch in diameter. These it places on the end of each of its railroad ties; the W being made with a heated branding iron, and the spot with a brush dipped in yellow paint. According to the evidence this brand had been duly adopted by the Ohio Valley Tie Company by the execution of a writing in form and effect as provided by subsection 7 of section 1409, Ky. St., which writing was signed and acknowledged by the manager of the corporation in his official capacity and soon thereafter duly recorded in the office of the clerk of the Lee county court, where the principal office and place of business of the corporation seems to be; copies thereof being posted up in the manner and at the several public places in Lee county required by the statute.

The evidence as to appellants' guilt of the crime charged was furnished by four witnesses introduced for the commonwealth, Isaacs, Perkins, Sternberg, and Easter, who testified, in substance: That a lot of ties owned by the Ohio Valley Tie Company and each branded with the letter W and a yellow spot, were in August and September, 1908, lying on the bank of the North fork, near the mouth of the Middle fork, of Kentucky river in Lee county; that they saw appellants engaged in the work of defacing and destroying the brands on the ties by sawing off the ends of the ties containing them and throwing them into a nearby thicket, where they were concealed; that they called to appellants and asked what they were doing, to which they replied that they were sawing off ties, but did not explain why they were doing so. The same witnesses further testified that at the same time appellants in their presence sawed off the ends of some ties containing as a brand a horseshoe and the figure 7. The witnesses also identified and exhibited to the jury certain blocks containing the brand of the Ohio Valley Tie Company and that of the horseshoe and figure 7, as a part of the same they had seen appellants saw from the ties on the occasion referred to.

Appellants' first complaint is that the trial court erred in overruling their demurrer to the indictment. In response to this complaint it is only necessary to say that the indictment substantially follows the language of the statute, and, in addition, charged that appellants fraudulently and feloniously committed the acts violative of the statute, and, as the latter specifically defines the crime charged and the manner in which it may be committed, no better form of indictment could have been adopted than that used in this case. Therefore in overruling the demurrer the court committed no error.

Appellants also complain of the ruling of the circuit court in allowing the commonwealth to introduce, and identify by a deputy county clerk of Lee county, the record containing the writing and accompanying certificates, whereby the Ohio Valley Tie Company adopted a brand for its railroad ties. The ruling in question was proper. The only competent manner of showing the corporation's adoption of a brand for its ties was by the introduction and identification of the record thereof by its legal custodian, the county clerk or his deputy, or by the introduction of a copy attested by the clerk or his deputy. The record produced by the county clerk showed that the brand used by the Ohio Valley Tie Company for marking its ties had been adopted in the manner required by the statute, and therefore the trial court could have had no doubt of the competency of the record.

There is no force in appellants' claim that the manager of the Ohio Valley Tie Company was without authority to execute the writing by which its tie brand was adopted. The statute does not say what officer of the company shall execute the paper. Therefore it was proper for the manager to do it.

Equally unsubstantial is the objection urged by appellants to the proof made by the commonwealth of the posting up by the Ohio Valley Tie Company of copies of the recorded writing by which its brand was adopted. In no other way could such proof have been made, and no error was committed by the court in admitting it.

It was not, as claimed by appellants, improper or prejudicial to them for the court to allow the witnesses for the commonwealth, who discovered appellants sawing brands from the ties of the Ohio Valley Tie Company, to testify that appellants at the same time and place sawed brands other than that of the Ohio Valley Tie Company from other ties. The entire sawing and destruction of brands was one and the same transaction, or a series of acts constituting one transaction. Therefore the whole was properly allowed to be proved. In Bishop's New Criminal Procedure, vol. 1, § 1225, under the title, "Whole Transaction," the competency of such evidence is recognized in the following statement: "As explained under the doctrine of res gestæ, wherever a part of a transaction appears in evidence, the rest is thereby made admissible. So that the entire transaction, wherein it is claimed the wrong in issue was done may be shown, though it includes also other crimes, and even though each transaction was a continuing one, or transpiring in parts on different days." Greenleaf on Evidence, vol. 1, § 53, and volume 3, § 15; Tye v. Commonwealth, 3 Ky. Law Rep. 59; Thomas v. Commonwealth, 1 Ky. Law Rep. 122; O'Brien v. Commonwealth, 115 Ky. 608, 74 S. W. 666.

It is insisted for appellants that their motion for a peremptory instruction made at the conclusion of the commonwealth's evidence should have been sustained by the court. We are at a loss to know upon what this contention rests. It will not do to say that the sawing off of the end of a tie containing the owner's brand does not, as argued by appellants' counsel, "cut out, cancel, obliterate, or deface" the brand in the meaning of the statute, for the sawing off of the end of the tie containing the brand and concealing the detached piece is manifestly a destruction or complete "obliteration" of the brand. The evidence seems conclusive of the appellants' guilt; but if this were not true, and there were but slight evidence of their guilt, that state of case would not have justified a peremptory instruction compelling the jury to acquit them. No better statement of our meaning as to the matter can be made than is expressed in the following utterance of this court, found in Commonwealth v. Murphy, 109 S. W. 353: "It is not within the province of the trial court to take from the jury a criminal prosecution if there is any evidence, however slight it may be, conducing to show that the defendant is guilty of the offense charged, or any of its degrees mentioned in the Code. This rule of practice is not found directly in either the Code or the statutes, but is firmly established as a part of the criminal jurisprudence of the state, and is uniformly applied by this court in considering appeals in criminal cases when a reversal is asked because the verdict is flagrantly against the evidence, or is not supported by sufficient evidence, and should control the lower courts in the disposition of criminal cases."

The objections urged by appellants' counsel to the instructions caused us to consider them with even more than ordinary care. We have not, however, been convinced that they are in any respect incorrect. On the contrary, they fairly and fully present the law as it should have been given for the guidance of the jury. The record as a whole shows that no error was committed to appellants' prejudice.

Wherefore the judgment is affirmed.

Armstrong & Duvall, John S. Marcum, and Frank Prater, for appellant. Jas. Breathitt, Atty. Gen., and Tom B. McGregor, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the Commonwealth.

SETTLE, C. J. The appellant, Van Gipson, insists that he was illegally convicted in the court below of voluntary manslaughter under an indictment charging him with the murder of Elmer James, and his punishment fixed at confinement in the penitentiary 21 years, and by this appeal seeks a reversal of the judgment entered upon the verdict of the jury.

James was shot in the back and instantly killed, and appellant admitted on the trial that he killed him, but claimed that in taking his life he acted in self-defense. The commonwealth's theory is that appellant shot and killed deceased from ambush, or when he was fleeing from him. The latter view was favored by its counsel because of the character of the wound inflicted; two physicians having testified that they were unable to probe the wound from the point of the bullet's entrance, from which they deduced the conclusion that, when shot, the body of deceased was inclined forward as if he were running, which stretched the muscles and ligaments of the back, but that, upon receiving the wound and falling, they relaxed and resumed their normal position, thereby closing the wound, and so obstructing the passage made by the bullet that the probing was made impossible. On the other hand, if, when shot, deceased was, as claimed by appellant, in the act of picking up a rock to throw at him, that fact would also account for the closing of the passage made through his body by the bullet.

The deceased married a sister of appellant, and he and his wife made their home with the mother of appellant and the wife of deceased on another part of the same farm upon which appellant resided. According to the evidence, deceased and his mother-in-law were not on good terms, and for this or some other reason there had been a bad state of feeling existing for some time between deceased and appellant. The killing of James occurred about 7 o'clock on the morning of July 17, 1906, on a branch near appellant's residence. Two or three witnesses introduced by the commonwealth testified that they heard the pistol shot when the killing occurred, and that it was immediately followed by a cry of distress; but none of the commonwealth's witnesses saw the killing. One of them, Elmer Webb, a 16 year old nephew of appellant and a member of his household, testified that he heard the shot, and shortly before it was fired saw appellant get from a trunk his pistol and start with it in his possession toward the tobacco patch, where the killing occurred, saying when he left the house that he would "put Elmer James out of the hollow damned rough." The witness further testified that soon after the appellant's departure he left the latter's house to take some milk to his grandmother, Mrs. Dana Gipson; that upon reaching the top of a hill he heard a pistol shot down in the hollow about 150 yards from him, and, going further, met appellant with the pistol in his hand returning to the house, but neither of them then spoke to the other. The witness said he then went on down in the hollow, and there found deceased lying in the path, face downward, dead; that he proceeded to the house of his grandmother, about 100 yards from the place of the homicide, and delivered the milk, without telling her of the death of her son-in-law, and then returned to appellant's house; that upon his arrival at the top of the hill beyond the hollow he again met appellant, who asked him if he saw James, and if he was dead, to both of which questions the witness gave affirmative answers; that appellant then told witness to go to the house and tell his Aunt Eliza, appellant's wife, to bring him his clothes, that he was going to Ohio, which intention appellant at once carried into effect, but a few days later returned to this state and surrendered himself to the sheriff of Carter county.

Appellant's account of the homicide greatly differed from that of the witness, Webb. He testified that he and his nephew, Webb, were at work in the tobacco patch, and his wife was also present, when James was killed; that he had his pistol with him, because he had learned from his mother the day before that James had threatened to kill her, and also kill appellant, and had invested the proceeds derived from the sale of a calf in a pistol for that purpose; that James came up the hollow, and appellant said to him, "Good morning," to which James replied, "Go to hell, you damned son of a —," and added that Eliza, appellant's wife, had been telling lies on him. Appellant further testified that, following these statements of James, he told him of his abuse of and threats against appellant's mother, and that he should not blackguard his wife, and must get his clothes and get out of the hollow, or he (appellant) would put him out; that James thereupon cursed appellant, said he would kill him, and, picking up a rock, threw it at him, but appellant dodged it; that James then threw a second rock, which struck appellant on the hip, following which he jumped from the bank over the branch, and, stooping over, with his back toward appellant, picked up the third rock, and was in the act of raising it, to again throw it at appellant, when the latter shot him with the pistol; that James then dropped the rock, gave a cry, and ran back down the hollow about 40 yards, fell to the ground, and soon died. The post mortem conducted by the physicians showed that the pistol ball passed through the lower part of the heart, causing, as the physicians testified, instant death. They therefore expressed the opinion that deceased fell where he was shot, and this testimony, it was urged in behalf of the commonwealth, contradicted that of appellant that deceased ran 40 yards after he was shot, and, together with the nature of the wound received and proof of tracks found near the body, tended to support the theory of the commonwealth that deceased was fleeing from appellant when shot.

Various grounds were filed by appellant in support of his motion for a new trial, but we deem it necessary to consider only such of them as are urged by counsel for a reversal.

Their first contention is that the trial court erred in refusing to permit appellant to testify for himself that his mother, a day or two before the homicide, informed him of James' abuse of and attempt to strike her, and his threats against her and appellant. There is no ground upon which to rest this contention, for the bill of evidence found in the record shows that both appellant and his mother testified in detail as to this matter, without objection or denial from court or counsel. We assume, therefore, that counsel for appellant inadvertently overlooked that part of the evidence.

The second contention of appellant's counsel, that the verdict of the jury is flagrantly against the evidence, we must also pronounce untenable. This contention is based on the alleged contradictory statements of appellant's nephew, Elmer Webb, without whose testimony, it is argued, appellant could not have been convicted. It must be conceded that Webb was not consistent as a witness. It appears that he first testified at the inquest held by the coroner, and then denied that he knew anything about the killing of James, but, upon being charged with the homicide and placed under arrest therefor the following day, admitted knowledge of the crime, and for the first time told that appellant was the slayer of James, and revealed the facts with respect to the crime as he seemed to know and understand them. Again, only the day before appellant's trial, Webb was by the latter's procurement taken to the office of his counsel, and there, in the presence of appellant, his grandmother, the counsel, and one or two other persons, signed and perhaps swore to, a written statement in which he substantially corroborated appellant's version of the manner in which the homicide occurred. Yet, when called to the witness stand during the trial, he made the same statement with respect to the homicide that he made at the time of his arrest, at the same time admitting that he made the statement of the day before, contained in the writing produced by appellant's counsel, but claiming that it was untrue, and that he made it because of the presence of the grandmother, and through fear of his uncle, the appellant, with whom he had lived, and by whom he had once been whipped. It is not material whether this court would or would not have accepted the testimony given by Webb on the trial. It was for the jury to determine whether he then told the truth. They had him before them, saw his demeanor, and heard his statements; and we, even if disposed to disbelieve the witness, have no right to invade the province or usurp the powers of the jury by declaring that his testimony should have been rejected. We are therefore unable to say that the verdict was flagrantly against the evidence; and, as it would be still wider of the mark to declare there was no evidence authorizing it, we cannot say, as requested by appellant, that the trial court should have peremptorily instructed the jury to acquit him.

It is also contended by appellant that the circuit court erred in permitting the commonwealth's attorney, over appellant's objection, to say in argument to the jury, "I demand for the commonwealth and all these people (meaning those in the courtroom assembled to hear the argument) a verdict of guilty against this defendant." The statement in question was not prejudicial. The commonwealth's attorney had the right to ask for the commonwealth a verdict of guilty if he believed the evidence authorized appellant's conviction, and to refer to the audience present, as was done; they being citizens of the commonwealth, and in common with all other people interested in having the law enforced by the punishment of the guilty.

It is further contended that a new trial should have been granted because the jury were guilty of improper conduct, in that one of their number, after the submission of the case, took it upon himself to reduce to writing the testimony of each witness, which writing, it is claimed, was used by the jury in arriving at a verdict. It appears that the writing referred to was done in the presence of all the members of the jury, and in the absence of proof to the contrary must be presumed to have been the joint production of all, though written by one of their number. The writing does not seem to have been preserved, and, not being in the record, its accuracy cannot be tested by a comparison with the contents of the bill of evidence brought to this court. We do not mean to commend such a practice, but it does not appear to have been prejudicial in this case to the rights of appellant. Moreover, the error, if it be such, is one which this court is without power to review. As said in Stuart v. Commonwealth, 105 S. W. 170: "But, waiving this matter (as to manner of arriving at the verdict in that case) and also the question of the impropriety of permitting an attack upon the verdict by the members of the jury—which this court, in Commonwealth v. Skeggs, 3 Bush, 19, and Lucas v. Cannon, 13 Bush, 650, seems to have held could not be done—as the alleged error charged to the trial court grew out of its refusal to grant appellant a new trial on account of the action of the jury complained of, and was a ruling as to a matter brought to the attention of the court for the first time on the application for a new trial, we are prevented by section 281, Cr. Code Prac., from considering it.” Redmon v. Commonwealth, 82 Ky. 333; Rutherford v. Commonwealth, 78 Ky. 639.

No objection is made to the instructions, and our examination of them convinces us that none could be urged, as they fully and fairly advised the jury of the law with respect to every aspect of the case in language that the jury could not fail to understand.

The record manifesting no error that could have been prejudicial to the appellant, the judgment is affirmed.

KENTUCKY HEATING CO. v. HOOD.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. April 16, 1909.)

1. GAS (§ 21*)—INJURIES TO GAS FIXTURES AND CONNECTIONS—ELEMENTS OF COMPENSATION.

Where the servants of defendant, a gas company, wrongfully removed and destroyed the fixtures and connections with plaintiff's house of a rival gas company, thereby depriving plaintiff and her tenants of necessary heat, and causing the tenants to leave, plaintiff may recover as compensation, not only the cost of replacing the fixtures and connections, but also reasonable compensation for the loss of profits from her tenants, and for personal inconvenience and discomfort.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gas, Dec. Dig. § 21.*]

2. DAMAGES (§ 20*)—INJURIOUS RESULTS NOT WITHIN CONTEMPLATION OF DEFENDANT.

In an action for damages for a wrongful act, it is not material whether it was in the contemplation of the wrongdoer that loss of business or profit would result to the injured person.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 56, 57; Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

3. TORTS (§ 4*)—PROXIMATE CAUSE—IGNORANCE OF RESULT.

It is no defense to an action for a wrongful act that defendant did not know that any injury or loss would result.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Torts, Cent. Dig. § 4; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

4. GAS (§ 21*)—INJURY TO GAS FIXTURES AND CONNECTIONS—EXEMPLARY DAMAGES.

Where the servants of defendant, a gas company, wrongfully removed and destroyed the fixtures and connections with plaintiff's house of a rival gas company, thereby depriving plaintiff and her tenants of necessary heat, and failed to make repairs when notified of the injury, exemplary damages were properly allowed plaintiff.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Jefferson County, Common Pleas Branch, Second Division.

“To be officially reported.”

Action by Jessie Hood against the Kentucky Heating Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Morton K. Yonts, for appellant. Eugene R. Attkisson, for appellee.

CARROLL, J. The appellee rented a house on Walnut street in Louisville for the purpose of subletting rooms to boarders. The house consisted of a basement and three stories, the third story being an attic containing two small bedrooms. She paid as rent for the property $60 a month; and, when the incident out of which this suit arose occurred, several of the rooms in the house were occupied by persons who had rented them from her. Some of these rented rooms had grates, but they were not used, as the appellee heated the entire house by heating gas furnished by the Louisville Gas Company. In May, 1907, Mrs. McDonald, a subtenant, who occupied, as a restaurant, a part of the basement, desired to use in her place the natural gas furnished by the Kentucky Heating Company, and applied to this company to connect her stove with its gas mains. At this time there was in that part of the basement, under the control of appellee, three gas meters; two that had been installed by the Louisville Gas Company, one for illuminating gas, and the other for heating gas, the third meter belonging to the Kentucky Heating Company. When the employees of the Kentucky Heating Company went to the residence for the purpose of connecting the stove of Mrs. McDonald with the mains of that company, they disconnected the heating pipes of the Louisville Gas Company, cut out and used some 16 feet of the pipe, took down the meter, and threw it in an ash barrel, thereby cutting off all the heat in the house that was supplied by the Louisville Gas Company. As a result of this all the renters of appellee left, because the weather was too cold to occupy the rooms without heat. At the time the employees cut off the heat, Mrs. Hood was in the house, but they did not notify her what they were going to do, or what they did, nor did she know anything about it until the renters complained to her of having no heat in their rooms. When she discovered the cause of the trouble, she at once notified the Kentucky Heating Company, and requested it to repair the injury its employees had done, and attempted on several different days to get the company to replace the fixtures, but without success. About a week after the pipes were disconnected, the Louisville Gas Company sent its men to the house, and they replaced the fixtures and turned on the heat, charging appellee for this service $6. Whereupon the appellee brought this suit against the Kentucky

Heating Company to recover damages for the willful, malicious, and wrongful acts of the employees in interfering with the heating fixtures of the Louisville Gas Company, thereby not only depriving her of the heat that company furnished, and subjecting her to inconvenience and discomfort, but causing the renters from whom she had been receiving about $160 a month to leave the premises. Upon a trial, the jury assessed the damages at $500. A reversal is asked upon two grounds: First, because the verdict is excessive; second, for error in instructing the jury.

Among the instructions given was the following: "I further instruct you, gentlemen, that if you believe from the evidence that the agents or employees of the Kentucky Heating Company maliciously, or in wanton disregard of plaintiff's rights, disconnected the meter of the Louisville Gas Company, and cut off the supply pipe, whereby she was deprived of the use of the gas, you may or may not in your discretion award her punitive damages, or damages by way of punishment. I further instruct you by 'malicious' as used in this instruction is meant the intentional doing of a wrongful act without legal right." It may be conceded at the outset that, unless the appellee was entitled to recover punitive damages, the verdict is excessive. And we are also of the opinion that instruction No. 2 was deficient in failing to specify the character of damages appellee was entitled to recover as compensation. But the error in this instruction was not so prejudicial as to authorize a reversal, especially in view of the fact that the jury were not confined in assessing the damages to compensation.

It is insisted that the appellee was only entitled to recover the amount expended by her in replacing the fixtures taken out by the employees of the appellant company, but in this view we do not agree. The appellee had the unquestioned right to heat her house with gas furnished by the Louisville Gas Company, and to enjoy the profit she might have received from the persons to whom she rented rooms; and it is equally plain that the employees of the appellant had no right or authority to in any manner interfere with or disturb the fixtures by which the heat was obtained. And the evidence conduces to show that at the time the heating fixtures were removed, it was necessary that the rooms of the house should be heated in order to make them comfortable and habitable, and also that the deprivation of the heat caused the renters to leave. As appellant's servants wrongfully deprived appellee of the convenience and comfort of having her house heated, and also by this conduct caused her to lose the income she received from the tenants, she was entitled to recover as compensation, not only the cost of replacing the fixtures, but in addition thereto reasonable compensation for the loss she sustained in being deprived of her tenants, and for personal inconvenience and discomfort. It would fall far short of the relief to which appellee was entitled to limit her recovery to the money she was required to pay out to have the injury repaired. A person cannot either negligently or wantonly injure the property of another, thereby causing the other to suffer loss in business or profits, or in the denial of the ordinary and reasonable comforts he enjoyed, and then assert that all the injured party is entitled to recover is the cost of replacing the injured property. Waiving, for the moment, the question of exemplary damages, we may lay it down that, whenever a person is injured in his person or property by the wrongful act of another, he is entitled to recover such a sum as will fairly compensate him, not only for the actual loss sustained, but for such consequential damages as may spring from the deprivation of business or profits as are the direct or proximate result of the tort complained of, if such consequential damages are capable of reasonable ascertainment, and in addition thereto, the facts justifying it, compensation for personal inconvenience and discomfort. In the case before us the loss sustained by appellee, aside from personal inconvenience and discomfort, was not only the sum she paid out for having the fixtures replaced, but the loss she suffered in being deprived of the profit she had the right to expect would be received from the renters. This profit was not uncertain or speculative. It was as reasonably sure as any kind of business profit can be that depends upon the development or happening of the future; and, furthermore, it was capable of reasonable ascertainment by a jury. The appellee, when her tenants left, was receiving from them a fixed sum. This income she lost when they withdrew from her premises, and the loss of this source of income was the proximate result of the wrongful act complained of.

It is not material whether it was in the contemplation of the wrongdoers that loss of business or profit would result to the injured party. In actions for breach of contracts the rule generally held to is that only such damages can be recovered as are actually sustained, or such as it is reasonable to conclude were within the contemplation of the parties at the time the contract was entered into. 2 Chitty on Contracts, p. 1324. But this measure that obtains in contracts will not be applied in actions sounding in tort. There is a wide difference between the rights and remedies allowable in the one case and in the other. 1 Sutherland on Damages, § 15. It is the wrongful act done, and the consequences that naturally result from it, that the law looks at and holds the wrongdoer responsible for. A person who commits a tort like this is liable for all the damages that naturally flow from, and are the result of, this wrongful act, although he may not at the time have given any thought to or have anticipated that injurious consequences would follow. It is no excuse or defense for the wrongdoer that he did not mean to commit any wrong, or did not know that any injury or loss would ensue. The general rule in respect to the recovery of consequential damages in cases of tort is very well stated in Sutherland on Damages (volume 1, § 16): "In an action for a tort, if no improper motive is attributed to the defendant, the injured party is entitled to recover such damages as will compensate him for the injury received so far as it might reasonably have been expected to follow from the circumstances; such as, according to common experience and the usual course of events, might have been reasonably anticipated. The damages are not limited or affected so far as they are compensatory, or by what was in fact in contemplation of the party in fault. He who is responsible for a negligent act must answer 'for all the injurious results which follow therefrom, by ordinary natural sequence.' * * * Whether the injurious consequences may have been 'reasonably expected' to have followed from the commission of the act is not at all determinative of the liability of the person who committed the act to respond to the person suffering therefrom. * * * There need not be in the mind of the individual whose act or omission has wrought the injury the least contemplation of the probable consequences of his conduct; he is responsible therefor because the result proximately follows his wrongful act or nonaction. All persons are imperatively required to foresee what will be the natural consequences of their acts and omissions, according to the usual course of nature and the general experience." See, also, note to Wallace v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 195 Pa. 127, 45 Atl. 685, 52 L. R. A. 33; Wyant v. Crouse, 127 Mich. 158, 86 N. W. 527, 53 L. R. A. 626; 13 Cyc. pp. 28, 29, 49; Gregory v. Slaughter, 124 Ky. 345, 99 S. W. 247, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1228.

It is further contended by counsel for appellant that it was error to instruct the jury that they might assess exemplary or punitive damages. But, considering the circumstances under which the tort was committed, we think it was a case in which the jury might in their discretion allow exemplary damages, and hence the instruction in this particular was correct. It is a general rule that exemplary damages in cases of this character are not allowable unless the wrong complained of is committed in a malicious, aggravating, or insulting manner, or with reckless disregard of the rights of the injured person. Major v. Pulliam, 8 Dana, 582; Parker v. Jenkins, 3 Bush, 587; Jennings v. Maddox, 8 B. Mon. 430; Andrews v. Sing- er Mfg. Co. (Ky.) 48 S. W. 976; Reynolds v. Braithwaite, 131 Pa. 416, 18 Atl. 1110; 4 Sutherland on Damages, §§ 1031, 1092-5. Measured by this rule, we have little difficulty in reaching the conclusion that the conduct of the servants of appellant in cutting the pipes and throwing the meter in an ash barrel was, to say the least of it, a high-handed, aggravating piece of business, done in utter and reckless disregard of the rights of appellee. The employés of the appellant company do not give any reasonable or satisfactory excuse for their conduct, but they make plain the fact that it was not the result of ignorance or mistake or accident. It was not necessary, in order to connect the mains of the heating company with Mrs. McDonald's stove, that they should either cut the pipes of the Louisville Gas Company or tear down its meter, although they testify that it was more convenient and less expensive to do it in this way than it would be to make the necessary connections, as might have been done, without disturbing the fixtures of the other company. Looking at the matter from any reasonable standpoint, it is inconceivable why these men should have acted in this manner, unless they did it with the malicious intention of interfering with, and injuring, the property. Nor did appellant company treat appellee in a proper, becoming, or reasonable manner, after she notified it that her fixtures had been disconnected by its reckless, if not malicious, employés. Although appellant was notified of the trouble on the day following the commission of the wrong, it did not repair the injury or make any reasonable effort to do so.

Upon the whole case we see no reason for disturbing the judgment, and it is affirmed.

SAMEULS v. WILLIS.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. April 21, 1909.)

1. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS (§ 18*)—MALPRACTICE—PETITION—VARIANCE.

Where the petition, in an action for malpractice, alleged that defendant, in the course of an operation on plaintiff, negligently cut her intestines, and negligently left in her abdomen after the operation a sponge which irritated the intestines, causing them to ulcerate, etc., plaintiff, though failing to show that defendant negligently cut the intestines, could recover by showing that he negligently left in her abdomen a sponge causing the injuries complained of.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Physicians and Surgeons, Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

2. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS (§ 18*)—MALPRACTICE—PETITION—INSTRUCTIONS.

The original petition in an action for malpractice alleged that defendant negligently left a sponge in plaintiff's abdomen after an operation, and that the sponge caused the intestines to ulcerate. An amended petition also charged that defendant negligently cut the intestines. The evidence was confined to the negligence based on leaving the sponge in the abdomen. There was no claim of surprise. Held, that the court properly submitted the case to the jury on the issue of the negligence alleged in the original petition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Physicians and Surgeons, Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1053*)—HARMLESS ERROR — ERRONEOUS ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Where, in an action for malpractice, defendant testified that the terms of his policy insuring him against accidents did not cover any damages that might be recoverable in the action, and the court subsequently directed the jury to disregard the testimony as to his insurance, the error in permitting evidence as to his insurance was not ground for reversal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4179; Dec. Dig. § 1053.*]

4. EVIDENCE (§ 506*)—OPINIONS—MATTERS DIRECTLY IN ISSUE.

In an action for malpractice in the performance of an operation, physicians may testify concerning the teachings of their science and the customs of their craft, but they cannot give their opinion whether an operation performed in a manner described was performed in an ordinarily careful manner; that being for the jury alone.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2309; Dec. Dig. § 506.*]

5. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS (§ 18*)—MALPRACTICE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Where, in an action for malpractice in the performance of an operation, based on the negligence of the physician in leaving a sponge in the patient's abdomen after the operation, physicians testified that the best surgeons sometimes left a sponge in the bodies of their patients in performing similar operations, the question whether the physician exercised proper care was still for the jury, since because all men are at some time careless does not relieve one from the legal consequences of his careless act.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Physicians and Surgeons, Cent. Dig. § 44; Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

6. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS (§ 18*)—MALPRACTICE—DAMAGES.

Defendant, after performing an operation, negligently left in plaintiff's abdomen a sponge, which caused the intestines to ulcerate, creating a fistula which emitted fecal matter and noxious gases to the serious impairment of plaintiff's health and caused her sickness and mental and physical suffering. Held, that a verdict for $3,500 was not excessive.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Physicians and Surgeons, Cent. Dig. § 46; Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Barren County.
"To be officially reported."

Action by Mary Willis against F. W. Samuels. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Porter & Sandidge, J. C. Sims, and Sims, Du Bose & Rodes, for appellant. Baird & Richardson, for appellee.

O'REAR, J. Appellant is a surgeon of many years' experience in performing abdominal operations. His office and residence are at Louisville. He was called to Glasgow Junction to operate on appellee for ovaritis. Appellee had been very sick for some months, and, the local doctors advising the operation and recommending appellant, she decided to have him do the work. He sent down a trained nurse and followed next day with a medical student as assistant. Several doctors of the neighborhood came in to witness the operation. After the patient had been put under the influence of an anæsthetic, the abdomen was opened by a five or six inch incision, the intestines were pressed aside from the infected region, and in order that they might be held in place, and so as not to interfere with the operator's work, a number of surgical sponges were inserted in the abdominal cavity, forming a kind of confederam about the organ to be operated upon. These sponges are described as gauze cloths about 14 inches by 6 inches, stitched together. After the operation the sponges were intended to be removed and the cut in the abdomen drawn together by stitches, leaving a small opening in which was inserted strips of the gauze for drainage purposes. The operation was thought to have been a success, but the patient did not respond by the anticipated recovery. Instead, after a few days, she grew worse. Finally, and in about 30 days after the operation, it was discovered through a part of the original opening made in the abdomen that some foreign substance was lying near the surface, which on being removed was discovered to be one of the surgical sponges used at the operation. So it is claimed by appellee. It was incrustated in and saturated with foul-smelling pus. After its removal the patient improved in health, but there was left a sinus, which it is claimed has developed into a fecal fistula. Appellee brought this suit against appellant, charging malpractice, in that he negligently left or suffered to be left in her person after the operation the surgical sponge, which irritated the intestines, causing them to fester and ulcerate, creating the fistula, which emitted fecal matter and noxious gases to the serious impairment of her health, and causing her sickness and humiliation, mental and physical suffering, for which she sought damages. The trial resulted in a verdict and judgment for $3,500 for the plaintiff.

There are several rulings of the trial court presented on this appeal by the defendant as errors, for which he asks a reversal of the judgment. In the petition it was charged, inter alia: That the defendant negligently and carelessly caused and permitted to be left in the plaintiff's body instruments, material, and dressing used in said operation, and negligently and carelessly left said instruments, material, and dressing to remain in her body for several weeks, injuring and perforating her intestines and bowels, and destroying same; that he negligently and carelessly permitted her intestines and bowels to perforate; and that her intestines and bowels are still perforated, and permanently injured, and so forth. In an amended petition filed before the trial, it is said: "She states: That, wherever the word 'perforated' occurs in her petition, she asks leave of the court to strike the same. She states that the defendant when making and superintending said operation negligently and carelessly cut her intestines, and negligently left the same open, and he negligently and carelessly left the sponge described in her original petition in her bowels for more than 30 days, and the same festered and gathered pus in her bowels, and ulcerated her intestines and left an opening therein, and the gas and food and contents of her stomach and bowels worked out through said opening in her intestines made, as aforesaid, passing out at the opening in her abdomen, which was made to perform said operation, thus forming an artificial opening in her abdomen; that the same has existed and continued, and now exists by reason of the negligence and careless acts of the defendant, causing her great bodily and mental anguish, humiliation, and suffering, and permanently injuring her as stated in her original petition."

There was no evidence that appellant perforated or cut the plaintiff's intestines. There was evidence that the sponge was left in her abdomen, and that it did ulcerate the intestines, with the consequences charged. It is now urged by appellant that plaintiff by the amended petition quoted abandoned and withdrew her complaint based upon the perforation of her bowels by the sponge, and elected to try to recover upon the sole charge of the negligence of the defendant in cutting or perforating the bowels in the course of the operation. It was therefore urged in the court below, and is urged here by appellant, that all the evidence admitted, and the instructions submitted authorizing a recovery by the plaintiff for the ulceration of her bowels by the sponge, and any consequences therefrom, were irrelevant to the issue, and should not have been allowed. Simplified, the charge in the original petition was that the defendant had carelessly left foreign substances in the plaintiff's abdomen after the operation, which had perforated her bowels, producing the ill effects specified. It was doubtless thought by plaintiff's counsel upon reflection that they would be held to show a perforation in order to recover, and that by the foreign substance left there, whether the sponge or other thing; that to perforate required a cut or puncture. Unwilling to rest their case upon such a narrow charge, they by the amendment sought to and did enlarge it. First they withdrew the charge that by the substances left in the abdomen the bowels had been perforated. In lieu they charged: First, that the defendant in the course of the operation negligently cut or perforated her intestines; and, second, that the sponge which he negligently left in her abdomen ulcerated her intestines "and left an opening therein," festering and gathering pus in her bowels. When the evidence failed to support the first charge, plaintiff was still at liberty to sustain the latter if she could, and such was the issue presented by the pleadings. Proof upon that issue was admitted from each side. There is no claim of surprise. Expert witnesses were brought from great distances by the defendant, whose testimony in the main, if not wholly, was upon that point. The jury's attention was directed sharply to that issue of fact. The motion for a peremptory instruction for the defendant, and for judgment upon the pleadings, based upon the theory of the issue now advanced by appellant, were properly overruled.

While the defendant was testifying, he was required on cross-examination to answer the question whether he carried a policy of insurance against accidents of that kind. Before another witness had been introduced, the court receded from his ruling on that point. This appears in the bill of evidence: "The court said to the jury that on yesterday the plaintiff asked of the defendant if he didn't carry an insurance policy against loss or liability of this character. On motion all the testimony of the defendant pertaining to such policy is now withdrawn from the jury, and the court admonished the jury to disregard all that testimony and not consider it for any purpose in the consideration of this case." The record does not show upon whose motion the matter was withdrawn. Nor does it appear that the evidence could have been very material in any event. On his re-examination before the matter was withdrawn, appellant was questioned and answered thus: "Q. You have been asked about insurance against suits for malpractice. I will ask you if the terms of your policy cover any damages that may be recovered in a case like this? A. Not in the slightest." We see no cause to suspect that the jury would have disregarded the witness' answer, or did not obey the subsequent admonition of the court. The error was probably harmless in the first place, and was cured in the next.

Appellant testified, and a number of other witnesses in his behalf testified, as to the customary and correct method of skilled physicians in performing the operation which is the subject of this suit. Some of the witnesses were asked the hypothetical question whether, if the operation was performed in that manner, it was an ordinarily careful manner of doing it, or was negligent. Upon objection the witnesses were not allowed to answer that question. This was the correct ruling. That was for the jury alone. Witnesses from a profession may be called to testify concerning the teachings of their science, and the customs of their craft, but whether these things amount to due care is for the court or jury to say in a controverted case.

Many of the physicians testifying on behalf of the defendant said that the best of surgeons sometimes left a sponge or some foreign substance in the bodies of their patients in performing similar operations. It is argued from this that, as the highest degree of skill and care are not exempt from the commission of such accidents, a similar lapse by appellant was at least not other than "ordinary care"; but that does not follow. Because all men are at some time careless does not relieve any man from the legal consequences of his careless act; but even that was for the jury to say whether appellant exercised the degree of care in the case which ordinarily prudent and skilled surgeons, who practice in similar localities, usually exercise in such matters.

The evidence was conflicting whether appellant left the sponge in appellee's body, but it was there. Its presence was not otherwise accounted for. He alone placed and removed the sponges that were used in the operation. There was considerable evidence tending to show it was left there by appellant, and that he did not pursue the course which his own witnesses of his profession said was customary and necessary to verify whether all sponges had been removed.

We think a statement of the case disposes of the claim that the damages were excessive.

Judgment affirmed.

WILLIAMS COAL CO. v. JONES.

(Court of Appeals of Kentucky. April 23, 1909.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 289*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—PEREMPTORY INSTRUCTION.

Under the rule that, if the facts shown legitimately establish a no stronger presumption of negligence of defendant causing the injury than of an accident for which defendant would not be responsible, a peremptory instruction should be given, the jury should have been instructed to find for defendant, in an action for injury by the falling down of the brake to an employé riding an empty car to a coal tippie, his complaint being that sufficient help was not furnished, so that on the day in question he had, in addition to his regular duties of riding the empties to the tippie, to ride the loaded cars out from the tippie, requiring him to hurry; he not testifying that he was so hurried as to prevent his inspecting the car before starting to ride it, as was his duty, or that he was acting under an emergency requiring him to dispense with the inspection because of his double duty, and the evidence leaving the mind in equal doubt as to whether plaintiff did or did not inspect, or as to whether the action of the brake was or was not simply an accident incident to the business.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1114, 1115; Dec. Dig. § 289.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§§ 101, 102*)—FURNISHING SAFE APPLIANCES—STATEMENT OF DUTY.

Instead of telling the jury that it was the master's duty to furnish the employé appliances that were reasonably safe, they should have been told it was its duty to use ordinary care to furnish appliances that were reasonably safe; at least where, as in the case of railroad cars, ordinary care will not always furnish an appliance that is reasonably safe.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 173, 174; Dec. Dig. §§ 101, 102.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 201*)—DUTY TO FURNISH APPLIANCES—PLEADING AND EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS.

The gist of an action by an employé for injury not being the furnishing of an unsafe car, but failure to furnish him reasonable assistance and requiring him to do the work in a way that was not reasonably safe, an instruction as to the duty to furnish safe appliances should be omitted, as not following the cause of action pleaded and attempted to be proved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 1186; Dec. Dig. § 291.*]

4. TRIAL (§ 253*)—INSTRUCTIONS—IGNORING EVIDENCE.

The uncontroverted evidence in an action for injury to a servant by defect in a car being that he was paid to inspect the cars, the bracketed words should have been omitted from the instruction that, when a servant enters a master's employ, he assumes the risk ordinarily incident to his employment [but, in the absence of an agreement to do so, he is not bound to inspect machinery with which he works].

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 613; Dec. Dig. § 253.*]

5. TRIAL (§ 252*)—INSTRUCTIONS—CONFORMITY TO EVIDENCE.

The evidence does not warrant the bracketed part of the instruction, in an action for injury to an employé while performing his regular duty of riding empty cars to a coal tippie, in addition to which he was on the day in question required to ride the loaded cars out from the tippie, that if the jury believe from the evidence it was plaintiff's duty to inspect the cars before using them, and he failed to do so, or did it in a negligent manner, he cannot recover [unless the jury believe from the evidence that plaintiff was acting at the time under the direct orders of a superior servant, and was prevented from making an inspection by his orders]; there being no evidence that, when the boss told plaintiff to run both ends that day, he told him not to inspect the cars, or even that plaintiff told the boss that such double duties would leave him no time to inspect the cars, and that the boss then told him to go on for that day and run both ends anyhow.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Ohio County.
"Not to be officially reported."

Action by Frank Jones against the Williams Coal Company. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

H. P. Taylor, for appellant. Ernest Woodward and M. L. Heavrin, for appellee.

HOBSON, J. The Williams Coal Company loads coal on cars furnished by the Illinois Central Railroad Company. It was Frank Jones' duty to run the empty cars down to the tippie. Ordinarily, when they were loaded at the tippie, it was the duty of one Jackson to run them down from the tippie. The track was constructed upon an incline, so that the cars would move by their own weight when started, and could be checked by the person on them when they reached the proper place. About July 7, 1908, Jackson went away with the superintendent of the mines, fishing, and the boss ordered Jones to ride the cars both ways; that is, to ride the empties down to the tippie and to ride the loaded cars out from the tippie, telling him that he would furnish a man named Baker to help, but Baker could not handle the cars by himself. While Jones was taking an empty down to the tippie that day, a brake shoe dropped down, and was wedged in between the tracks. A man who was standing not far off saw the car stop, and, seeing nothing of Jones, went over to it. He found him lying in the bottom of the car insensible. His jawbone was broken and his teeth were knocked loose. His brake stick was in the brake wheel, and the proof was to the effect that, when the shoe dropped down, the brake would unwind, causing the wheel to revolve, and that, as the wheel revolved, it would bring the stick in contact with Jones' head, if he was standing on the car as indicated by the position of his feet at the time he was found; that is, the hanging of the shoe would cause the brake wheel to turn rapidly in the other direction from that in which Jones was turning it, and would cause the brake stick to strike him. Jones testified that the last thing he remembered he was on the hill or top of the incline, that he got down and fixed the chain and got back on the car, and that is the last he could recollect until the next morning. He brought this suit to recover for his injuries on the ground that he was doing at the time the work of two men; that it was necessary to have another man to assist him; that he was required by the bank boss to do the work by himself; that he informed the boss that the work could not be done properly by one man, but the boss answered that one man was sufficient to do it, and he, relying on this assurance, attempted to proceed with it, and, while so engaged, received the injuries complained of by reason of the fact that he had not proper assistance.

There is no proof at all that he informed the boss that the work could not properly be done by one man, or that the boss assured him that one man was sufficient to do the work, or that he received any assurance from the boss as to his safety in doing the work. The fact is the proof shows conclusively that, when Jackson was there, he simply rode the loaded cars out from the tippie to the lower end of the side track. Jones brought in the empties from the upper end of the side track to the tippie by himself. He had been working there two years, and this was the usual course of business. The absence of Jackson, Jones testifies, made it necessary for him to take out the loaded cars from the tippie, and this gave him less time to attend to his usual duties of bringing in the empties from the upper end of the track. He says he had to be in a hurry all day to keep the cars at the tippie so that the coal could be loaded upon them. It is insisted for him that, owing to the fact that he had to take out the loaded cars that day, he had less time to inspect the empties and to bring them down to the tippie than he otherwise would have had, and but for this he would not have been injured. The proof is conclusive that the inspection of the cars was to be performed by Jones. He was paid 40 cents extra to inspect empty cars. No other servant was required to make an inspection of the empties except him. He testifies that he always inspected the cars, that he cannot say whether he inspected this particular car or not, but he supposes he inspected it, as he made it a rule to inspect the cars. He does not show that he did not inspect the car, or that he failed to inspect it because he had not time to do so. He does not show that the boss told him not to inspect the cars, or relieved him of his duty. There is nothing in the proof to show that he was prevented from making an inspection by reason of the absence of Jackson, and it is not shown that by any inspection which he could have made the dropping down of the brake shoe could have been averted. In other words, the whole cause of the accident is unexplained, and it would seem from the proof to have been merely one of the accidents incidental to the movement of railroad cars. The rule is that the plaintiff must show negligence on the part of the defendant, and that this negligence caused his injury. If the facts shown legitimately establish a no stronger presumption of negligence on the part of the defendant causing the injury than of an accident for which the defendant would not be responsible, a peremptory instruction should be given. Under this rule, we conclude that the circuit court should have instructed the jury peremptorily to find for the defendant. While the plaintiff does testify that he had to be in a hurry all that day because he had to run both ends, as Jackson was away, he does not testify that he was so hurried as to prevent him from inspecting the car before starting down the hill with it. He does not testify that he was acting at the time under any emergency requiring him to dispense with the inspection of the cars by reason of the double duty the defendant had imposed on him. The evidence leaves the mind in equal doubt as to whether the plaintiff inspected or did not inspect the car, or as to whether the falling down of the brake was or was not simply an accident incidental to the business.

In instruction No. 1 the court should not have told the jury that it was the duty of the defendant to furnish Jones appliances that were reasonably safe; but he should have told them that it was its duty to use ordinary care to furnish appliances that
